V. 5, 6. "The daughters of Jerusalem" may here mean such persons as associate with believers, and favour the cause of the gospel, but are not yet established or experienced in the faith: though some consider them as part of the professed church of Israel; and others as 'foreign congregations,' which is not at all probable. (Marg. Ref. p.)—The spouse, however, aims to prevent them from being stumbled by what they witnessed of her circumstances or appearance. In some respects, she was blackish, as the weatherbeaten tents of the Arabian shepherds; but in others, she was comely as the magnificent curtains in the palaces of Solomon. The original word for "black" signifies dark as the early dawn. The believer is indeed black by nature; but he is comely, as renewed in part by grace, to the holy image of God; still, however, he is deformed with great remains of sin; but comely, as "accepted in the Beloved," "and made the righteousness of God in him." He is contemptible and base in the esteem of men, but honourable and excellent in the judgment of God. He is often poor, unlearned, of mean abilities, and employed in low occupations, for which men despise him: but he is "a king and a priest unto God," walks with him, and is his child and the heir of his eternal glory.—The visible church also is deformed by a large intermixture of hypocrites; and by manifold scandals, heresies, divisions, and controversies, which prevail in almost in every part of it; yet the invisible church, which consists of the remnant of true believers, forms "a holy nation, a peculiar people," "zealous of good works." (Notes, Tit. 2:14. 1 Pet. 2:8, 9.)—These things may here be implied; but it is more immediately meant, that the afflictions of believers, and the persecutions of the church, render them base in man's esteem, but comely in the eyes of the Lord. (Marg. Ref. n, o, q. 6:4-10. Ps. 45:9-11. Is. 53:2, 3. Luke 15:22-24. 1 Cor. 4:9-13.) The spouse therefore advises the daughters of Jerusalem, not to look at her, either to disdain her on account of her infirmities or external meanness and distresses, or to take any prejudice against religion on that account. If they saw her black it was because "the sun had looked upon her;" that is, she had endured temptation and persecution for her relation to Christ. (Marg. Ref. r, s. Matt. 13:3-8, v. 6. 20:21. Rev. 7:13-17, v. 16.) Men, brethren to her by nature, or hypocritical professors, brethren in name, were enraged at her, because of the favour shown her, and her attachment to her Beloved; and they had compelled her to endure the greatest hardships, and do the most unsuitable drudgery; and this, among other painful effects, had proved a temptation to her, to neglect, in some measure, her own duty, and the care of her soul, and thus had conducted in every way to mar her comeliness. (Marg. Ref. t. Notes, Mic. 7:5-7, v. 6. Matt. 10:34-36. Luke 12:49-53. 2 Cor. 4:8-12. Gal. 4:21-31, v. 29.)—It would have been very strange, for king Solomon to introduce his favourite queen, speaking in this manner to her attendants. It has indeed been imagined, that Pharaoh's daughter, having early embraced the true religion, was persecuted by her brothers, and driven to the south of Egypt; where by keeping the vineyards, she acquired a tawny colour, so that she neglected her own vineyard, that is, her beauty or her fortune; and that Solomon, hearing of her piety and sufferings, sent for her and married her. A lively invention may easily thus make history or write novels: but the Scripture is silent. The whole is highly improbable. "Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh, and took Pharaoh's daughter." 1 Kings 3:1. This looks more like a political transaction between Pharaoh and Solomon, than such a marriage of vehemence and disinterested affection, as the supposition implies. (Note, 2.)

V. 7. The spouse next addresses herself to Christ, as desirous of distinguishing between his holy rest and consolations, and the false peace and confidence of hypocrites. She requests to be instructed in what places he used to feed his flock, and to shelter them from the noonday sun of persecution or temptation, that she might seek the same holy refuge; and not be tempted, or even appear inclined, to join those companies who followed corrupt teachers and held erroneous tenets; who indeed professed to be the "companions," or friends of Christ, but were rather his rivals, and set up an interest in opposition to him: "Weary of wandering uncertainly after those who pretend to thy Spirit, but mislead such as are guided by them." Bp. Patrick.—"Whom thou hast called to the dignity of thy pastors, and they set forth their own dreams instead of thy doctrine." (*Marg. and Marg. Ref. y, z. Notes, Ps. 23:1-3. Is. 40:9-11. Mic. 6:3, 4. V. 8. It is evidently absurd, to suppose this verse to be the language of the attendant virgins, or unestablished converts; for how should they be able to instruct the spouse in her perplexity, and even to answer the request which she had addressed to her Beloved. No doubt the Bridegroom is here introduced, as counselling his faithful spouse, with an encouraging commendation of her spiritual beauty, as compared with the rest of Adam's fallen race. (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, 15. 4:1-7, 10. 6:4-10. Ps. 45:9-15. Eph. 5:22-27, v. 26, 27.) If she were at a loss, and feared lest she should mistake some company of hypocrites or heretics for his chosen people; she could not do better, than to consider the examples of the most approved believers in the successive ages of the church, as recorded in the word of God, with the doctrines which they maintained; to follow their steps, without regarding those who pretended to new discoveries, and taught opinions, either unknown in other ages, or condemned as heresy; to mark such pastors, as simply kept the beaten track, the good old way; to attend on their ministry, with her children, or young converts; and to instruct such as were put under her care according to their example. (Marg. Ref. b, c. Notes, Prov. 8:34. Jer. 6:16, 17, v. 16. Heb. 11:12, 13, 17, 8.) The literal meaning of this, as applied to Pharaoh's daughter, is not especially stated by those who adhere to that mode of interpretation.

V. 9. Egypt was noted for beautiful and swift horses: those of Pharaoh's chariots would doubtless be the most excellent of the kind; and in their magnificent trappings would appear to the greatest advantage. This allusion therefore may mean, that, in the judgment of Christ, believers are the excellent of the earth; and that the harmony, which subsists among them, renders them peculiarly pleasant to him, and fitted to be the instruments of promoting his glory. (Marg. Ref. See on Note, 8.) The simile, as applied to a beautiful female, though an instance or two not

V. 10. The spiritual gifts and graces, which Christ bestows upon his church and every true believer, and which render their professed faith, and their conversation among men, ornamental and becoming, seem to be here described by the external ornaments then in use: and not without reference to the ornaments used in the harnesses of horses, especially in the royal chariots. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 9. 4:9. Ps. 45:13—15. Prov. 1:9. 1 Tim. 2:8—10. 1 Pet. 3:1—4.)

V. 11. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 149:4. Ez. 16:9—14. Eph. 5:22—27, v. 26,27. Rev. 19:7,8. 21:1—4.) This verse is generally supposed to be the reply of the attendant virgins, who thus engaged to prepare for the spouse the ornaments with which she was about to be decorated: but, as the increase and perfection of the church's spiritual adorning is the gift and work of God; it may be doubted, whether this language should not be considered, in respect of the new creation, as in some respects similar to the remarkable words of the Creator, when about to form our first parents. (Notes, Gen. 1:26,27. Ec. 12:1.)

V. 12—14. The spouse here again speaks. "Whilst the King sitteth at his table," (or meets his people in those ordinances, in which they feast with him,) her spikenard, or precious ointment, sendeth forth its smell; that is, the grace, received from his fulness, springs forth into lively exercises of faith, love, gratitude, and adoration, which are pleasant and honourable to him. (Marg. Ref. k. Notes, 4:16. Matt. 26:26—29. John 13:—17. Rev. 3:20—22, v. 20.) Yet Christ himself, and not his gifts, are most precious to her; and she resolves to lodge him near or in, her heart, (as a bundle of myrrh or other fragrant gums are laid in the bosom,) "all the night," or during the darkness and troubles of life. For Christ was to her far more precious and delightful, than the most valued productions of the field, or vineyard.—The most precious nard cometh from the spikes of a very small contemptible shrub; which may be considered as an emblem of the sweet odour of the gospel, which with such mean and despicable persons, as the apostles were in themselves, filled the whole world. Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref. l. Matt. 26:6—13. Mark 14:3—9, v. 3. John 12:1—8. Phil. 4:14—20, v. 18.)—It is not certainly known what the word rendered camphire signifies; but it seems to have been some very costly perfume; and perfumes have always been immensely more in request in those eastern regions, than they are at present in this country. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. m—p.)—The original word, however, signifies also an atonement; and some Jewish writers have rendered the clause, 'the man who propitiates all things,' with apparent reference to the Messiah.—The King. (12) Marg. Ref. i. See on Note, 4.

V. 15. Here Christ again speaks, commending his beloved, as fair; especially, as having eyes like the dove, which are gentle, loving, and pure. This may imply her spiritual discernment and watchfulness, the purity and simplicity of her affection for him, and her mild and harmless conduct in the world. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. See on Note, 8: Note, 4:1—5, v. 1.)—My love. "My companion." Marg. Note, Mal. 2:13—16, v. 14.

V. 16, 17. Here the spouse answers, professing her admiring love and gratitude to the Saviour, and her delight in her union with him. By her bed, or carpet, being "green," may be meant the efficacy of his ordinances, to render believers flourishing in holiness, and to convert sinners: and the beams of cedar and rafters of fir, may mean the stability of the new covenant, and the incorruptible nature of those mansions, in which believers will dwell with their Beloved for ever.—The eastern nations generally sleep on carpets, and recline at meals on couches covered with them. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. See on Note, 7. Notes, 8:8,9. Ps. 45:2. 110:3. John 14:2,3. 17:20—24. Eph. 2:19—22. 1 Pet. 2:4—6. Rev. 3:20—22, v. 20.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—6. Those things, which are most intimately connected with the person and love of the divine Saviour, have supereminent excellency; for communion with him in faith and love, is as the marrow of religion. Those who have "tasted that he is gracious," long for renewed pledges of his kindness; and the more they experience of his peace and joy, the more fervent will be their desires. This sweet experience of his grace gradually weans them from other objects, and disposes them to renounce all for his sake, and at his command.—The pleasures, which arise from the most exquisite gratifications of every sense, convey to the mind a very faint and inadequate idea of that delight, with which the believer, in some favoured moments, contemplates the Redeemer's excellences, and his "love which passeth knowledge." This renders the preaching of the gospel, the written word, prayer, praise, meditation, and Christian conversation, so agreeable to him: then the name of Christ becomes "as ointment poured forth;" and the more the subject is discussed, the more glorious and lovely he appears. These are "joys with which a stranger intermeddled not;" but every holy creature in heaven and earth loves the incarnate Saviour, in proportion to his love of the Father, and of his righteous law and holy service; and the further we are removed from all inordinate love of created objects, the more precious will Christ be to our hearts. (Note, 1 Pet. 2:7,8.) But the more clearly we discern his glory, the more deeply sensible shall we be of our inability to love and follow him in a suitable manner; and at the same time we shall become the more desirous of doing it; thus experiencing "that we cannot do the things that we would," our prayers for the effectual drawings and aids of his grace will become more fervent and frequent; and we shall not only desire to run after him ourselves, but to animate others to do the same. Every sweet season of near communion with Christ will endear him more to our souls, and increase our joy and gladness in his favour and worship: we shall recollect with regret the comforts, which we do not at present possess, and long and wait for their renewal, far more than sensualists do for the return of their unsatisfying joys. Our honourable thoughts of Christ will always be productive of lowly thoughts of ourselves, so that nothing will appear estimable or amiable in us, except as interested in his righteousness, and partakers of his holiness; and these we shall deem a comeliness preferable to all the external glory which surrounded king Solomon.—It is indeed lamentable that so many things should be visibly defective in the church; as they harden some in prejudices, and are stumbling-blocks to others. Yet "it must needs be that offences come!" but wo be to them by whom they come!" (Note, Matt. 18:7—9.) We should therefore endeavour so to explain these subjects, as to prevent the effects of undeniable blemishes; and caution inquirers not to look on us, to form their judgment of Christianity, but on the example, precepts, and truths of Jesus, where they may view it uncorrupted. All that supposed deformity of the church, however, which results from want of wealth, learning, or secular power, or from her afflicted and persecuted condition, is in fact her "glory and beauty;" nay, the Saviour himself has "no form or comeliness" to the carnal mind, that it "should desire him."—But it seldom happens, that we are much tempted or persecuted, without in some measure deviating from our duty, and intermeddling with disputes or employments, not properly belonging to us: thus Satan prevails with us keep other men's vineyards, and to neglect our own. And how dreadful is it, when those who should be labourers in the Lord's vineyard, are so taken up with worldly employments, as to neglect the care of their own souls, as well as the souls of those committed to them! Indeed even such ministers are busy in their proper work, should be very watchful over themselves; or their own vineyard will perhaps be worse tended than those of their congregations. (Notes, 1 Tim. 4: 11—16. 6:11,12. 2 Tim. 2:20—22. Tit. 2:7,8.)

V. 7—17. If the Lord Jesus be indeed "our Beloved," we shall be greatly afraid of being drawn aside and imposed upon, and have constant need to beseech him, as "the great" and "good Shepherd," to guide us into his fruitful pastures and pleasant resting-places: nay, we shall fear even seeming to belong to those false teachers, who beguile unstable souls, and draw away disciples after them; who pretend to be the friends, but in truth are the rivals of the Bridegroom. (Note, John 3:27—36, v. 29.) If we seek his direction in order to follow it, he will express his approbation, and preserve us from delusion; he will guide us in the path, which is beaten with the footsteps of his flock in every age; and satisfy us, that we are "followers of them, who through faith and patience inherit the promises." (Note, Heb. 6:11,12.) he will show such as humbly ask him, who are those pastors, that he employs to feed his sheep and lambs: and he will teach them to attend on their instruction, and to bring their families to partake of it also; and to assist their weaker brethren in forming their judgment in these important matters.—The more humble and diffident of ourselves we are, the better will the Lord approve of us: he delights in the graces which he confers, and applauds the good which he enables us to do: he will perfect his own good work where it is truly begun: and continually add to the spiritual adorning of those, whom he is "beautifying with salvation." Communion with Christ transforms us into his image, the lively exercise of spiritual affections has a fragrantcy of the same kind, with "the savour of his good ointments poured forth." But he himself is every thing to zealous and fruitful Christians: they desire, that "Christ may dwell in their hearts by faith" and love, and prepare them for himself by renewing them fully to his own likeness. The increase of this disposition renders them more and more the objects of his delight: and he especially approves of the meekness, purity, and holy love, which they derive from the dove-like Spirit of God. Thus the sacred flame is fanned and fed; and the soul having daily "fellowship with the Father and the Son," by the Spirit, grows in holiness, and enjoys "a lively hope of an incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading inheritance" in the blessed world above. O Lord, visit our souls more and more with this salvation!

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 1, 2. It is most obvious to suppose that the Bridegroom here speaks, and declares his own preciousness and condescending love. The rose is considered as the chief of flowers; and it is probable that Sharon was eminent for roses of beautiful hue, and peculiar fragrance. Thus Christ, in his person, character, and mediation, combines every excellency in the highest degree; and is most delightful and refreshing to the souls of his people.—The lily, which adorns the lowly valleys, is an apt emblem of his humiliation in assuming our nature, and his lowliness of heart; of his dwelling and communing with the "poor of this world," and "the poor in spirit," in this vale of sin and sorrow; and likewise of his spotless purity. His church too is "as the lily among the thorns." * They that believe in Christ partake of his excellences. Bp. Patrick.—They cannot resemble him in his majesty or mediatorial excellency; but they do, in a measure, as to his lowliness and purity. Yet in this world they are like a lily surrounded, crowded, and wounded, by worthless thorns; an emblem of the character of the wicked, of the injuries which they do to believers, and of their fitness for the fire of destruction.—Christ describes his church under the emblem of a beautiful woman, whom he has espoused, and she describes him as one of the Sons of men; and the rest of mankind are called "the daughters" and "the sons;" being indeed originally of the same family: but bearing a very different character, and having formed a contrary alliance. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 85:10-13. Is. 35:1-2. 55:12,13. 57:15,16. Zech. 9:17. Matt. 10:16-18. Rom. 8:28-31. P. O. Rev. 5:1-7.)

V. 3. The Spouse here speaks. The apple-tree, (or citron-tree, as some suppose,) is not so stately as the cedar or the fir-tree, but its fruit is peculiarly valuable.—Christ appeared on earth in exterior meanness, but that covered over the most transcendent preciousness and glory; and the fruits of his abasement and sufferings endear him to every believer, immensely above all the most admired characters in the world.—A traveller, scorched by the noonday sun, would gladly shelter himself under the branches of a spreading apple-tree, or citron-tree, and refresh himself with its fruit. Thus the believer remembers many seasons, when remorse of conscience, and fear of deserved wrath, with the temptations of Satan, and the injuries of the world, dismayed or distressed him, and left him without any conceivable refuge, except that revealed in Christ Jesus. To this he fled with earnest desires, and under it he sat down, or sheltered himself; while the pardon and peace, which it afforded him, were delightful to his heart: and the consolations of the Spirit of adoption, as fruits from this Tree of life, were "sweet to his taste," in proportion to his former terror, humiliation, and affliction, and to the degree in which he was weaned from earthly objects. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 5:10-16. 8:5. Ps. 87:4-9. P. O. Notes, Is. 4:2. 32:12. 53:2. John 1:10-14. Rev. 22:5-9.)—Some explain this of the true God, as pre-eminent above all the idols of the heathen; and of the comforts of true religion: but it is only in Christ that the true God is the Refuge and Comforter of sinners; and the simile is far more apposite, if applied to the Lord Jesus, in whom the carnal eye "sees no form or comeliness," but faith discerns every thing glorious and precious.

V. 4. The image is here varied. Christ is "the Author and Finisher of our faith," as well as the Ransom for our sins. He brings the soul to seek and enjoy the comforts that are communicated through his ordinances, which are as a "banqueting house" where his saints feast with him. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. h. See on Note, 1:4.)—When the standard is erected, and the banner displayed, the soldiers resort to it, and by keeping near it perform their duty to their leader, and best consult their own safety. "The love of Christ," manifested in his humiliation unto death, is the banner which he displays by his word. To this the believer resorts, and by it is directed and encouraged; and thus he obtains the benefits of salvation, is animated to resist every enemy, and finds effectual protection. (Marg. Ref. i. Notes, 6:4. Ps. 60:4. Is. 11:10. Rom. 5:6-10. 8:28-39. 2 Cor. 5:13-15. 1 John 4:19.)

V. 5. The spouse, being overcome with love, cries out for refreshments and supports; for cordials, perfumes, or cooling fruits. "Stay me with those flagons, comfort me with those apples," or citrons; namely, the flagons in the banqueting house, and the fruit of the tree before mentioned.—The love of believers for the unseen Saviour can never be satisfied by any thing short of the fruition of him in heaven: this renders the world an uneasy place to them; and when grace is in lively exercise, they become even faint and sick through love to him; "desiring to depart, and to be with Christ, which is far better." But their hunger and thirst are "stayed" with foretastes of that felicity, in the fulfilment of the promises, which are as flagons full of rich wine, as apples or citrons from "the Tree of life;" and nothing but these cordials and provisions can allay their spiritual appetite; for these therefore they most earnestly seek and pray. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 5:8. Ps. 4:6-8. 63:1-4. 84:1,2. 119:81-83,131. Phil. 1:21-26.)—[Flagons.] אֶמְשֵׁתִי: 2 Sam. 6:19. 1 Chr. 16:3. Hos. 3:1. Heb.

V. 6. 'This is a representation of the tenderest affection of a husband for his wife, when he sees her in danger to faint; and, being applied to Christ and his church, sets forth his readiness to succour us in all our needs, by the power of his spirit.' Bp. Patrick.—Christ, though absent as to sight and full fruition, is present to the faith of his people; and the spouse here thankfully acknowledges, that he graciously comforted her, when ready to faint with earnest longings after him, or when under troubles and temptations. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 7. According to our translation, these are the words of the spouse, concerning her Beloved, who "rested in his love" as one asleep, while employed in supporting and comforting her. In this sense the verse implies, that she, afraid of terminating his gracious visit by any disturbance, charges the daughters of Jerusalem not to awake him.—We grieve the Spirit of God by wrong tempers; and others may ruffle and discompose us by their unseasonable intervention. The comforts of communion with God are but shortlived on earth; but care is required not to terminate them prematurely; and every thing should be avoided, which molests devotion, or damps the exercise of faith and love.—But many suppose that the verse is the language of Christ concerning the spouse; and the original certainly favours this interpretation.—¹ Christ chargeth them, which have to do in the church, as it were by a solemn oath, that they trouble not the quietness thereof.—The roses and hinds of the field are gentle and pleasant creatures, but exceedingly timorous; and so are introduced as witnesses to the charge here given; which is indeed a solemn adjuration, not by them, but as in their presence. (Gen. 21:30,31. Marg. and Marg. Ref. Note, 8:9.)

V. 8, 9. The Spouse here again speaks.—Her Beloved had withdrawn; but with rapture she again hears his voice, and perceives the token of his return, "leaping upon," or over "the mountains, skipping upon the hills." This may apply to the ancient believers' expectation of the promised Saviour coming in the flesh: they heard his voice by the prophets, and every age gave fuller intimations of his approach. Though he seemed to delay, yet he was coming with speed and alacrity: nor could any obstructions prevent or retard his approach; but he would surmount them, as the hart does the mountains and hills. In this sense, "the wall" behind which he stood, "the windows" through which "he looked," and "the lattice" through which he showed some glimpses of his glory, represent the types and ceremonies of the law, and the prophecies especially relating to that event: these in part revealed him, yet so that he was concealed from unbelievers; and but dimly seen by believers; yet his eyes were upon them, and they became in some degree acquainted with him. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. x. Notes, 8:13, 14. Matt. 13:16, 17. 2 Cor. 3:12-16. Heb. 11:39, 40. 1 Pet. 1:10-12.) It is equally applicable to his coming at death to receive the believer's soul to glory, and at judgment to complete our salvation: and in this sense, the same expressions represent our communion with him by faith, and through his word and ordinances; and the partial and transient views, which we have of his glory, compared with those of the saints in light. It may also be explained of his spiritual visits to his people, who are mourning for his absence, and for their sins which occasioned it; and in this sense, the latter verse means, that Christ is near to watch over his people, and to give them some tokens of his favour, when they have not the full "joy of his salvation." (Notes, 16:17. John 14:21-24.)

V. 10-13. This most poetical description of the approach of spring, in which the spouse speaks of Christ, as inviting her to walk abroad with him, may be variously applied. It may have some reference to the abrogation of the more dark and discouraging dispensation of Moses, for that of Christ: but it seems also to mean the sinner's conversion. Christ invites the new convert, by the discoveries of his love, to arise from sloth and despondency, and to leave sin and worldly vanities, for the sake of holy and joyful communion with him.—The winter, that is now past, may either mean the years spent in ignorance and sin, unfruitful and uncomfortable; or the gloomy season, attended with storms and tempests, which followed his conviction of guilt and danger, and preceded his peace and joy in believing. "The flowers" may denote the opening blossoms of holy affections and desires; "the time of the singing of birds" may mean his first grateful songs of praise; "the voice of the turtle," then first heard in the land, may signify the first comforts of the witnessing, sealing Spirit of God; "the green figs, and tender grapes," or buds, which are pleasant to the smell, represent the first immature fruits of righteousness, which promise a future valuable increase; and all these encouraging tokens and evidences of divine favour, are employed as motives to the soul, to follow Christ more entirely. The passage may also be accommodated to the believer's renewed comforts, after a season of temptation and discouragement; to the renewed peace of the church, after sore persecutions; and to the completion of the happiness of all true believers in heaven. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 8:9. 4:7, 8. 6:2. 7:10-13. Gen. 12:1-3. Ps. 45:9-11. Is. 55:1-3, 6, 7. 2 Cor. 5:18-21. 6:1, 2, 14-18. vv. 17, 18. Rev. 22:16, 17.)

V. 14. Christ is still the speaker. The spouse, conscious of her unworthiness, and ashamed of her former sins, her remaining depravity, and the imperfection of her present services, had hidden herself "in the clefts of the rock," or in some retired place, as declining his gracious invitation. 'Thou that art ashamed of thy sins, come and show thyself unto me.' In this is represented a mixture of humility and unbelief, common in the experience of true but unestablished believers. Yet Christ speaks to her as his dove, gentle, harmless, loving, and faithful; and urgently invites her to come forth: for he took great delight in her, as a true penitent; he deemed her countenance comely, and was well pleased to behold it; and her voice sweet, and delighted to hear it, when employed in confession, prayer, and grateful praise.—Some, however, understand the verse, of the church, or believers, fleeing from persecution, into the most retired places: (as the dove flees into the recesses of the rock from the birds of prey;) yet there encouraged to present her worship, as assured of the tender affection and gracious acceptance of her beloved, though despised and hated by the world.—The faithful and loving dove is an apt emblem of the true church, as espoused to Christ; and by her conformity to him, through the sanctification of the Spirit, she is well pleasing in his sight (Marg. Ref. See on Note, 1:8. Notes, 5:2. 6:8, 9. Ez. 33:20-23. Prov. 15:8, 9. Dan. 9:18-23. Acts 9:10-14, v. 11. 1 Pet. 3:8-12.)

V. 15. The new convert had before been represented as a vine with tender grapes: (13) and the foxes, it seems, used to injure the vines, and destroy the grapes by trampling on them. 'Foxes ... are observed by abundance of authors, to love grapes, and to make great devastations in vineyards. Inasmuch that Aristophanes ... compares soldiers to foxes, spoiling whole countries, as they do vineyards. ... I require all those that act by authority from me, and to whom I have committed the care of my church, to use their early diligence to discover and confute the sophistry of deceivers, who craftily insinuate their false doctrines into weak and incautious souls, and thereby seduce those who are newly converted, and but infirm in the faith.' Bp. Patrick.—False prophets are, by Ezekiel, compared to foxes; and, in many particulars, false teachers and heretics resemble this artful creature. (Note, Ez. 13:1-4, v. 4.) Yet the inroads which they make on the church, and the destruction which they occasion, seem too formidable to be described by young foxes; and those who consider the verse as exclusively a command of Christ to his servants, to oppose heretics, appear reduced to some difficulty to exclude the idea of persecution.—Perhaps, in general, it is a caution against every thing, however plausible, or considered as a small matter, which tends to hinder the prosperity of the church and the fruitfulness of believers, and against heresy in particular. Whatever wastes time, squanders money, or engrosses a large share of attention, and tends to the neglect of the means of grace, is of this kind: and even when the pursuit, or study (such as of music, painting, and various other things of the same nature,) is not directly criminal in itself; it spoils the vine, and mars its tender grapes, with the unsuspected subtlety of the fox. The first rising of sinful thoughts and desires, and the beginnings of those trifling pursuits, are like "the little foxes," which, if not taken, will spoil the vines. Trifling visits, which waste much time, incur expense, put the mind out of frame for devotion, and intrude on the hours that should be employed in meditation, self-examination, searching the Scripture, and secret prayer, are peculiarly injurious in this respect: and no good can arise from such unnecessary intercourse with worldly people; or with superficial professors of the gospel, whose company is still more prejudicial. Specious deviations from the truth, which make a little allowance for the pride, avarice, vanity, or indolence of our hearts, and admit of some measure of conformity to the world, and to the discourse of those who are ever asking, What harm is there in this, or in that? or, What need of this or that measure of diligence? are little foxes, which spoil the vines: and which must be taken and removed out of the way, by private Christians and public teachers, who desire to be, or to see their people fruitful branches of the living Vine. Even lawful and needful pursuits and recreations, when attended with excess or in expediency, "choke the word and it becometh unfruitful;" "for our vines have tender grapes." (Notes, Rom. 15:17-20. 2 Thes. 3:10-15. 2 Tim. 2:14-18. 2 Pet. 2:1-3.)—This caution, (whether of the Bridegroom, or the attendants,) must be allowed to come in very abruptly if our attention be fixed on the external arrangement of a dramatic dialogue.

V. 16, 17. The spouse here again speaks, as one assured that Christ and all his blessings are become her's by faith; of which her love to him, and her unreserved surrender of herself to be his, devoted to his service, in body and soul, formed the sure evidence: and she rejoices in experiencing that he takes pleasure in visiting and communing with his people, who resemble him in lowliness and purity, and in feeding them in the green pastures of his ordinances; and she prays that he will continue to favour her with those visits, "till the day break, and the shadows flee away." This may refer to the shadows of the Mosaic dispensation, which were dispelled by the breaking of the gospel day, and the rising of "the Sun of Righteousness;" or to the darkness and shadows of our state on earth, which will shortly be changed for heavenly light and substantial felicity. The word Bether signifies Division; (marg.) and may intimate the removal of every thing, which now divides our souls from Christ, or excludes us from the beatific division. (*Marg. Ref. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. The most distinct, and apparently opposite excellences, centre in our divine Redeemer; and he appears as glorious in his deepest abasement and sufferings for us, and in his condescending communion with us, as in his essential majesty and holiness. His people also are excellent, in proportion as they are conformed to him: and the small degree in which the meanest believer on earth resembles Christ, renders him more honourable and amiable than the most accomplished unbeliever; even as the lily is preferable to the prickly thorn. We should, however, remember among whom we dwell, expect to be injured by them, and endeavour to suffer with meekness.—The believer, as his judgment matures, will admire the whole and every part of the Redeemer's character; but he is commonly first attracted by perceiving the suitableness and preciousness of the fruits of his mediation. None of those eminent persons, whose characters and exploits are celebrated by historians, orators, and poets, can pretend to heal a wounded conscience, or a broken heart; or to deliver a trembling sinner from the wrath of God and the power of Satan. They may be stately as the cedars of Lebanon; but the lowly Jesus, whose merits and grace bring relief in the hour of deep distress, is unspeakably more lovely in the eyes, and precious to the heart, of the true Christian. Every time that he finds deliverance from guilt, fear, temptation, and distress, by faith in his name; and every experience of the sweetness of "peace and joy in believing," and of the hope and comfort which the Spirit of adoption communicates, increases his love to the Author of his eternal salvation.—Let us then come and "sit down under his shadow," and abide there: we shall find great delight in so doing, and "his fruit will be sweet to our taste;" for none despise these joys but those who never experienced them, and who have no desire after them, through their eager pursuit of the vanities of the world. The Lord Jesus has prepared the feast, by the sacrifice of his death upon the cross; (Note, Is. 25:6-8.) and his ordinances are appointed, that we may in them partake of it: and the same love which allures us to him, and protects us in communing with him, animates us to venture and suffer for his sake; and with that banner before our eyes, or over our heads, we shall valiantly encounter and surely overcome all our enemies. In proportion as we relish heavenly consolations our longings after them will increase; and earth would become intolerable to us, were we not stayed with those cordials and first-fruits of glory until our course be finished. These we should earnestly seek for ourselves and for each other, that we may not faint through the troubles of our way. Even when our consolations do not abound, we have cause to acknowledge, that we have many gracious supports and unmerited mercies from the Lord's presence with us. Nor should we expect uninterrupted comfort on earth; for the Lord will, when he pleases, leave us to feel how miserable and helpless we should be without him: but it becomes us to be careful not to bring this trial on ourselves, by sins and negligences, or to occasion it to others; for, as a small noise will drive away the timorous hart, so a little misconduct will "grieve the Holy Spirit of God," and interrupt our spiritual consolations. We may therefore rather wonder that we have so many precious pledges of divine love, than that we so often mourn and are disconsolate, when we reflect on our own want of watchfulness and circumspection.

V. 8-17. If the Christian so longs for the Lord's manifested presence and love, and receives every intimation of it with such exultation; and if ancient believers so rejoiced in the prospect of his appearance on earth in our nature; how should we anticipate the complete salvation, which will come to our souls at the hour of death, and to our bodies also at the glorious resurrection! For these purposes our Redeemer me: to whom I said, "Saw ye him whom my soul loveth?"

4 If was but a little that I passed from them, but I found him whom my soul loveth: I held him, and would not let him go, until I had brought him into my mother's house, and into the chamber of her that conceived me.

5 I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the rees, and by the hinds of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love till he please.

will come quickly, and we shall soon be with him, and "see him as he is, and be like him," and share his glory. In the mean time our mortal flesh, as a wall, intercepts our view of him: but his eye is upon us; and every glimpse which we have of him by faith, is intended to render us willing "to be absent from the body, that we may be present with the Lord." If we have experienced the blessed change which takes place in conversion; if we have obeyed the call of Christ, to arise and follow him, and to leave the world and sin behind, that we may enjoy his love; if we have thus found peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost; and if the blossoms and fruits, (though but tender and green,) of true holiness appear in our lives: we need not fear to follow him through any trials and temptations; nor have we any cause to dread his last call by death, to arise, and come away to the full fruition of his love. Even the unripe fruits of holiness are pleasant unto him, whose grace has produced them: and when we are humble, and ashamed of our services, he will approve and commend them. But we should not allow unbelief to tarnish our self-abasement: our Lord accounts that countenance comely which is furrowed with tears of godly sorrow, and those prayers sweet which are the language of a broken heart: and the contrite and penitent are always welcome guests at his table, and supplicants at his throne of grace, and should not decline his gracious invitations. Whilst we live here, our desire should be to bring forth plenteously the fruits of righteousness: and careful observers will perceive that the little despised foxes do more harm to the branches of the living vine than the dreaded wild boars. Plausible errors, trivial omissions, compliances, and indulgences, are more general hinderances to our progress and usefulness, than gross transgressions, or distressing temptations: and Satan and his emissaries do us more harm, as subtle, unsuspected deceivers, than as furious persecutors. (Notes, Acts 20:29-31. 2 Cor. 11:13-15.) We should then watch against the first occasions and feeble beginnings of evil, and suppress the first risings of sinful inclinations; destroying "the little foxes," before they become capable of important mischief. This circumspect conduct conduces greatly to our full assurance of hope: and when it becomes evident that we love Christ and are his willing people, we may be sure that he is our loving Saviour. (Note, 5:9-16.) He will also delight in us, as the lilies that he has planted; and we shall be solaced with his gracious visits, and wait in humble patient hope, till these earthly shadows flee away, and he come swiftly over every separating mountain to take us home unto himself.

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1-5. The circumstances of this narration, (and of one in some respects similar in the fifth chapter,) are so improbable, if applied, in the literal meaning, to the newly espoused queen of king Solomon; that to avoid the difficulty, and to maintain the consistency of a dramatic poem on occasion of Solomon's marriage, it has been considered merely as a dream of the spouse. But the narrative gives not the least intimation of this.—Some interpreters suppose, that the spouse seeking her Beloved, "by night, on her bed," denotes a season of darkness and drowsiness, of dim apprehensions, languid affections, and heartless services. Others accommodate it to a season of affliction. "The church, by night, that is, in troubles, seeketh to Christ, but is not incontinently" (immediately) "heard." But perhaps solitude and retired meditation are principally intended; as David "remembered God on his bed, and meditated on him in the nightwatches," which showed the fervency of his love. (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, Ps. 43-5, v. 4. 42:6-8. 63:5-7. Is. 26:8, 9.) Yet the circumstance of the spouse not finding her Beloved, till she sought him in another manner, gives some ground to the opinion, that a degree of slackness, and self-indulgence was also intended.—Being, however, alarmed, and grieved at her ill-success, she was excited to more decided endeavours to recover the comforts of communion with him. "The streets, and broad ways of the city," seem rather to imply earnestness in all the means of grace, in which sweet communion with the Lord should be sought; than to mark the distinction between public, social, and private duties. Thus the spouse is represented as seeking her Beloved in every part of the city. But still she did not succeed for a time; since it was proper that she should be further humbled, proved, and quickened.—She therefore next applied to the watchmen, that went about the city, who in this place denote the prophets and faithful ministers of religion, who could give proper directions to distressed souls, and earnest inquirers after the Saviour. But upon opening her case to them, and inquiring whether they had seen, and could direct her to her Beloved, she did not receive immediate satisfaction. "This may intimate, that we must not rest, in any means, but apply immediately to Christ, by faith and prayer, if we would succeed. At length, however, perhaps through their direction and counsel, she found her Beloved, and then she "held him, and would not let him go," being afraid of losing the comfort of his presence; "until she had brought him into her mother's house, &c." The church at large may be called the mother of believers; the public ordinances are the chambers, in which they are born of God: and the Spouse, bringing her Beloved into this house and these chambers, may signify the believers open profession of his faith, and joining himself to the Lord and his people; with a declaration, expressed or implied, of his intention to walk with them in love and holy obedience. Those of old, who were born Israelites, and circumcised in infancy, did this by a constant attention to all their sacrifices and sacred solemnities: and the Lord's supper especially answers this purpose to Christians.—The Spouse, being now happy in communion with Christ, renews the charge before given to the daughters of Jerusalem. (Note, 2:7.)

V. 6. These seem to be the words of "the daughters of Jerusalem," expressing their admiration at the zeal and fervent love of the Spouse. They inquire "who is this, that cometh out of the wilderness;" perhaps alluding to the wilderness through which Israel passed, and from which they went up to possess the promised land. But a wilderness is a known emblem of this vain world: the believer comes out of it, when he renounces its friendship, and is delivered from the love of it; and when he leaves its sinful pleasures and pursuits, and refuses compliance with its customs and fashions, that he may seek happiness in communion with God through Jesus, Christ. (Marg. Ref. n. Notes, 4:8. 8:5. Ps. 63:1-4. 107:1-7. Jer. 2:2-6. 31:2. Rev. 12:5-6.)—"Pillars of smoke" ascended towards heaven, whilst the sacrifices were consumed on the altar of burnt-offering; and sweet gums and spices of the merchant were burnt upon the golden altar of incense. This may represent the lively affections, and fervent prayers and praises, and other spiritual sacrifices of believers, ascending to heaven before God, through the atonement and intercession of Christ (Marg. Ref. o, p. Notes, 1:12-14. 4:12-14. 5:5,6. Ex. 13:21,22. 30:34-38. 2 Cor. 2:14-17. Phil. 4:14-20, v. 18. Heb. 13:15,16. 1 Pet. 2:4-6.)—The last clause may be rendered, "more precious than all the powders of the merchant." Gold dust might be one of these powders.

V. 7, 8. The Spouse seems to call on her companions, not to admire her feeble graces and imperfect services; but to behold her Beloved. As the bed and bedchamber of Solomon was guarded by a number of well-armed soldiers, lest he should be disturbed or assaulted in the night: so a guard of angels continually protects the church from the assaults and terrors of her enemies, in the darkest hours, whilst she maintains communion with her Beloved; yea, the Lord himself is her Keeper by day and night. "Behold the love which the great King hath to her, having prepared all things for her reception into society with himself: of whose royal person and happiness, Solomon himself, in all his glory, is but a figure.... Valiant persons... encompass him night and day;... but are not comparable to the power and force and multitude of that heavenly host, which secure the church in her enjoyments, and take care of her continual safety." Bp. Patrick.—This supposes the verse to be a continuation of the admiring language used by the daughters of Jerusalem, concerning the zeal and happiness of the spouse. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1:17. 18. Neh. 4:19-22. Ps. 45:3-5. 91:1-13. 121:3-8. Rom. 8:32-39. Eph. 6:10-13. Heb. 1:13,14.)

V. 9, 10. Here Solomon is the type of Christ, the King of Israel, and our Prince of Peace. The chariot of cedar, or carriage, which Solomon had made, for himself and his royal spouse to appear in publicly, may mean the gospel of Christ; or the everlasting covenant, which he has mediated in our behalf, in which his glory and our felicity are united the "pillars of silver" may denote the precious promises, and engagements, which are the support and ornament of this covenant, and the security of all believers; "the bottom of gold," and "the covering of purple," may mean the rich blessings and royal privilege conferred on every believer: and "the midst thereof being paved with love," shows that all these blessings spring from the love of God in Christ Jesus to fallen sinners, "according to the eternal purpose, which he hath purposed in himself;" and centre in it. "What is this to the wonderful love of God, and to the riches of his grace, in his great and precious promises, ... which the gospel calls us not only to behold but to enjoy?" Bp. Patrick. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Sam. 23:5. Ps. 45:3-5. 87:3. Is. 55:1-3. Rom. 5:6-10. 8:32-39. Eph. 3:14-19. 1 Tim. 1:12-16. 1 John 3:1-3. 4:9-12. Rev. 1:4-6.) The clause rendered "for the daughters of Jerusalem," may mean "by or from, the daughters of Jerusalem." Solomon's chariot was adorned by their needlework, and the figures, whatever they were, wrought by them, are no unapt emblem of Christians "adorning the doctrine of God their Saviour in all things." (Note, Tit. 2:9,10.)

V. 11. This verse contains the most express allusion to the marriage of Solomon, of any in the whole book: but it is not said whether to Naamah the Ammonitess, his first wife as far as we know, or to Pharaoh's daughter, or to some other of his wives. (Preface. Notes, 1:2. 1 Kings 3:1. 14:21.) It seems that it was customary in ancient times, for the bridegroom, or bride, or both, to wear a nuptial crown; and it may be supposed that Solomon's on such a joyful occasion, would be very magnificent. It was put on his head by his mother Bathsheba.—"O ye daughters of Zion, ... look upon king Solomon, as he sits solemnly crowned in the day of his greatest royalty and triumph; and compare his highest pomp with the divine magnificence of my Saviour, in that day when his blessed marriage shall be fully perfected above to the eternal rejoicing of himself and his church, and see whether there be any proportion between them." Bp. Hall.—When the sinner finds "peace and joy in believing," and makes an open profession of his faith and love; especially when large multitudes thus join themselves to the Lord, (as was the case on the day of Pentecost;) the happy season may be called the day of the heavenly Bridegroom's espousals, and "the day of the gladness of his heart:" for espousals are not a secret transaction; but the recognition, before proper witnesses, or publicly, of the mutual consent of the two contracting parties to be united in marriage. (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, Is. 61:10,11. Jer. 2:2,3. Hos. 2:18-20. 2 Cor. 11:6, v. 2,3. Rev. 19:1-8. 21:1-4.) The church is the mother of Christ, as to his human nature, that is, he was born within the church; and she crowns him, when, through ordinances administered in her, sinners are converted, and believers thus espoused to him. Then his power and grace are displayed; he "sees of the travail of his soul," and the purchase of his blood, "and is satisfied;" and these are the trophies and monuments of his glorious victories, over the world, sin, Satan, and death. Angels in heaven rejoice over one penitent sinner; saints on earth rejoice and celebrate the Redeemer's praises, when this event is made known to them: he himself rejoices over the redeemed sinner, as "in the day of the gladness of his heart;" and the daughters of Zion, (every one who is disposed to seek this salvation,) should go forth to behold these things; that they may be encouraged to believe and to make profession of their faith, by observing how gloriously our King appears in saving sinners. (Marg. Ref. y-b, d. Notes, 8:5. Is. 53:11,12. 62:1-5, v. 5. Zeph. 3:14-17. Luke 15:3-10. P. O. 1-10. Notes, Phil. 2:9-11. Heb. 12:2,3.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-5. Remaining sinfulness, the snares of Satan, and the fascinations of the world, may hull even true believers into comparative negligence; yet, if indeed Christ be our Beloved, we shall not utterly intermit our search of him. If, however, at any time our affections become cold, and our attendance on ordinances remiss and unfrequent, it is salutary for us to lose our assurance, and to be distressed with fears and doubts. This gentle rebuke of our folly and ingratitude, which merit far severer punishment, is intended to excite us to seek him more earnestly; nor can a true believer deliberately rest in any thing short of the enjoyment of the love of Christ. When we are stirred up to use diligence, in attending on all the means of grace, yet do not immediately succeed, the delay should not discourage, but humble us; and lead us to closer self-examination, and more frequent and earnest prayer: nor can either new converts, or returning backsliders, expect to find peace and comfort in any other way.—Those who are troubled in mind, should open their case to the faithful and experienced watchmen of the holy city, and desire their assistance in seeking Christ and the joy of his salvation: but such as are not experimentally acquainted with him themselves, cannot point him out to others.—We should use, but not depend on, instruments and means; and though the Lord will prove our faith and love; yet he will be found of all who seek him with humble and persevering diligence. Days, weeks, months, nay years, of sorrowful waiting, will soon be compensated by the joy of having found him whom our souls love: and not only will that joy be proportioned to our desire after his favour, and our regret for having forfeited the comfort of it; but our future watchfulness will be increased in the same measure.—We should inform all, who fear God, "what he hath done for our souls;" that they may praise him on our account, and be encouraged by our example: and we should aim, by every means, to bring others to partake of our privileges and comforts. Our faith ought to be declared by an open confession: and when we find our hearts enlarged in joy and gratitude, we should not delay joining ourselves to the Lord and his people, at his table; that we may have the benefit of Christian communion, and of the prayers and counsels of our brethren. And we should still call upon ourselves and each other, to beware of grieving our holy Comforter, and provoking the departure of our Beloved.

CHAPTER IV.

Christ commends the comeliness of the spouse by various similes, invites her to accompany him, and shows the warmth of his affection; 1-15. The Spouse desires supplies of divine influences, to invigorate her holy affections, 16.

V. 6-11. Lively Christians, leaving the world and sin behind them, and setting their affections on things above; offering the spiritual sacrifices of prayer and praise, with fervent love, joy, and gratitude, through the influences of the Holy Spirit; and presenting every service through the mediation of Christ, form a lovely and edifying sight. Such persons adorn the gospel, and often convince inquirers and undecided persons, that there is an excellency and happiness in religion, which cannot be attained without great diligence. But the believer will never think highly of himself; and will always direct those who notice him, to "look unto Jesus" and his glory and grace: and the more we rejoice in his "unsearchable riches," the greater earnestness shall we express in recommending them to others. In this respect our love is without selfishness; as we know that there is sufficient to enrich and felicitate all who come, be they ever so numerous.—The protection and security, arising from armed and valiant guards, are a feeble shadow of the peace and safety of those who trust in the Lord: and if our minds were always "stayed upon him," and communing with him, we should not fear in the darkest night of temptation, or even in the gloomy hour of death. (Notes, Ps. 23:4. 94:11, 12. Is. 26:3, 4. 50:10, 11.) Blessed be God for the everlasting gospel of our King of righteousness and peace; for the precious promises and inviolable security of the new covenant; for the rich and royal privileges to which believers are now admitted, and are taught hereafter to expect; and especially for that unfathomable love, from which they proceed. May that "love constrain us to live to him, who died for us and rose again," and "to love one another with a pure heart fervently." And blessed be God that, whilst believers may know, that he has "loved them with an everlasting love," and will never leave them nor forsake them: sinners may be assured, "that every one that seeketh fineth." No affectionate bridegroom so rejoices over his bride, on the day of his espousals, as the Lord Jesus rejoices over the poor sinner, who comes to trust in his mercy and salvation. Nor did ever Solomon appear so glorious, when arrayed in royal majesty, with a crown of pure gold upon his head; as our Redeemer does, when converted sinners acknowledge their obligations to him, and join themselves unto his people. This is the crown which he most values! Poor, dejected, trembling sinner, go forth, and behold him, how he is glorified, and how he rejoices in saving the meanest and the vilest; and be encouraged to hope that he will be glorious in saving thee also, as drawn and taught to seek and long for his salvation.

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. 1-5. By the spouse, as here addressed by her Beloved, with most tender affection and high commendations, we may understand either individual believers, or the church collectively: and the induction of several particulars, may show in general, that the church and the believer partake of every kind of spiritual excellency; though we may not be able satisfactorily to apply the several allusions. The "doves' eyes within her locks," may denote the modesty with which believers conceal their good works, which spring from holy and gentle love: or the chaste eyes shaded by locks of hair, may mean an indisposition to gaze abroad, and an unwillingness to be gazed on. The "hair like a flock of goats that appear from mount Gilead," which are noted for their orderly following the he-goat, may signify the believer's intelligent profession of faith, and his regular conversation, the result of sound knowledge and judgment. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a-d. Notes, 1:9, 10. 5:10-16, v. 11. 6:5-7, v. 5. 7:5. Phil. 2:1-4, 5-8, v. 5.) "The teeth," which prepare the food for digestion, being compared to "a flock of ewes, newly washed," or after they are shorn, each accompanied by two lambs, &c. may denote the believer's tearable disposition, his regular attendance on instruction, and its beneficial effect upon his conduct, rendering him very fruitful in good works. But some apply this to the ministers, who prepare the spiritual food for the nourishment of the church; and to the harmony and purity of their doctrine, and its efficacy in the conversion of sinners, and the sanctification of believers. (Marg. Ref. e, f. Notes, 6:5-7, v. 6.) The "lips like a thread of scarlet, and the pleasant voice," evidently mean the profitable improvement of the gift of speech, in edifying conversation, in preaching the gospel, and in worshiping God. (Marg. Ref. g, h. Notes, 5:10-16, v. 13, 16. Ps. 37:29-31. 45:2. Prov. 15:4. 25:11, 12. Is. 50:4. Eph. 4:29. Jam. 3:3-12.)—The "temples, like a piece of pomegranate, within the locks," may be interpreted of humiliation before God, for defects or sins that he alone sees; or, of the modesty, as well as prudence, with which ministers should attend their work; or of those excellences in the church and the believer, which Jesus Christ peculiarly approves, but which are concealed from the view of the world. (Marg. Ref. i. Notes, 6:5-7. Ps. 45:13-15. 1 Pet. 3:1-4.)—"The neck," which unites the head and the body, is commonly explained to mean faith, by which the union of believers with Christ our Head is formed; and which is a shield, to ward off and quench the fiery darts of the wicked one; and which puts the soul under the Lord's protection, as in a well-fortified and defended tower. (Marg. Ref. k-m. Notes, 7:4. 1 Kings 10:15, 16. Eph. 4:14-16. 6:14-17, v. 16. Col. 2:18, 19.)—"The two breasts, like two young roes, &c.," if we accommodate them to the believer, may denote simplicity of affection for Christ, and the delight, which Christ reciprocally takes in him; as the husband in the affections of the wife of his bosom; or the connexion that there is in the distinct exercises of spiritual graces, which are as twins; and the idea of young roes, which feed among the lilies, may denote conformity to Christ, who is thus described. (2:16.) The believer delights in communion with Christ and his people, as he delights in them. But the two breasts, applied to the body of the church, may also denote the two Testaments, or the writings of the prophets and apostles, those "breasts of consolation," which are pleasant as the young roes, and twins in doctrine; whence ministers deduce all their instructions; whence converts, as new-born babes, draw the "sincere milk of the word that they may grow thereby;" and established Christians not only deduce continual improvement, but learn those things, which they usefully communicate to others. (Marg. Ref. n, o. Notes, 7:6-8. 8:1, 2, 8, 9. Prov. 15:19-15. Is. 66:10-14. 1 Pet. 2:1-3.) Some of these expressions do not seem aptly descriptive of feminine beauty: and I take it for granted, that they have a spiritual meaning, though far from being confident that the exact import of each allusion is pointed out. But these seem the more probable opinions which have been formed on the subject.

V. 6. "The mountain of myrrh, and the hill of frankincense," may mean the mountain on which the temple was built and where the incense was burnt, and where the people at the same time worshipped the Lord. This was his peculiar residence, where he would "wait to be gracious" till the shadows of the legal dispensation were dispersed, by the breaking of the gospel-day, and the rising of "the Sun of Righteousness;" and thither believers resorted to meet him in his ordinances. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. p, q. Notes, 2:16, 17. Hos. 5:15. Mal. 1:9-11, v. 11. 4:2-6. John 4:21-24.) At present he dwells in human nature, and is gone into the true holy place, to present the worship of his people before the throne, with the incense of his intercession: and though

V. 7. "Thou art exceeding beautiful, O my church, in all parts of thee: for all thy sins are done away, and thine iniquity is covered; and lo, I present thee to my Father, without spot, or wrinkle, or any such deformity. Eph. 5:27." Bp. Hall.—The apostle, however, in the passage alluded to, evidently intended the perfect sanctification of the church, when admitted into the heavenly state, which is the completion of her sacred union with her Beloved.

Defiled and loathsome as we are,
He makes us white, and calls us fair;
Adorns us with that heavenly dress,
His graces, and his righteousness." Watts.

V. 8. "Christ promiseth his church, to call his faithful from all corners of the world."—Here now begins a new representation; as appears by this, that the style wherein the Bridegroom speaks is altered; she who hitherto hath been called his love or friend, hence now called his "spouse," and never before, though very frequently in the following part of the song. . . . We may look upon this as a description of the church, coming out of the state of persecution, and receiving greater testimonies of her Saviour's love than ever. For, coming from the top of high mountains, where there were lions' dens, and where leopards inhabited, cannot well signify any thing else, than coming from places where they were in danger to be devoured by their persecutors. . . . As Senir and Hermon were parts of the same mountain; so Amana was a part of Libanus; . . . and though the lower parts of this mountain, Libanus, were very pleasant; yet the top of it, which is here spoken of, was horrid, and inhabited by wild beasts." Bp. Patrick.—The original is future, not imperative; and implies, not merely an invitation, but also a promise, that the true church shall be brought out of every scene of danger and suffering, to the enjoyment of consummate felicity in the presence and full favour of her Beloved. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2:10-14. Ps. 45:9-11. 76:4. Is. 35:8-10. 2 Cor. 6:14-18.) In what sense could Pharaoh's daughter be called to come to Solomon, after their espousals, from the horrid tops of these mountains? And what had she, even before her marriage, to do, either on the savage wilds of Lebanon, the northern boundary of Canaan; or on the top of Hermon, to the east of Jordan?—Egypt lies southwest of Canaan.

V. 9. Christ here expresses the vehemency of his love to his church. He calls her his "sister," as well as his "spouse;" (10:12.) he bears our nature as the Son of man, and he makes us partakers of the divine nature, as the children of God. His spouse had "ravished," or taken away, "his heart, with one of her eyes;" that is, by looking to him, in the simplicity of faith and love; and "with one chain of her neck," or by every exercise of those harmonious graces, and practice of those holy duties, which are the ornament of the believer and of his profession. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 1:10, 15. 5:1, 2. 6:5-7, v. 5. Matt. 12:46-50, v. 50. 1 Cor. 9:4, 5. Heb. 2:10-13. 2 Pet. 1:5-7.)

V. 10. The believer's holy love to Christ and to his people.

ple, is highly valued by him: he greatly delights in it, as the fruit of his own Spirit, and the reflection of his own image. As believers prefer the love of Christ to all earthly joys; so Christ prefers their love and grace, to all the 'sacrifices and incense of the temple, to the choicest productions of the whole earth, and to the most admired characters which have inhabited it. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 1:2, 4. 3:6. 1 Cor. 13:1-7. 2 Cor. 5:13-15. Gal. 5:1-6, v. 6. 22-26, vv. 22, 23. 1 John 4:7, 8, 13-17.)

V. 11. The prayers, praises, thanksgivings, open profession of the truth, and pious conversation of believers, with the faithful and zealous preaching of ministers, are pleasant to the gracious Redeemer, as the pure honey that drops from the honey-comb: every expression is to him, as if "honey and milk were under their tongue;" while they speak from the abundance of their hearts; and their whole conduct, whilst they rely on his merits and copy his example, is fragrant unto him above the most delightful spots on earth. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 7:9. Ps. 45:8. 71:22-24. Prov. 16:24. Hos. 14:1-3, v. 2. 4-8. Heb. 13:15, 16.)

V. 12-14. The world is a wilderness: but the church is "a garden," enclosed by divine grace, and stored with every valuable plant, which is well cultured and flourishing. It has within itself a spring, or fountain, whence every part of it is abundantly watered; i. e. the fertilizing influences of the Holy Spirit. But this "spring is shut up," this "fountain is sealed." The world knoweth not these "wells of salvation;" nor can any opposer stop up or corrupt this fountain, or prevent the course of its healing streams. The effects men may perceive, the cause they cannot discover: for the believer's "life is hid with Christ in God." Some by the plants suppose young converts to be intended, and by the enclosing of the garden and spring, the exclusion of the wicked from the sacred ordinances of the Church. The single attachment and fidelity of the true church to him who has espoused him to himself, seems also to be intended. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 1:12-14. 5:1. 7:10-13. Ps. 46:4. Prov. 5:15-19. Is. 12:1-3; 4. 31. 41:17-20. 61:10, 11. John 4:10-15. Col. 3:1-4.)

V. 15. These words seem to be spoken by the spouse, rendering to Christ the praise of all the good which he had commended in her. He is "the Fountain," which makes these gardens fruitful; even "a Well of living waters," from whom all heavenly graces flow, (as streams from the declivities of Lebanon,) to water every part of his church.—The church confesseth that all her glory and beauty cometh of Christ, who is the true Fountain of all grace. (Notes, Ps. 36:5-9. Jer. 2:13.)—Many, however, suppose the verse to be a continuation of the preceding commendation; and to imply, that the church is not only pure and pleasant in herself, but so abundantly replenished with gifts and graces, as to be capable of communicating blessings to all around. (Marg. Ref. Notes, John 4:10-15. 7:37-39. Rev. 22:1.)

V. 16. The spouse, considering herself as the garden well watered, planted, and tended, earnestly desires that her graces may be rendered more lively, her spices more fragrant and her fruits more rich and abundant; and she calls upon the wind, (another emblem of the Holy Spirit in his diversified operations,) to blow upon her garden for this purpose. (Marg. Ref. x. Notes, Ez. 37:1-10, v. 9. John 3:7, 8. Acts 2:2, 3.) The north wind may be interpreted of the convincing and humbling effects of the Spirit, which are sharp and unpleasant, but very useful: the south wind is supposed to denote his enlivening and comforting influences, which cause hope, love, gratitude, and zeal to abound in the heart. (Notes, John

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. The church of Christ, and every true believer, are not only greatly beloved by him, and regarded with a condescension which cannot be expressed or conceived; but they actually possess great excellency and spiritual beauty, derived from his grace, and forming the reflection of his holiness. The illuminated understanding, the spiritual judgment, the submissive will, the holy affections of love and gratitude, the regulated passions, the blameless conversation, and the unostentatious usefulness of real Christians are very valuable. Their daily exercise of repentance, with genuine sorrow and self-abasement before God, on account of such failures and defects as others think nothing of, and with which he alone is acquainted; their continued dependence on the blood of Christ, and on the promised assistance of the Holy Spirit; their constant opposition to sin; their delight in the word and ordinances of God, and in speaking of his love and grace; and their habitual endeavours to lead others to an acquaintance with their beloved Saviour: these, and other parts of the Christian temper, are very good in themselves, and pleasing to the Lord: and he would have them know how much he approves of them, that they may be encouraged amidst difficulties and temptations, and excited to greater watchfulness, diligence, and gratitude. He would also have the distinction strongly marked between real and pretended disciples; and the mistake of those who imagine that the doctrine of his free salvation tends to laxity in morals, effectually confuted. And when the whole church is considered, and contrasted with the rest of mankind; when the regular administration of divine ordinances, and profession of the sacred truths of God's word; the diligence, faithfulness, holy lives, patient sufferings, and usefulness of true ministers; their continual instruction of the people from the sacred Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, in every thing relating to doctrine and practice; the spiritual worship of numerous individuals and assembled congregations, throughout the earth, all ascending before the throne of God, through his intercession, who is gone before to be our Advocate: I say, when these things are candidly considered, we shall perceive the propriety of the expression, "Thou art all fair, my love, there is no spot in thee." But we must by no means think, that mere professors of any description form a part of this "chosen generation, this peculiar people." The church, of which we speak, consists of those persons, who are "washed, and sanctified, and justified, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God:" in whom there is "no spot;" no sin unrepented of, unpardoned, or unsubdued; no part which is not beautified with salvation, in a measure which continually tends to perfection. (Note, Ps. 149:4. P. O.)

V. 8-16. The Redeemer calls us to forsake earthly objects, and to set our affections on things above, whether he is gone before, and "where he sitteth on the right hand of God." For every scene here below is full of trouble and danger; Satan and his emissaries, go about as lions and leopards, "seeking whom they may devour." (Note, 1 Pet. 5:8, 9.) and a proper sense of our situation will not only lead us to a willingness to count all but loss, that we may win Christ; but will reconcile us to his call to depart hence, that we may go to be with him in heaven, where there are neither sins nor temptations. (Note, Phil. 1:21-26.) All our salvation springs from the Lord's compassionate love to us as sinners; but he beholds, with complacency and delight, our faith, and love, and endeavours to walk in his ordinances and commandments; he glories in his relation to us, as our Brother and most endeared Friend; and surely we shall never be ashamed of it! And if he speak, in such encouraging terms, of our scanty measure of fruitfulness; how should we admire and extol his excellences, and the "savour of his sweet ointments," in his righteousness, his mediation, and his sacred word! As Christians, we are his garden, which he has enclosed from the wilderness of fallen man, and stored with precious plants from the paradise above; and which he waters from the Fountain of life, that "springeth forth from the throne of God, and of the Lamb;" that we should be "filled with all the fruits of righteousness, which are through Jesus Christ to his praise and glory." This garden is indeed enclosed, this fountain is shut up and sealed; so that the world can neither become acquainted with their value, nor do it any real injury: but, though ungodly men cannot understand our principles, or comprehend the way in which our hearts are directed, influenced, and renewed from above; they can form a judgment of our conduct: and we should endeavour to convince them, that the holiness of our lives is far superior to the general practice of the world; since we profess to maintain communion with God, and to receive communications from him, to which they are strangers. We should keep separate from them as "a garden enclosed," and avoid conformity to them: and whilst we render all the glory to him, who alone "hath made us to differ," we should earnestly pray that this difference may be every day rendered more evident and decided. These commendations of true believers may well humble each of us, in a consciousness how little we are entitled to them; and stir us up to be more fervent in seeking for the convincing and sanctifying Spirit of Christ, to bring every holy affection into more vigorous exercise; that our worship and obedience may be more consistent with our character, privileges, and relation to the holy Jesus; that he may take more delight in manifesting his presence to our souls, and may be more glorified in our whole conduct. Nor should we confine our prayers to our own cases and wants; but pray without ceasing, that the same Spirit of life, holiness, and comfort may breathe on all the assemblies of the saints, and render their worship more spiritual, their love and joy more lively, and their fruits of righteousness more abundant, to the Redeemer's glory, and the honour and spread of his gospel in the world.

NOTES.—CHAP. V. V. 1. This verse, which should have been joined to the former chapter, is the gracious answer of Christ to the petition of the spouse. (Note, 4:16.) He had so prepared his garden that he could come into it with satisfaction. The worship presented in his church was pleasant to him, as fragrant gums and spices. He delighted in the spiritual services of believers, as honey and the honey-comb. He also "drank the wine and the milk;" the most minute as well as the more costly oblation being acceptable to him, as coming from an upright heart. "O my sister, my spouse, I have received those fruits of thine obedience, which thou offerest unto me. I have accepted not only of thy good works, but thy endeavours and purposes of holiness, which are pleasant to me as honey and the honey-comb." Bp. Hall. (Marg. Ref. a, b, d. Notes, 4:10-15. 6:2. P. O. Ex. 35; Notes, Ps. 119:103. Is. 5:1. 55:1-3. Mark 12:41-44. Luke 3:9, v. 8. 2 Cor. 8:10-15, v. 12.) He then added an invitation to his friends and beloved people, to eat and drink abundantly. The acts of worship, in which they honour him, are means of communicating grace to them. The good works, which they perform to adorn his gospel, evidence the reality of their grace, and make way for their consolation: it is his will, that they should rejoice in the provisions of his grace, whilst they live to his glory: those who would entertain Christ, must also entertain his poor disciples: and though their goodness cannot profit him, it may be useful to his beloved people; as a man has an orchard or garden, which he delights to see stored with every valuable production, and yet he does not use them himself, but disperses them among his friends. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. d, e. Deut. 12:5-7. Ps. 16:23. Prov. 9:1-6. Is. 25:6-8. Matt. 26:26-29. 2 Cor. 9:12-15. Eph. 5:15-20, v. 18.) "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit."—Some think that the martyrs, who laid down their lives from love to Christ, are meant by "the myrrh and spice," as peculiarly pleasing and honourable to him: and that the joy of angels and saints in heaven over the conversion of sinners on earth is intended by the concluding invitation.—"Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep that was lost." (Notes, and P. O. Luke 15:)

V. 2. A new scene here opens; and the spouse relates her conduct on a particular occasion, when she evidently acted improperly, and was rebuked for it. To cover over all the improprieties of a literal interpretation, concerning Solomon and Pharaoh's daughter, immediately after their espousals; the whole has been confidently stated to have been a dream; because it is said "I sleep, but my heart waketh." This expression, however, admits of a very different and instructive interpretation, if the spiritual meaning of the allegory be attended to: and there is no other intimation that it was a dream; or reason why it should be considered as such, except to keep up the imaginary consistency of a dramatic poem on the marriage of Solomon with Pharaoh's daughter, which has little or no foundation in Scripture, and cannot be clearly made out by internal evidence. (Preface.)

Notes, 1:2. 3:1-5.) Waving therefore the consideration of the passage, in respect of these external circumstances; we here learn that the spouse, subsequent to the commendations which had been bestowed on her, fell into a drowsy and heartless frame of mind.—"I sleep, but by heart waketh." She is very dull, yet not utterly inattentive to her spiritual concerns. Her judgment and choice are the same; but her affections are cold, and her services formal: a case, which alas! often occurs in the believer's experience. (Notes, Matt. 25:5-9, v. 5. Rev. 2:2-5.) I take it to be a description of the dulness, which is sometimes apt to creep upon the most excellent minds. Bp. Patrick.—In this situation she recognises the voice of her Beloved, and hears him knock and request admission. This represents the warnings, reproofs, and invitations given to a Christian, when in this drowsy frame; the convictions excited by the Holy Spirit; and the ineffectual desires felt, and the half purposes formed, on such occasions. He perceives that he is faulty and ought to be more earnest; he is gently admonished of his folly and ingratitude; yet he yields to inactivity, despondency, or lukewarmness. (Note, Rev. 3:20-22, v. 20.) The words of Christ, as here stated, are replete with tender affection, and introduced by the most endearing compellations, without the least anger or reproach; yet he complains, that "his head is filled with dew, and his locks with the drops of the night;" implying the hardships and sufferings, which he had endured in coming for the salvation of his people; and that it is very unkind and ungrateful if they are not ready to admit and entertain him. As if a tender husband, having gone a long and wearisome journey, solely for the benefit and comfort of his wife; and having travelled very late in the night, through the cold or rain, out of love to her company, should at length be shut out of doors, and obliged to continue all night in the street!—The night-dew in those countries is very heavy and chilling. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2:8-13. 7:9. 8:6, 7. Gen. 31:40. Matt. 26:40, 41. John 15:3-5, v. 4. Rom. 13:11-14. 2 Cor. 5:13-15. Eph. 4:30-32, v. 30.)

V. 3. The vain and frivolous excuses, urged by the spouse, denote the unprepared state of the believer's heart, when he has remitted his watch, grown negligent of his work, fond of ease and indulgence, and averse to exertion or inconvenience. In such a frame, every thing forms a mighty difficulty; and delays and omissions of duty are admitted on the most frivolous pretences.—Backwardness to show our love to Christ, by self-denying and expensive kindness to his afflicted and suffering people, may also be intended.—Let us learn from hence what mischief sloth and laziness doeth, and what troubles and pains it engages us. For the spouse here excusing herself, and not being willing presently to rise to the Bridegroom, is compelled a little while after, not only to rise and to run down to the door, but to run through the city, and wander about the streets, and fall among the watchmen, and by them to be wounded; and after all could scarcely find her Beloved; to whom if she had presently hearkened, and obeyed his heavenly call, she had avoided all these inconveniences. Theodoret, quoted by Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref.

V. 4. This verse leads us to imagine some private aperture in the door, through which the person without (being acquainted with it) might put in his hand and unbolt it; or, as some think, make signs of his displeasure. This seems, however, to represent the effectual influence of the Spirit of Christ upon the heart, exciting sharp convictions and vigorous exercises of faith and grace; which caused the spouse's "bowels to be moved for him;" that is, it excited fervent desires after Christ and communion with him, attended with poignant sorrow, and shame, and great inward perturbation and alarm, for having behaved so ungratefully towards him. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 1:4. 4:16. Ps. 110:3. John. 16:8-11. Acts 16:13-15, v. 14. Heb. 4:1, 2. Rev. 2:14-16, v. 16. 3:18, 19.)

V. 5, 6. The spouse, rising up to open to her Beloved, represents the renewed exercise of repentance and faith of those believers, who have become negligent; by which they rise from drowsiness and self-indulgence, applying by fervent prayer for the consolations of the love of Christ, and diligently removing every hindrance to communion with him. These actings of the soul are represented by "the hands and fingers dropping with sweet-smelling myrrh upon the handles of the lock;" as being in themselves gracious, suited to the circumstances, and acceptable to the Lord. (Note, 2 Cor. 7:9-11.) But notwithstanding this the spouse perceived that "her Beloved had withdrawn himself, and was gone;" for the comforts of communion with God are easily forfeited, but not so readily recovered. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. p. q. Notes, 3:6. 4:12-15. Ps. 30:6-8. 51:11-13. 130:1, 2.)—"Her soul failed her when he spake:" either she now recollected his former most tender and affectionate call, which she had resisted; or he spake a reproving word as he withdrew, which filled her with extreme distress. (Marg. Ref. r, s. Notes, 2. Ps. 77:3, 4. Is. 57:15-18.) She, however, set herself, without further delay and with all earnestness, to seek him; but she "could not find him; she called him, but he gave her no answer." That is, the believer in this case must expect to use every means of grace, with the utmost diligence, without experiencing the comfort in them, which he formerly did; until he be sufficiently rebuked and humbled for his offence. (Marg. Ref. t.—See on Note, 3:1-5.)

V. 7. "The watchmen," and "keepers of the walls," in this place, seem to represent those nominal ministers, who may indeed guard the outworks of religion, but are destitute of the experimental knowledge of its power. Such persons generally treat those with harshness and contempt, who speak of their inward distresses and conflicts; and call them hypocrites, enthusiasts, or even lunatics. The most violent persecutions have in every age been excited by characters of this description, who, under pretence of guarding the walls of Zion, have treated the most humble and spiritual believers as the vilest of the human species; and have accompanied other injuries by the trial of cruel mockings and reproaches: "smiting, and wounding them, and taking away their veil," that they might be considered as infamous and shameful. (Marg. Ref. u-z. Notes, 3:3-5, v. 3. Is. 56:9-12. 62:6, 7. Ez. 3:17-19. John 16:1-3. Acts 4:23-28.) It may, however, also intimate that even pious ministers are apt sometimes to mistake the case of tempted and distressed souls; and to treat them with harshness as hypocrites, instead of that tenderness which their case requires. (Notes, 2 Cor. 2:5-11. Gal. 6:1. 5, v. 1, 2.)

V. 8. This charge of the spouse to "the daughters of Jerusalem" seems to mean the distressed believer's desire of the prayers of the feeblest Christian, or the new convert who has just formed an acquaintance with the Saviour. If they saw her Beloved, they were to be sure to inform him, that her love was so vehement, that it even caused her to sicken, from a longing desire of reconciliation, and from sorrow that

V. 9. "The daughters of Jerusalem," who are supposed to regard the spouse as one of matchless beauty, perceiving her great earnestness in seeking her Beloved, desire to know more of his distinguished excellences, above all those whom others loved. Some think that they propose this question, as deriding the vehemence of her affection and sorrow; and others that they mean to alleviate her distress, by leading her to expatiate on so pleasing a subject; but these things seem out of character for inquirers in religion, as we suppose the daughters of Jerusalem to be. They are rather to be considered, as impressed with a conviction that there must be far more preciousness in Christ, and comfort in communion with him, than they had hitherto supposed or conceived of. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1:3. Is. 53:2, 3. John 1:14. 2 Cor. 4:3-6.)

V. 10-16. In this description some reference is supposed to be had by the sacred writer to his father David, who was "ruddy and of a fair countenance;" and who was celebrated, as having "slain his ten thousands;" for the word rendered "chief among," (10) may signify, lifting up a standard over ten thousand. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. f. g. Notes, 2:1, 2. 1 Sam. 18:6-9. Rom. 9:4, 5. Phil. 3:9-11. Col. 1:15-20.)—His "head, as fine" or wrought "gold," is explained of the crown of gold worn by him, from under which his jetty and bushy hair hung down on his brow and neck. His eyes sparkled, yet with mildness, like those of doves, when highly delighted, at the river's side, as some think the original means. The words "washed with milk," are supposed to relate to the doves, which were so white, that they appeared as if washed in milk. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. h-k. Notes, 1:15. 4:1-5, v. 1. 7:5. Dan. 7:9-12, v. 9. Rev. 1:12-20, v. 14.)—The lovely down upon his cheeks, is no less grateful, rising there like spices when they first appear out of their beds; or like the young buds of aromatic flowers, . . . where the purple lilies are not more beautiful than his lips, from whence flow words more precious and more pleasant than the richest and most fragrant myrrh. Bp. Patrick.—Purple lilies are found in those countries, and highly esteemed.—(Marg. and Marg. Ref. l-n. Notes, 1:10. 3:6. 4:11. 6:2. Ps. 45:2. Is. 50:4. Luke 4:16-19, v. 18.)—Some think that by "hands as gold rings set with the beryl," the ornaments of his fingers and wrists are meant; that "his belly" or body, as bright ivory overlaid with sapphires, refers to the colour of the robe which he wore. Others imagine a reference to the rich garments of the high-priest, and the jewels in his breastplate and on his shoulders, as an emblem of the high priesthood of Christ. (Notes, Ex. 28:2, 6-14, 29.) These things, however, are very doubtful; and the richness and beauty of garments can hardly be considered as necessarily conveying an idea of pre-eminent personal comeliness and beauty. It must not indeed be supposed that a naked body is described; yet, if raiment were exclusively intended, the most uncomely form, as well as the most comely, might be thus distinguished. But personal beauty may be perceived, though covered with garments. Similar allusions are supposed to be made to the covering of the legs, thighs, and feet, in the clause, "His legs are as pillars of marble upon sockets of fine gold." (Marg. and Marg. Ref. r, s. Notes, 2:14. 7:1-4. Ps. 45:3-5. Is. 3:6, 7. 52:13-15. Hos. 14:3-8, v. 7. Rev. 1:12-20, v. 16.)—"His aspect . . . is no less stately and great than the forest of Lebanon, whose goodly cedars do not more excel all other trees, than he doth all other men." Bp. Patrick.—In short, "he is all together lovely," or desirable.—But what instruction is conveyed under this description of the comeliness and majesty of the Beloved? No doubt the spiritual excellency and glory of Christ, in his person, mediation, and kingdom, are intended; but, while in some things the meaning is evident, others must be allowed to be more doubtful.—"He is white and ruddy;" this naturally suggests to the mind, his spotless purity and his atoning blood; and it may also denote his mercy to believers, and his terrible vengeance upon his enemies. "He is the chiefest among ten thousand." "By him kings reign." He is the king of saints, and of angels; and among ten thousand rivals, he alone is worthy of our whole heart and affections, and capable of doing us effectual and eternal good. "His head, as the most fine gold," may denote the perfect righteousness and inestimable benefits of his glorious kingdom, "as Head over all things to his church;" "his locks, bushy, and black as a raven," may denote the vigour of his administration; full and black hair being an emblem of youth, as white hair is of old age and wisdom.

15 His legs are as pillars of marble set upon sockets of fine gold; 'his countenance is 'as Lebanon, excellent as the cedars:

(Rev. 1:14.) "His eyes, as the eyes of doves, by the rivers of waters, washed with milk, and fitly set," may denote his infinite knowledge, connected with purity and love, pleasant to his people, whom he watches over continually, and for whom he orders every thing in perfect wisdom and kindness.—"His cheeks," that is, those glimpses of his glory which we have by faith, and when he lifts up the light of his countenance upon us, are refreshing as the most fragrant spices or flowers. His gracious words from his lips, are pure and pleasant like the lily, and distil upon the soul like the sweet-smelling myrrh. His hands whether stretched forth to communicate blessings to us, or to uphold and defend us, or in any of the operations of his power, are "as gold rings, set with the beryl," all well timed and placed, very precious, beneficial, and regulated in perfect wisdom and love. His belly or bowels, (the known description of compassion and tenderness,) being "as bright ivory, overlaid with sapphires," may denote the glory of "his mercy, which endureth for ever;" and the unsearchable riches and invaluable privileges, which are conferred with it on all true believers. "His legs as pillars of marble set upon sockets of fine gold," such as might form the support and ornament of some magnificent temple, may denote the firmness, power, and majesty, with which he supports his church, and maintains his cause in the world, against all the opposition of earth and hell. "His countenance as Lebanon, excellent as the cedars," denotes the unspeakable glory of his person and work, as fully displayed to the blessed inhabitants of heaven of which, whilst on earth, we only obtain a few glimpses by faith. "His mouth being most sweet," seems to mean the expressions and pledges of his love, with which his people are favoured. (Note, 1:2.) But indeed, concludes the spouse, "He is altogether lovely."—All created and uncreated excellences are found in Emmanuel's person; no defect or excess; no holy disposition intrenching on any other; every thing in perfect harmony and exact proportion; and every thing, in his mediatorial character and work, which suits the case of the sinner in the most absolute manner. (P. O. Rev. 5:1-7.) This glorious and gracious Redeemer is the Beloved of every believer, who is favoured with reciprocal affection, and may be assured of his inviolable friendship and glory. (Note, John 15:12-16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. The Lord is ever ready to hear the prayers of his people; and he graciously accepts that worship or obedience, which they present in humble faith, through the influences of his Holy Spirit, notwithstanding its imperfection. When he is honoured by our fruits of holiness, we shall find them comfortable and profitable to ourselves; and they will do much good to others, especially to the household of faith; and if we do not abundantly feast on the provisions of his grace, the fault lies in ourselves; for his invitations are as liberal and pressing, as the feast is plentiful and magnificent. But alas! very often, when he stands at the door, and knocks for admission, that he may enter in and feast with us, we are half asleep; and even the riches of his condescending love and gracious consolations prove occasions, through our remaining depravity, to supineness: so that he is not only treated with ungrateful neglect by his enemies, but even by his friends! They are not indeed quite asleep; their "heart is awake" they hear, and know his voice, in his word and providence, and acknowledge him as their Beloved; yet they treat his most endearing compellations with inexcusable disregard; and notwithstanding his gracious invitations, and admonitions, and gentle proofs, they still gave way to sloth; nay, they "quench his Holy Spirit," and refuse to comply with his suggestions when he shows them their duty, and their obligations to attend on it. Alas! what frivolous excuses do we often make for neglecting prayer and meditation, for absenting ourselves from public worship, the preaching of the word, and the Lord's Supper! How we shrink from any duty, which is attended with fatigue, self-denial, expense, or reproach! How unprepared are we often for attending to the Lord's commands, and for performing the work of our station in his church! These are the shameful effects of former negligence, and yet we urge them as reasons for our present omissions: and if we were left to ourselves, we should gradually grow more secure and carnal, till we entirely returned back to sin and to the world. Yet the gracious Saviour will not forsake his people, but will rebuke and chasten them. When he powerfully touches the heart, our drooping graces revive, and our spiritual affections are rekindled: then we have done with delays and excuses, and set ourselves in good earnest to use the means of grace, and to remove all obstacles to communion with him. But though these renewed exercises of repentance, faith, and love are accepted; yet he sometimes sees good to prevent our comfort in them: and they who wilfully "quench the Holy Spirit," will often be left for a time to use every means of recovering his gracious consolations, without any apparent success, and even to pray without any tokens of being heard and answered. But if they truly love him, they will seek until they find: and the more diligently they persevere under discouragement, the sooner they will in general succeed. They should be reminded, however, that they will often fail of finding help from man: they need not wonder, if many, who appear as the watchmen of Zion, persecute, ridicule, or revile those who are earnest in "seeking Jesus that was crucified;" nay, should any disconsolate soul, who is waiting for some token of his love to him, meet with rebukes and sharpness even from a pious minister; let him remember that Jesus is far more compassionate than any of his servants, and "will not quench the smoking flax, or break the bruised reed."—In all our distresses, we should seek an interest in the prayers of God's people, without excepting those of the weakest believer; we should ever be ready to pray for those who are troubled in mind: and they, whose earnest desires after communion with Christ spoil their relish of all other pleasures, will find this sickness a considerable step towards the true health of the soul.

The daughters of Jerusalem purpose to seek Christ: the spouse answers them, and professes her faith in him, 1-3. Christ repeats his commendations, declares his fervent love, shows his conduct, and describes her character, 4-13.

V. 9-16. There are many who deem pious Christians "the excellent of the earth;" yet know not how to account for the energy of their language, when they speak of their love to Christ, and fervent desires after him, not being duly aware how immensely their Beloved excels all those whom the world admires and idolizes. But did they know the whole of his personal and mediatorial excellency, they would only wonder that the love and gratitude of his most zealous disciples are so cold, and their desires so languid. Words, indeed, can never do justice to such a subject, or convey suitable ideas of it to the carnal mind: and, at our highest attainments in knowledge and experience, we only "see through a glass darkly." We should, however, endeavour, as we can, to show forth his praises; in hopes that the Lord will stir up others to inquire after him and trust in him. For this end we may enlarge on the perfection of his righteousness, and the preciousness of his blood; his pre-eminence in wisdom, truth, and goodness, to all in heaven and earth; the glory of his kingdom; his power to save and to destroy; the vigour of his rule; the perfection of his knowledge and holiness; his compassion for sinners, and his tender care of his people. We may speak of the comforts of his manifested presence, his exhilarating promises, his instructive words; of the bounty of his donations, and the exact regularity of all his operations and dispensations, for the good of his people; of his glorious and everlasting mercy, and all the blessings which we derive from his tender compassion; of his power, as exercised in perfect truth and faithfulness; of his majesty and glory, as far excelling all the sons of the mighty; and only equalled by his condescension, and the sweet tokens of his love with which he favours the meanest believer. But after all we must confess that we cannot describe his glorious excellency; though we are assured that he is "altogether lovely." (Note, Zech. 9:17.) Surely then we ought to love him far more than we do; as he is not only most entirely worthy of it, for his own excellency, but for his love to us and all its astonishing effects; and as he is the unchangeable Friend of all his people, and died for them when enemies, that he might reconcile them to God by his blood. But let us not be satisfied in expressing our love by words, and glorying in him as our Beloved and our Friend: may "his love constrain us to live to his glory;" this will best recommend his salvation to all around us, and lead them to inquire after him, and trust in him, when they see what a holy and happy people we are made by his saving grace.

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 1. (Notes, 5:9-16.) The description which the spouse had given of her Beloved, is represented as having excited her companions to a determination of seeking him with her; and to an inquiry whither he was withdrawn, seeing she mourned his absence.—This may be pointed out as among many passages which seems to have little propriety in a literal meaning: for conjugal love is jealous, and does not readily allow of rivals; but those who love Christ would have all the world love him too.

5 Turn away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome me: thy hair is as a flock of goats that appear from Gilead.

That they may seek and love him too." Watts.

(Marg. Ref. Notes, 1:4. Is. 2:3-5. Zech. 8:20-23. 1 John 1:3,4.)

V. 2. The spouse, on this inquiry, immediately recollected where Christ was to be found; though she herself had been seeking him in vain. (Note, 5:1.) Doubtless he is present with his church and assembled saints, which are as "beds of spices," whence their spiritual worship ascends with acceptance. Here he feeds with delight; or, as a Shepherd he feeds their souls by the supply of his Spirit. He also adds true converts to them, and continually gathers one and another into his heavenly kingdom. Christ goes down to this garden; which notes both his condescension and the lowliness and low estate of his people. 'He was still in his church, and in every part of it, though sometimes they were not sensible of it. For so Theodoret well observes, here is distinct mention of a garden and of gardens; i. e. of the catholic church, which is but one, and of the several parts thereof. For sometimes St. Paul mentions only the church in the singular number, and sometimes the several churches even in the same nation. (1 Cor. 14:34. Gal. 1:2.) ... The whole denotes that communion with Christ is only to be sought in the church.' Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 10:11. 4:12-16. Matt. 18:13,20. v. 20. 28:13,20 v. 20. John 14:2,3. Acts. 7:54-60. v. 60.)

V. 3. 'Now she seems to have so perfectly recovered out of the slumber, ... as to have regained her former sense of him, and of her interest in him, repeating those words which we met withal before, 2:16. ... He (Christ) is said to feed among the lilies, as in the Revelation, to walk in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks; that is, there to have his convocation, to take up his abode with them, &c. as he ... says (John 14:23.) ... he would with those who "love him and keep his commandments." Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2:16,17. 7:10-13. John 14:21-24. Phil. 4:8,9.)

V. 4. The spouse having been suitably humbled, and persevering in the exercise of faith and holy love, Christ again manifests himself to her, and renews his commendations of her.—Tirzah was afterwards the palace of the kings of Israel, and was no doubt situated very pleasantly; for its name signifies pleasant, or amiable: (Marg. Ref. k.) and Jerusalem was the holy city, the capital of Canaan. This, therefore, implies, that all the real excellence and holiness on earth centres in the church. She is also said to be "terrible as an army with banners;" a very singular commendation of feminine beauty! But the Church of God, when beautified in holiness and united in love, is very terrible to her enemies. Each believer, in his proper place, is the soldier of Christ, enlisted under his banner, and a part of his army: by which he goes forth subduing his enemies, and rendering his truth triumphant over error and iniquity: whilst every one of them gains daily victories over the world, the flesh, and the devil. 'Every part of this verse seems to me to be a new proof that Solomon speaks not in this book of one single person, (whom some fancy the Shulamite, others Pharaoh's daughter, whom others take for one and the same), under the name of the spouse; but of a body or society of men: for none else can be fitly compared to cities, nay, to great armies drawn up under their banners.' Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 10. Ps. 45:2,3. 87. P. O.)

V. 5-7. When the spouse looked on her Beloved, his affection was so strong that he was wholly overcome by it and could no longer retain any resentment for her late unkindness. When the Lord said to Moses, "Let me alone, that I may destroy this people," it was the greatest conceivable encouragement to continue pleading for them morning, 'fair as the moon, 'clear as the sun, and 'terrible as an army with banners?

and this expression is equally animating to the desponding believer, to persevere in "looking unto Jesus," seeing he is sure of thus prevailing. To intimate an entire reconciliation, Christ uses the same expressions for substance, in commending the spouse, as he had before done. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 4:1-5, vv. 1-3. Gen. 32:25,26. Ex. 32:7-10.)

V. 8, 9. Some think that Solomon here alludes to the wives and concubines, and virgins attending them, which he had at this time in his court: but he seems rather to refer to the general custom of the eastern monarchs, which afterwards he himself imitated, nay, in which he exceeded them all. The language, however, implies, that though the earth abounds with such as are deemed honourable, and amiable; yet true believers alone possess the beauty of holiness, with which no other can compare. Being united unto Christ, and born of God as the children of the church; being justified, sanctified, and approved as holy persons; the whole company forms one body, and possesses one excellence, being of "one heart and judgment" in the grand concerns of religion; and when their real character is discovered, it must be admired and commended, even by those who seem the most to rival them, or to be eclipsed by them. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2:14. Num. 23:9. Deut. 4:6-8. Ps. 45:9-15. Jer. 32:39-41. John 17:20, 21. Acts 4:32-35, v. 32. Eph. 4:1-6. 5:22-27. Rev. 19:7,8.)

V. 10. Either Christ here continues his discourse, as in admiration of the spouse; or this is the commendation of the queens, concubines, and virgins, mentioned in the preceding verse. As applied to the church, it may be descriptive of the gradual dawning of the gospel day, from the first promise to fallen Adam till the rising of "the Sun of Righteousness" and the calling of the Gentiles, or till "the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in." On earth, the church, reflecting the light of Christ, is fair as the moon: in heaven, the fuller view of him and conformity to him will render her clear as the sun: And both in her militant and triumphant state, she is "terrible as an army with banners." The believer, also, from his first conversion to his complete victory and salvation, may be represented by the same illustrations. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 4. 2 Sam. 23:3,4. Prov. 4:18,19. Is. 30:26. 60:1-3,15-22. Zech. 14:6-9, v. 6,7. Mal. 4:2,3. Matt. 13:36-43, v. 43. Rev. 12:1,2, v. 1. 21:22-27. 22:2-5, v. 5.)

V. 11, 12. Christ here seems to confer with the spouse concerning his departure and return, (Note, 5:1-6.) Being grieved at her neglect he had left her: but he went down into his "garden of nuts;" he was still present in his church, and taking care of his people; especially he was present to note and accept "the fruits of the valley;" the good works of the humble and discouraged; and to observe the flourishing of established Christians, and the first buddings of new converts. But his eye was on his spouse, on the offending mourner whom he had rebuked by his frown and absence: and, beholding her inconsolable and prepared for renewed comfort, he could no longer refrain; but was suddenly, as by strong and fervent affection, led to return to her, "like the chariots of Amminadib," who probably was a chieftain, noted for driving with great rapidity. The original may signify my willing or noble people. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 2. 4:12-15. 7:10-13, v. 12. Ps. 92:12-15. Is. 5:2-4. Luke 13:6-9. John 15:1-8.)

V. 13. The spouse, ashamed of her misconduct, and conscious of her unworthiness, is represented as reluctant to believe that her Beloved is fully reconciled; or as not venturing to approach him with her former confidence, and as retiring from the company: but the daughters of Jerusalem, with great earnestness call on her to return, that they might behold her. The term, "the Shulamite," may be derived from Solomon, the peaceable king, or rather from Salem, the city of peace; and it seems to mean the peaceable, or the reconciled one. (Notes, Gen. 14:18-20. Heb. 7:1-3.)—The spouse then inquires, what Christ, or the companions, can see in her worthy of attention: to which it is answered, "As it were the company of two armies." This may denote the Old and New Testament churches; or the church militant and the church triumphant, as two armies: or it may refer to the believer's constant internal conflict between inbred depravity and implanted holiness, which by turns prevail in his experience; and be supposed to refer to the spouse's late misconduct and repentance. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 1:5,6. Gen. 32:1,2. 49:10. Rom. 7:22-25. Gal. 5:16-18, v. 17. Eph. 2:14-18. 6:10-17.) But the word rendered company, signifies abundant or chorus of dancers, or such as exult for joy; and some think the hosts of angels are meant, (with reference to Jacob's vision,) who rejoiced and sang praises at the Saviour's birth, and rejoice over one sinner that repenteth. (Notes, Luke 2:8-14. 15:3-10.)

12 'Or ever I was aware, 'my soul 'made me like the chariots of Amminadib.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. The Lord commonly blesses the cordial praises of his people, to quicken others to desire his salvation, and to inquire how and where they may seek him with them.—The experienced believer, even when uncomfortable in his own soul, is both able and willing to direct inquirers to find the Saviour. By faith he apprehends his gracious presence in his church, and in all places where his ordinances are spiritually administered: these he knows to be the valued plantations of his grace, which he delights to tend, and where he raises those precious productions, which will continue in heaven for ever, to the glory of his name. Nor is the death of a believer any thing more than the owner of the garden plucking a favourite lily, which his immortal hand will preserve from withering, yea, cause to flourish for ever with increasing beauty.—The discouraged believer frequently recovers his assurance of faith and hope, by expatiating on the preciousness of Christ, in recommending him to others. The recollection of his mercy and grace, thus excited, encourage our souls to rely on them; and the consciousness that we speak from our heart, when we express a high valuation of him, tends to satisfy us that he is "our Beloved," that we are his people, and that he is "our Friend" and portion.—The Lord will also honour those who thus honour him; he will not contend with his people any longer, when they are sufficiently humbled; and with the pardon of their sins he will show his approbation of their general conduct and character. (Note, Is. 57:15,16.)—The magnificent palace, the holy temple, and, "the army terrible with banners," are faint emblems of the comeliness and honour of the church, and of true believers. They are all enlisted under one commander, and arranged under his banners: they are well disciplined and armed, and courageous in faith and hope; and they fight assured of victory: yet this consists with the greatest lowliness, meekness, and love; and their victories are chiefly gained by faith and prayer, by patience and integrity, by holy lives and the faithful preaching of the word; and if these do not change their enemies into friends, they will be more awfully destructive to them, than the most terrible weapons of war.—When the penitent believer lifts the weeping eyes of humble faith and fervent love to the Lord Jesus, he is sure to prevail: and if the Saviour seem to frown, it is only an introduction to his manifested love; and his most forbidding words, rightly interpreted, encourage us "to pray always and not faint." (Notes, and P. O. Matt. 15:21-28.)—The Lord will not upbraid us with any of those sins of which we truly repent; and therefore we should not upbraid each other. The tokens of his approbation and acceptance should encourage us with renewed diligence to follow after holiness, and to attend on his ordinances, that we may be more fruitful and useful.

V. 8-13. Whatever is most admired in the world is mean, compared with "the beauty of holiness:" some true Christians are more adorned with it than others; but this singular glory and excellency belongs, in a measure, to every member of that one body, of which Christ is the living Head. Washed in his blood, and sanctified by his spirit, they are "undefiled," "the children of God," and of his church, "without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse" world, in which they shine as heavenly lights; and they will extort commendation even from prejudiced spectators on some occasions, and at length all nations shall call them blessed. Praised be God, the coming of Christ, and the conversion of the Gentiles, have brought forward this day of heaven upon earth: may the universal success of the gospel extend the blessings of it to those nations that yet sit in darkness!—But what is the fairest light of the moon, to the brightness of the sun? and what is the most glorious time of the church, or the happiest hour of a believer on earth, to the glory and felicity of the heavenly world? Then death will be swallowed up in victory; and every soldier of our Captain's host will triumph in the final perdition of all his foes. In the mean time, though we often mourn the Redeemer's absence from our souls, he will never withdraw from his church: he tends the fruits of his grace which spring in the lowliest valleys, and marks the first buddings in the new convert, or the feeble believer. He will never be so employed about some of his people, as to neglect others; and he will return with unspeakable tenderness to those who mourn for the sins which urged his departure from them. But such humble and tender spirits can hardly be persuaded of their own happiness; and as they see so much evil in themselves, they can hardly think that the Lord delights in them. But he is peculiarly pleased even with this their humility: he marks their constant opposition to their evil propensities; he compassionates them when struggling with strong temptations and even when foiled and wounded by them, yet arising and resuming the conflict. He distinguishes between a saint militant and a saint triumphant: and notwithstanding all defects and failures, he as much loves those who are strenuously fighting the good fight of faith, as those who through his grace have already obtained the victory.

NOTES.—CHAP. VII. V. 1. This verse, and those which follow, seem to be the language of the daughters of Jerusalem to the spouse, who was now returned to them. They call her "the Prince's daughter;" as the church is called the "King's daughter," by the Psalmist: (Marg. Ref. b. Note, Ps. 45:13-15), for believers are the children of God, by regeneration, adoption, and union with the Only Begotten of the Father. The word rendered "feet" more generally signifies goings, (as it is translated in the old version,) or footsteps, implying the spouse's becoming walk or motion. The shoes or sandals, in which she moved so gracefully, are explained by the apostle to mean "the preparation of the gospel of peace," by which believers are enabled to walk with becoming alacrity in the ways of holy obedience. (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, Luke 15:22-24. Eph. 6:14-17, v. 15.)—Some render the next clause, "the cincture," or girdle, "of thy loins is like jewels, &c." as rather denoting the beautiful garments or girdle worn by the spouse, than her graceful proportion and form of body; and, if we dwell on the external meaning, this may perhaps be requisite: (Notes, 2. 5:10-16), and the believer, "having his loins girt about with truth," may refer to this interpretation. (Eph. 6:14.) But the language of the apostle seems to point out the true meaning of the sacred allegory. "The whole body, fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, Eph. 4:14-16. Col. 2:18, 19, v. 19.) How greatly the due formation and proportion of "the joints of the thighs," (namely, the knees and the hip joints,) tend to the firmness and gracefulness of motion, every one knows. Thus every part of the church, even the meanest, is beautiful and useful, well proportioned and compacted, and fitted to glorify God. And every believer, in proportion to his faith and grace, is prepared to fill up his station in a becoming manner, and to walk in the ways of God with firmness and vigour. For "we are the body of Christ, and members in particular." (1 Cor. 12:14-27.)

V. 2. Here again the decorations, rather than the person, of the spouse, are by some thought to be intended: and curious ornaments of embossed work, in the figure of a round goblet with liquor, or a heap or sheaves of wheat, surrounded with lilies carved on them, have been imagined and described. But the original words, in other places, as much mean the "navel" and the "belly" or the womb, as the next words do "the two breasts." (Note, 3.) Certainly comeliness of person, nor richness of attire or ornament, is intended: otherwise the commendations would be equally appropriate to the most deformed, if splendidly attired, as to the most beautiful: nor is there any need to remove the garments, in order to distinguish a very well proportioned and comely person from others, in the most ordinary intercourse of life. Either men or women may disguise themselves by decoration: but becoming raiment sets off the form of those who wear it. In fact the allusion to that part of the female body in which the infant is marvellously fashioned by the power of God, (Notes, Ps. 139:13-16.) seems intended as an allegorical representation of a sinner, by regeneration of the Holy Spirit, through the word of "truth," being brought to believe in Christ; and then advancing gradually in the divine life, to serve God "in newness of spirit," (Notes, 1 Pet. 1:23-25. 2:1-3, v. 3.) or in general, in holy dispositions and affections, and thus into holy practice: and also the provision in the ordinances of the church for the regeneration and conversion of sinners, and ripening them into established believers, the children of God our Saviour, and of his espoused church. The "belly" or bowels, may likewise be explained of the merciful and compassionate disposition of believers, which renders them useful in relieving the distresses of the needy, "like an heap of wheat," and is ornamental to their profession, as if the heap "was set about with lilies."—We cannot, however, be confident as to minute circumstances, in expounding these alle-gories; though the general meaning is plain. But we should not forget that many other things in Scripture, as well as this description, do not accord to the refined and perhaps fastidious delicacy of modern times: yet we have every reason to believe that gross vice was much less general in those ages, among the Israelites at least, than it is among nominal Christians at present. Nor does it become us to explain away the words of the sacred oracles. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 5:10-16, v. 14. Ps. 45:16. Prov. 3:7, 8.)

V. 3. (Note, 4:1-5, v. 5.) "The two testaments which are thy two full and comely breasts, (by whose wholesome milk thou nourishest all thy faithful children, once born into the light), are for their excellent and perfect agreement, and their amiable proportion, like two young roes." Bp. Hall.

V. 4. The word "ivory" added to the similitude of "a tower" for defence, may allude to the manifold preciousness of faith, in its various exercises. (Marg. Ref. h, i. Note, 4:1-5, v. 4.) "Eyes like the fish-pools in Heshbon," which probably were remarkable for clear and bright water, may denote distinct knowledge and penetration, and heavenly wisdom, especially in the teachers of the church. (Marg. Ref. k, l. Notes, Eph. 1:15-23, vv. 17-19. Phil. 1:9-11, v. 9. Col. 1:9-14, v. 9. 3:16, 17, v. 16. Jam. 3:12-18.)—"The nose as the tower of Lebanon" may denote spiritual sagacity, the result of a holy relish for divine things, and an experimental acquaintance with them. The sense of smelling is, as it were, the guardian of the stomach, and decides that this and the other viand is in a state unfit for food: so they, who have their spiritual "senses exercised by use to discern good and evil," will distinguish between truth and specious error, between duty and specious transgression. (Note, Heb. 5:11-14.) And thus the believer, or the teachers of the church, will perceive at a distance the approaching danger of false doctrine or seducing temptation; as the watchmen from the tower of Lebanon, would see at a distance the enemies, who should march that way from Damascus or its environs, where the Syrians, the formidable enemies of Israel, dwelt. (Marg. Ref. m-o.)

V. 5. "Thine head upon thee," is supposed by some to mean, the covering or ornament of the head: and the word, rendered "hair," to signify a fillet or riband, by which the hair was collected together. The word (רֵאשִׁית) is not used in any other place.—Carmel was a very high, pleasant, and fruitful mountain.—Some understand "thine head upon thee," as that heavenly hope, which springs from faith, and towers above earthly hopes, and excites increasing vigour in following after holiness: and "the hair-riband like purple," (the colour of kings and rulers,) many mean the dignity of every action, which is influenced by this high and purifying hope. But Christ himself, the Head of the church, and the honour conferred on the meanest believers by their union with him, may perhaps be intended. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. h, i. q. Notes, 4:1-5, v. 1. 5:10-16, v. 11.)—In short, so pleasant is the church, and every true member of it, that, "the King," the Lord of Hosts, is "held in the galleries," or has such delight in the ordinances and assemblies of his saints, that he is not able as it were to withdraw from them. "When he walks in his palace royal, and beholds her beauty, he stands still, and cannot take his eyes off from her, being captivated with it." Bp. Patrick. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 1:16, 17. Rev. 2:1.)

V. 6-8. The Bridegroom is here supposed to enter; and to speak to the spouse, in the language of admiration and strong affection.—"How beautiful, and pleasant art thou, O love, for me to delight in!" (Marg. Ref. s. Notes, 2:14. Ps. 45:9-11. Is. 62:1-5, vv. 4, 5. Jer. 32:39-41, v. 41. Zeph. 3:14-17. John 15:9-11, v. 11.)—He then proceeds to compare the statue, or person of the spouse, to the lofty and spreading palm-tree; whilst her breasts, (her entire love to Christ, and the obedience resulting from it, and the doctrine of the Scriptures, the prophets and apostles, professed and maintained by her,) are like "clusters of grapes," the precious fruit of the vine. So that when, according to his purpose, he went up to take hold of the branches of the palm-tree, he found them loaded with the most precious fruits, every way delightful to him; or, he engaged by his presence and grace to render her still more fruitful and useful, that he might still more rejoice over her to do her good." V. 9. "The roof of the mouth" is employed both in distinguishing tastes, and in articulating words: and the verse may mean, that the believer, having a relish for spiritual things, discourses upon them experimentally and pathetically. This is pleasant and refreshing, as "the best wine," to those who are beloved by Christ; and he also delights in it, because they are comforted and edified by it, nay, such conversation tends to enliven aged and infirm believers; and even to awaken sleeping sinners, to inquire after Christ and to show forth his praise.—The delivery of my word, by the mouths of my ministers, is like to the most excellent and pleasant wine; being both well accepted of that God in whose name it is taught, and most sweetly relished by the receivers; which is of such wonderful power, that it is able to put words, both of repentance and praise, into the lips of him that lies asleep in his sins. Bp. Hall.—It is thought by some, that the word rendered asleep, may mean old men. "The most generous wine, of which when we have tasted, we say, let it be sent to the best of my friends, is not more comfortable to the bodily spirits, though it be so powerful as to make old men brisk, nay, to enliven those that are at the point of death, than thy words are to raise and restore the souls of those, who imbibe the sense of them into their minds." Bp. Patrick. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 2:14. Is. 62:8,9. Jer. 31:23-26. v. 26. Zech. 9:13-17. v. 15,17. Rom. 13:11-14. v. 11. Eph. 4:29. 5:8-14. v. 14. 15-20. v. 19. Heb. 13:15,16.)

V. 10. Here the spouse answers, as one assured of her relation to her Beloved, and of his endeared love to her.—"Seeing such is the desire of my Beloved towards me, that he first loved me when averse to him; he recalled me when I wandered; he pardoned me when I offended; he studiously conferred benefits on me, and finally he gave himself to me."—There seems to be an allusion here to Ps. 45:11. . . . unto which, Solomon, as I take it, hath a respect all along in this poem. Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 6-8. 2:16,17. v. 16. Ez. 16:3-14. John 17:24. Acts 27:20-26. v. 23. Rom. 14:7-9. Eph. 2:4-10. Tit. 3:4-7.)

V. 11-13. The spouse desires to go forth with her Beloved into the fields, and to lodge in the villages; by which some suppose places newly enlightened by the gospel to be intended. Assured hope and fervent love influence true believers to be weary of the noise and bustle of a vain world; and to value leisure, and opportunity for retirement, communion with Christ, and an undisturbed attendance on his ordinances. They would be, as much as they can, employed in examining the growth of grace and fruitfulness in themselves; and the interests of religion, the conversion of sinners, and the sanctity of their brethren are dear to their heart. They want to know if the vine flourishes; and whether awakened sinners give hopeful proof of becoming "fruitful in good works." There, with the church of Christ, in his house, at his table, and at the throne of grace, they would profess and manifest their love to Christ, and give themselves up without reserve to that holy, reasonable, and pleasant affection. Among such Christians, living retired from the world, and in communion with their Lord and each other, all kinds of ornamental, pleasant, and useful fruits are produced, from faith and love, for his glory and the benefit of his church; and these are not only the first-fruits, immediately after conversion, which may afterwards be called "old;" but also "new" services are performed, and new degrees of grace are exercised, more and more even to the end. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 6-8. 2:10-13. 4:8. Ec. 9:10. Matt. 13:51, 52. 25:34-40. John 15:1-8. Phil. 1:9-11. v. 11. Col. 3:16,17. v. 17. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

the pompous titles of the world compared with this distinction, "The sons and daughters of the Lord almighty?" "Such honour have all his saints;" and, having "put on Christ," they are equally distinguished by their beautiful and glorious apparel. When their "feet are shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace;" and when, supplied with renewed strength from their great Head, through the intervention of ministers and Christians, each stationed in this mystical body with divine skill, they walk with increasing vigour and alacrity in the ways of holiness; every motion is graceful, and they "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things." (Note, Tit. 2:9,10.) The holy desires of their hearts are brought to good effect, "by the supply of the Spirit of Christ;" and their compassion and liberality relieve the wants of the indigent, and "abound in many thanksgivings unto God." (Note, 2 Cor. 9:12-15.) Faith worketh by love of "God and of man," which (like "two young roes that are twins,") produce a tenor of conduct, that accords to the example of their "Beloved and their Friend." This precious faith and love, "abounding in knowledge and all judgment," and regulated by sagacity, the result of experience and a spiritual mind, tend to the assurance of hope, the increase of holiness, and "patient continuance in well doing." And the edifying discourse of such consistent believers honours Christ, recommends the gospel, silences gainsayers, animates other Christians, and tends to convince and awaken sinners; and it will surely meet with the gracious commendation of the Lord. Wherever they meet together to worship, and to commemorate his love, Christ will be, as it were, "held in the galleries," by his delight in them and their services: and to mark the difference between them and formalists, he even expresses his admiration of the fruits of his own grace in them. They may also assure themselves, that he will be with them in their afflictions; and their resignation and patient hope, under sharp sufferings, is peculiarly pleasant and honourable to him. But when professors of the gospel do no credit to it in their lives, they drive him from their assemblies, and often deceive their own souls.—In proportion as we are sure that Christ is "our Beloved," and that we aim and desire to be devoted to him; we may also be sure that he is our Salvation, and that "his desire is towards us." And again, when this assurance is genuine, it will cause us more and more to count all but loss for him; and as far as it consists with our duty in the community, to go forth with him to some sequestered humble retreat, where we may commune with him and his people, and "with our own hearts." If then we have tasted his grace, let us seek his assistance in examining ourselves, to see how the vine flourishes, and to take heed that no subtle foxes spoil the tender grapes: let us show our love to Christ by love to his cause; and whilst we add new fruits of holiness to all those which we have already produced, let us not much regard whether men approve our conduct or not, provided our Beloved accept us and be honoured by us. Let us improve our talents and employ our influence, in observing how believers grow in grace, and young beginners put forth their tender buds; that we may exhort, encourage, warn, and pray for them, as time and occasion may require: and let us employ our time, talent, and influence, in every state and relation of life, to win over those without to seek the same blessings. And if we are favoured to see that part of the church, where we live, producing abundantly all the fruits of the Spirit, our joy will be more excited, than by any increase of riches; and our thanksgivings will accompany our applications to the great Author of all our hopes and comforts. A life of this kind more resembles heaven, than any other which we can pass on earth.

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 1, 2. These verses are generally considered as a continuation of the Spouse's words in the preceding chapter; (Note, 11-13.) expressing a longing desire, that she might show her fervent affection for her Beloved, with as little reserve, as if he were an infant brother, at her mother's breasts. But they may be understood, as the fervent prayer presented by ancient believers, for the promised incarnation of the divine Saviour. In that mysterious dispensation, the Lord of glory, the Husband of the church, "became as her Brother" and when the Man Jesus grew in wisdom, in attending on the ordinances of the church of Israel, he, as it were, "sucked the breasts of her mother." The spouse, (representing ancient believers,) declares her determination, when she found him, of whom Moses and the prophets had spoken, "without" (that is, come down from heaven, and appearing in these outer courts of the temple,) she would with the utmost confidence express her affection to him and delight in him, without fear of being rejected, or of being despised by men for so doing. She determines also to avow her faith in him, and seek for his presence in his ordinances, that she might be further instructed in the truth: assured that her holy love, spiritual worship, and cheerful obedience, would be more acceptable to him, than the richest and most highly flavoured cordials. V. 5. The daughters of Jerusalem seem here to speak concerning the spouse: or the company of established believers, when in the most vigorous exercise of grace. By faith, hope, and love of Christ, they come up from this present evil world; which once, through the enchantments of sin and Satan, appeared to them a paradise; but now that the charm is broken, they know it to be a waste howling wilderness. They therefore leave earthly for heavenly things, and still mount upward in holy desires, affections, and conversation: leaning upon the power, truth, and love of Christ; and in his strength surmounting difficulties, resisting temptations, bearing afflictions, and walking, without yielding to weariness or fainting, in the ways of holy obedience. In this heavenly course, the established believer appears wonderful to the inexperienced inquirer or feeble Christian, who can scarcely think it possible, that he can be enabled to follow an example so much above his present attainments. (Marg. Ref. m-o. Notes, 3:6. 4:8. 6:10. Ps. 63:1-4. Gal. 2:17-21, vv. 20, 21.)

Leaning, &c.] מְרַמֵּסֶת; used in this place alone. It seems to imply, dependence and confidence with love and satisfaction.—I raised, &c.] As the punctuation of the original makes the pronouns masculine; all who unreservedly adhere to it, suppose the spouse to speak in this sense. But it is much more natural to consider it as the language of Christ. He raises up new converts, and matures his people, through his mediation and by his Spirit, giving efficacy to his word and ordinances. Thus they receive their spiritual birth, nourishment, and comfort, in the church, "the mother of us all."—The word rendered brought thee forth, may mean pledged thee: for the church, especially in the Sacraments, solemnly dedicates all her children to Christ. (Marg. Ref. p, q. Notes, 2:3. 3:1-5, v. 4. John 1:47-51. Gal. 4:21-31, p. 29.)

V. 6, 7. These verses seem to be the words of the spouse to Christ, entreating him to give her an assured confidence and an abiding place in his love, and protection by his power; setting her name, as with the deep impression of a seal, on his heart and on his arm; that she might neither lose her interest in his love, nor the comfort of it. In enforcing this request she represents the energy of holy love: if that were preserved in vigorous exercise, it would prove strong as death, and enable her to suffer every extremity, rather than renounce or dishonour him. But the very suspicion of not being the object of his love would be "cruel to her as the grave," or more dreadful than death in his most tremendous forms. For love resembles fire kindled among coals, or charcoal, made of those kinds of wood, which emit the strongest heat and most vehement flame; and it is "a fire which no floods of water can quench;" that is, no temptations or sufferings can prevail against it: nay, if a man possess this love, no wealth can hire him to renounce it; nor can any thing purchase it, or compensate for the want of it. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 5:8. Ex. 28:6-30. Ps. 34:1-2. Prov. 6:27-35, vv. 32-35. Rom. 8:32-39. 1 Cor. 13:4-13. 2 Cor. 5:13-15. 11:1-6, vv. 1, 2. 1 John 4:9-12.)—The word rendered jealousy may signify zeal. (Note, Jam. 3:13-16.)—'The jealous zeal which I have for thee, and for thy glory, consumes me, even like the grave, and burns me up like the coals of some most vehement and extreme fire.' Bp. Hall.—'It should be thus translated, "which are the flames of the fire of the LORD." So the Hebrew word seems to signify, being compounded of three words, fire, flame, and the LORD. Some translate it, "Such flames are kindled only by the LORD;" and then, if there be an allusion to the breastplate of the high-priest in the beginning of the verse, I fancy the conclusion may allude to "the fire that went out from before the LORD," (Lev. 9:24,) and devoured the sacrifices, as love doth all manner of difficulties. This fire was to burn perpetually upon the altar, and never be suffered to go out; (Lev. 6:12, 13.) and therefore the best emblem of love that could be found.' Bp. Patrick. 'Wild beasts are not terrible to, nor fire, nor precipices, nor the sea, nor the sword, nor the halter, ... but even the most impassable difficulties are got over by it: the hardest things are presently mastered; the most frightful easily surmounted; it is every where confident, overlooks all things, overpowers all things.' Maximus Tyrius, quoted by Bp. Patrick.

V. 8, 9. The spouse, (or the church which then was,) seems here to intercede for the Gentiles, from among whom God intended to take a people for his name. The spouse therefore calls that future church, "a little sister which hath no breasts." Though a few believers were even then found among the Gentiles; yet they had not the word of God, or the means of grace, and spiritual union with the promised Saviour. But in due time they would "be spoken for" by him: and what was the church of Israel to do for them at that time, as instruments of effecting the gracious purpose of God? To this question Christ answers, "If she be a wall, we will build upon her a palace of silver." If the commencement of this work, even the conversion of the Gentiles by the Spirit of Christ, through the preaching of apostles and evangelists, raised up from the nation of Israel, were likened to a wall built upon Him, "the precious Foundation and Corner-stone," to become a part of a spiritual temple; they would be so multiplied, and enriched in process of time, that the Gentile church would become as a palace for the great King, builded of solid silver, and far more splendid than Solomon's temple. If the first preaching of the gospel to them was compared to the making of a door, through the wall of partition; that door should be preserved most effectually, as if closed with boards of durable cedar. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 10:1-5, v. 5. 7:3. Ps. 147:19, 20. Ez. 16:52-63. John 10:14-18, v. 16. Acts 11:1-19. 26:16-18. Rom. 3:1, 2. 10:12-17. 1 Cor. 3:10-15. Eph. 2:14-22. Rev. 21:9-21.)

V. 10. The ancient church seems here thankfully to reflect on her privileges: she was, before the coming of the Messiah, as a wall built on the precious Foundation, a part of the glorious temple which was to be erected; and the lively oracles and ordinances, which she enjoyed, were her security, as well as the sustenance and comfort of her children: and she was thus distinguished, because "then" (even when this difference originated) "she was in his eyes as one that found favour" or peace, with him. (Marg. Ref. See on Note, 8, 9. Notes, 7:6-8. Deut. 7:6-8. Is. 51-4. 41:8, 9. Jer. 31:3-5, v. 3. Ez. 16:6-8. Eph. 1:13-8. 2:4-10. 2 Thes. 2:13, 14. 1 Tim. 1:12-16. Tit. 3:4-7.)

V. 11, 12. Solomon, probably, had a large vineyard, which he did not superintend himself, but let it out to keepers each of whom paid him a thousand pieces of silver, or shekels, for the fruit, and they were supposed to clear two hundred. With allusion to this, the advantages or privileges of the ancient church are considered, according to frequent parables in Scripture, as a vineyard, intrusted by its owner to the rulers, teachers, and congregation of Israel: and the spouse, or church, determines to keep this vineyard under her own immediate care; that it may "abound in fruits of righteousness," to the honour of her Beloved, and the rich benefit of all employed in the care of it. (Notes, Ps. 80:8-13. Is. 5:1-7. Matt. 21:33-44. Luke 13:6-9. John 15:1-8. Phil. 1:9-11, v. 11.) True believers in Israel understood these obligations, and had the vineyard "before them," as their grand concern; and it was their endeavour that much fruit might be produced. Thus the Lord received his revenue of praise: and the priests, Levites, prophets, and others, whose labours, prayers, and examples conducted to this end, were graciously recompensed. And when (at the coming of Christ) the stated teachers and rulers neglected their duty: apostles and evangelists were raised from the sound part of the ancient church, by whom the vineyard was successfully cultivated: and so the corrupt part of that church being excluded, the converted gentiles were made the principal part of the vineyard, admitted to share all its privileges, and even still more abundant blessings. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1:5, 6, 7:10-13. Prov. 4:23. Is. 7:21-25, v. 23. Acts 20:28. 1 Tim. 4:11-16.)

V. 13, 14. These verses close the conference between Christ and the spouse, and imply his personal absence from his people, during their continuance on earth. Christ first addresses the spouse, as "dwelling in the gardens," or vineyard, (Note, 11, 12.) the assemblies and ordinances of his saints.—The word rendered "companions" being masculine, cannot mean the attendants on the spouse, so frequently mentioned, but rather those who were "the friends" and companions "of the Bridegroom," the spirits of just men made perfect; "an innumerable company of angels," and such men as John the Baptist, the apostles, and the most eminent instruments of Christ, in establishing his church. (Marg. Ref. r. Notes, 1:7, 8. John 3:27-36, v. 29. 15:12-16. 20:19-23. Eph. 2:19-22, v. 20. Heb. 12:22-25. Rev. 21:9-21, v. 14.)—"Ask what thou wilt of me, and I will tell thee before all thy companions, . . . I will do it for thee." Bp. Patrick.—While the church professes her faith and love, and renders her worship, as in the presence of all the friends of her Beloved; the more she abounds in prayers and supplications, with thanksgivings, the greater measure of true prosperity and consolation she enjoys. Thus our Lord, just before his crucifixion, again and again exhorted his disconsolate disciples to "ask and receive, that their joy might be full." (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2:14. John 14:7-14, vv. 13, 14. 15:9-11, v. 11. 16:23, 24.) To this the spouse replies by craving his speedy return, not for a transient visit, but to take her to be wholly with him.—"The mountains of spices" seem to mean heaven and its exalted worship, of which all the incense and worship at the temple were a faint shadow. (Notes, 2:17. 4:6.)—"Solomon here seems to long for the first coming of the Messiah, as St. John doth for his last, who concludes his book of Revelation in the same manner as Solomon doth this saying, "Come, Lord Jesus." Bp. Patrick. (Note, Rev. 22:18-21, v. 20.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. The Incarnation of the Son of God was the grand object of the believing prayers of the ancient church, and it should be the theme of our grateful joyful praises. Blessed be God, he hath "sent forth his Son, made of a woman, and made under the law." (Note, Gal. 4:3-7.) "The second Man is the Lord from heaven." (Note, 1 Cor. 15:45-49.) he dwells in our nature, and is not ashamed to call us brethren; and all the perfections of Deity conjoin with the tenderness of the most endeared relations in his humanity, to render him in all respects the meet object of our confidence and love, and to show to us the divine character, in a manner most suited to our apprehension and imitation. Having finished his work without, he is now ascended "into heaven, to appear in the presence of God for us." (Notes, Heb. 9:11-14.) but we may find him present to our faith in his holy ordinances; and there we may express our love, reverence, and submission, and render him our grateful worship, with the utmost freedom and assurance. He will not despise us for so doing, or even for our meanness and unworthiness; and we need not regard the contempt of those, who "blaspheme that worthy name by which we are called." Let us then seek his gracious presence in his church, that his ordinances and instructions may be abundantly useful to our souls, and that our worship and holy obedience may be accepted by him. Then he will renew the pledges of his love, and we shall find it "good to be there;" and shall fear whatever may interrupt the pleasant rest of our souls in him. Thus faith and hope will grow into full assurance; and

"leaning on" his power, truth, and love, and cleaving to him as "our Beloved," we shall rise superior to this vain world, and have our heart and conversation with him in heaven; and others shall see and admire our indifference about earthly things, compared with "those above, where Jesus sitteth at the right hand of God." (Notes, Phil. 3:20, 21. Col. 3:1-4.) Nor should we consider such attainments as out of our reach; let us but improve our privilege of access to the Mercy-seat; and when we have obtained some liberty in pouring out our hearts before him, let us strive to draw nearer and nearer in fervency and importunity, wrestling for more and larger blessings; and we shall certainly obtain his effectual help.—His love to us sinners was "stronger than death;" nor could all "the floods of ungodly men" or evil spirits, or inexpressible sufferings, quench that vehement flame; and all the kingdoms of the world were utterly condemned, when offered as a bribe to induce him to desist from his gracious purpose. Thus should our love to him be vigorous and victorious, that we may be ready to renounce or suffer any thing for his sake, and that we may be armed against the terrors and the friendship of the world. Indeed love is the most powerful principle of activity: and where that prevails, all dangers and difficulties will be disregarded, and every contrary interest utterly contemned. If then we have true faith, it will "work by love" of Christ, and the effects will soon become manifest in our whole conduct. Sometimes indeed, the fear of coming short of his love, or the temptation to forsake him, may be very painful to us; but we shall earnestly pray to be fixed "as a seal on his heart and on his arm," that being kept in his mercy and by his power, nothing in life or death may separate us from him.

V. 8-14. The more our hearts glow with love to Christ, the greater will be our pity for those "who sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death." We are assured that he has a numerous people to gather into his fold, from among the Pagans, Jews, and every description of Anti-Christians. These have not at present "the oracles of God," or "the means of grace;" or they find them as dry breasts, through ignorance, negligence, and unbelief. As the Lord then heard the prayers of his ancient church, as well as the intercession of his Son, for us sinners of the Gentiles, and has begun to build us upon "the foundation of his apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief Corner-stone," that we may be "an habitation of God through the Spirit;" and as the gospel, having once been preached in our land, has wonderfully been continued among us to this present day; so let us lift up our prayers for its spread all over the earth. Let us not imitate the unbelieving Jews who spake against the poor Gentiles, when the gospel was sent among them; but let us continue to pray in behalf of that distinguished nation, that they may be again grafted into their own olive-tree.—Seeing we are "in the eyes of the Lord, as those that have found favour," and have his holy word, as our security and consolation, let us learn to give the praise to his distinguishing grace. Let us also remember, that all our external privileges are talents committed to our trust; and we be to all such in our congregations, as do not honour him in their lives, in some measure answerable to their obligations.—The Lord has heretofore taken his vineyard from those that rendered not the fruits in their season: and he will not continue it long to any who imitate their corrupt example. Let each of us then place our vineyard before us, and earnestly seek grace, that we may profit by every ordinance and advantage. (P. O. Is. 5:1-7. Matt. 21:33-46.) Let every Christian endeavour suitably to perform the duty of his station, that "men may see his good works, and glorify his heavenly Father;" and let him not forget that the watchful and faithful ministers, under whom his soul thrives, are entitled to a share of his affection and regard. Let ministers also watch over their parts of the vineyard, as "those who must give account," and who seek their recompense from their gracious Lord alone. All this becomes those, "who dwell in the gardens;" and the fruit, that we produce to his glory, will certainly redound to our own advantage. If we are enabled to act in this manner, new inquirers will hearken to our voice, and be instructed and admonished by our prudent counsel; while angels and saints in heaven rejoice over the success of our zealous endeavours, and our most condescending Lord will delight to hear our requests: and whilst we continue in prayer for whatever we want, our thanksgivings also will abound, and our joy be full; our souls will be more and more enriched, and we shall be enabled to look forward to death and judgment with satisfaction, saying, "Make haste, my Beloved, and be thou like to a roe or to a young hart upon the mountains of spices." May the Lord thus prepare the writer and every reader, for his service on earth, and for the felicity of his heavenly kingdom!

BOOK OF THE PROPHET ISAIAH.

Our blessed Lord, just before his ascension, said unto his disciples, "All things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms concerning me. . . . Then opened he their understandings, that they might understand the Scriptures" (Note, Luke 24:44-49.) Hence we learn, that the sacred volume of the Old Testament was divided, at that time, nearly in the same manner as at present; though there is some difficulty, and not much importance, in exactly determining which books belonged to the Prophets, and which to the Psalms. The historical books, however, from Joshua to Nehemiah, must have belonged to the Prophets, in our Lord's days. Indeed all the sacred writers were prophets; and evident predictions of remote events are found in almost all the preceding books: but then the prophetic part comes in occasionally, in the midst of other subjects: and in many instances, the prophet seems to have been led by the Holy Spirit, to foretell the most important and distant events, while he supposed himself, or at least might appear to the reader, to be discoursing on another subject. But in the division of the Old Testament, on which we now enter, prediction is evidently the principal subject; and other topics are introduced occasionally, on account of some kind of relation which they bear to the predictions: and the prophets knew and avowed, that they were foretelling future events.—From Moses to Samuel, few prophets were raised up: "the word of the Lord was precious, . . . there was no open vision;" but Samuel established the schools of the prophets, and we read of a succession of them in every age, till the close of the Old Testament. (Notes, 1 Sam. 3:1. 10:5,6.) They were, in general, extraordinary instructors, sometimes in aid of the priests and Levites; but more commonly to supply their defects, when they neglected their duty. They were also bold reformers, and reprovers of idolatry, iniquity, and hypocrisy; they called the attention of the people to the law of Moses, especially the moral law, the standard of true holiness; they showed the inefficiency of ceremonial observances, without the obedience of faith and love; and they kept up and encouraged the expectation of the promised Messiah, and more fully declared "the sufferings of Christ and the glory which should follow." (Note, 1 Pet. 1:10-12.) Several of these prophets, nay, some of the most eminent, wrote nothing that we know of: others composed the historical records, which have been considered, and which contain also occasional predictions; with other books of the same nature, from which extracts only have been preserved for our instruction. But at length some of them were commanded to commit their messages to writing; and these constitute the books on which we now enter.—Tradition informs us, that the prophets, having written the prophecy, and delivered it as directed, affixed it to the door of the temple, where it continued some time, and was then taken down by the priests, and entered into their registers: but the persecutions which the prophets generally endured, from both priests and people, render this tradition very doubtful; nor can we exactly know in what way they were preserved. This, however, is not material: no learned man is anxious to know in what manner Homer's Iliad, Virgil's Æneis, or Tully's Orations, were rescued from the general wreck of ancient writings. They exist, and vouch their own authenticity. How much more, then, do those prophecies, which have been fulfilling for ages, and are fulfilling at this day, demand our attention by their internal evidence! In addition to this, however, the authority of both Jews and Christians, and above all of Christ and his apostles, transmits them to us as "the oracles of God."—The prophets did not teach any new doctrines, commands, or ordinances, but appealed to the authenticated record; it was not, therefore, needful that they should confirm their messages, with that immense weight of public miracles, with which the dispensation of Moses, and the gospel of Christ, were introduced. Their pretensions to be considered as God's appointed servants, were demonstrated by the unimpeachable integrity of their characters, by the intrinsic excellence and tendency of their instructions; and by the disinterested zeal and undaunted fortitude, with which they persevered in their great design. . . . These were still further confirmed by the miraculous proofs which they gave of divine support, and by the immediate completion of many smaller predictions, which they uttered. . . . Such were . . . their credentials . . . to their contemporaries: and we, who, having lived to witness the . . . second dispensation, can look back to the connexion which subsisted between the two covenants, have received additional evidence of the inspiration of the prophets, in the attestations of our Saviour and his apostles; and in the retrospect of a germinant, and gradually maturing, scheme of prophecy, connected in all its parts, and ratified in its great object, the advent of the Messiah. We have still further incontrovertible proof of their divine appointment, in the numerous prophecies, which in these later days are fulfilled, and still under our own eyes continue to receive their completion.—The language of the prophets, also, is remarkable for its magnificence. . . . Each of the writers is distinguished for peculiar beauties: but their style in general may be characterized as strong, animated, and impressive. . . . Its ornaments are derived, not from accumulation of epithet, or laboured harmony; but from the real grandeur of its images, and the majestic force of its expressions. . . . Its varied with striking propriety, and enlivened with quick but easy transitions. . . . Its sudden bursts of eloquence, its earnest warmth, its affecting exhortations and appeals, afford very interesting proofs of that lively impression, and of that inspired conviction, under which the prophets wrote, and which enabled them, among a people not distinguished for genius, to surpass in every variety of composition the most admitted producers of pagan antiquity. . . . The greatest part of the prophetic book . . . was written in some kind of measure or verse. . . . But, as the Hebrew has been a dead language for nearly two thousand years, we can have no power of ascertaining the pronunciation, or even the number of the syllables. The quantity and rhythm of its verse must therefore have entirely perished, and there can be no mode of discovering the rules by which they were governed." Greys Key.—Much has been written, concerning the different degrees of inspiration, with which the prophets were endowed; but I own, I never found satisfaction in any discussion of this subject. Certainly the Scriptures intimate some disparity between Moses and other prophets, and several ways in which divine communications were made: and let others determine what credit is due to the rabbinical determinations in this respect. It seems enough to observe, that the credit of scriptural prophecy does not depend on such distinctions, but on internal evidence; and on the highest authority, that "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Probably none, except prophets, ever had an idea, how the illapses of the Holy Spirit came into their minds, and beyond doubt evinced their divine origin. All the prophets were so superintended, both as to the words used by them, and the messages delivered, as to be preserved from error, and to give us the very word of God: and this is enough for our satisfaction. Many things, however, relative to this subject, will come in our way, and an opinion will be given on them, as we proceed.—It should be peculiarly observed, by every diligent student of the sacred Scriptures, how constantly and confidently the preceding history is assumed for granted, and as certainly known and believed by the people, in every part of the prophetic writings; and in what numerous instances they are quoted as "the Scriptures which cannot be broken," and "the oracles of God," in the New Testament. It would carry me much farther than this introductory dissertation will admit, to enter into particulars: let the reader consult the marginal references, and doubt, if he can, whether the historical books, preceding the time of each prophet, were not extant and deemed authentic, when he wrote, and whether Christ and his apostles did not consider the whole as "the word of God."—The distinction between the greater and the minor prophets cannot well be passed over in silence, in this place; but it means no more, than that the prophecies transmitted to us of some of them, are more than those of others; but not at all of higher authority.

To encourage men in searches of this kind; (that is, of the prophetic writings,) 'they will find such an harmony and correspondence between the figures and emblems, whereby the prophets point out things to come, that the careful comparing of them with each other will afford the best clue to guide the attentive reader through the most difficult parts of their writings; and is likewise a most surprising proof, that they all wrote by the direction of one and the selfsame Spirit. . . . As it is highly reasonable to believe, that some parts of the Old Testament prophecies reach to the end of the world: so it is reasonable to expect, that in every age Providence should open some new scene, which will give further insight into the meaning of these sacred writings. I confess I can by no means approve of the opinion of some learned men, who are for cramping the sense of the prophets, and confining them within as narrow a compass as they can; and will needs maintain, that the prophets scarcely foresaw any thing, but what was to come to pass in or near their own time. . . . I must own myself puzzled, to assign a reason why God should appoint a succession of prophets to foretell what should come to pass within the compass of about three hundred years, (for within that time most of those prophets lived, whose writings make up this part of the scripture-canon which is called by that name,) and take no notice of any other occurrences which should happen in succeeding time: whereas, to extend the prophetic views to the end of the world, seems much more agreeable to that description of God's prescience, which the holy writers give us, That "He declares the end from the beginning," and 'his wisdom reaches from one end of the world to the other mightily, and sweetly does it order all things.' So that even when the whole mystery of God's dispensations shall be finished, it will appear that nothing was contained in them, but what God hath formerly declared to his servants the prophets, as it is expressly affirmed, Rev. 10:7. For a further proof of this assertion, I desire it may be considered that the prophecies, which foretell the visibility and universality of Christ's church, accompanied with perfect peace, prosperity, and holiness, cannot, with any probability, be said to have yet received their accomplishment; as neither have these predictions, which foretell the flourishing state of the Jewish church and nation in the latter times; and to suppose those prophecies to have already received their utmost completion, is, in my judgment, to give too great an advantage to the Jews, and in effect to acknowledge, that they never were, nor will be, fulfilled in their actual and obvious sense. . . . Whereas on the other side to assert, that many prophecies relating to the Messias are already fulfilled in our Lord Jesus Christ; a truth which can be made out beyond all contradiction; and without to make out that several others concerning the same subject relate to his second coming, and their accomplishment shall usher in, or accompany that, his glorious appearance: I say, the observing this distinction between the different times; wherein the several prophecies, relating to the coming of Christ shall be fulfilled, effectually answers all the arguments by which the Jews support themselves in their incredulity. . . . The ancient Jews, . . . always acknowledged that the chief design of the prophets was to foretell the times of the Messias; and when Christ and his apostles explained the prophecies in a spiritual and mystical sense, they interpreted them according to the received notions of the synagogue; and are never taxed, that we find, for misapplying partial at times, as if they did not belong to the times of the Messias. . . . It does not appear, that this mystical way of applying the scriptures to prophecies to the times of the Messias was even called in question; till the Jews came to engage in dispute with the Christians; and then, to avoid the force of their arguments, they found it necessary to reject the opinion of their ancestors.¹ Louth. These hints may prepare the reader for that mode of interpreting the prophetic writings, which is adopted in this publication, and may throw light on the subject.

The prophet Isaiah, on whose writings we first enter, is remarkable for the elegance and sublimity of his style and imagery; in which the best judges have decidedly given him the preference to the most admired writers of antiquity. He is equally distinguished by the plain and copious manner, in which he speaks of Christ, and the times of the gospel; on this account he has been called, The fifth Evangelist. The book opens with sharp rebukes of the people for their idolatry and iniquity, and denunciations of divine vengeance upon them; but intermixed with cheering intimations of mercy and predictions of Christ. Afterwards the following prophecies of judgments about to be executed on several nations, as well as on Judah; through all of which the reader is led to expect future deliverances and glorious times to the church of God. Then there is inserted an account of Sennacherib's invasion, and of some particulars relating to Hezekiah, which end in a prediction of the Babylonish captivity. The prophet then copiously enlarges upon the deliverance of his people from that calamitous state, in language peculiarly applicable to the spiritual redemption of Christ: at length he drops, in great measure, types and shadows, and speaks in the most emphatical language of the Saviour's person, sufferings, and glory; and of those things which pertain to the promulgation of his gospel, and the setting up of his kingdom on earth; and which he closes with descriptions which lead the mind to consider the final felicity of the righteous, and the misery of the wicked in another world. We shall find the whole book replete with instruction; especially, we shall meet with the most decisive internal evidence of its divine original, and it will reflect light on every part of the sacred volume, on which all our hopes of happiness are founded.

Isaiah is certainly one of the most difficult of all the prophets, though perhaps few are sensible of it, but they that try to explain him. . . . The profundity of his thoughts, the loftiness of his expression, and the extent of his prophecy, have made the commentators write a poor, lame, fall-short of a full explication of his book; and he that will undertake to fathom the depths of this prophecy, is in great danger of going out of his own. This prophet seems to have been favoured with an entire view of the gospel-state, from the very birth of the Messias, to that glorious period, when "the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdoms of the Lord, and of his Christ." . . . In those parts of this exposition, where there is any mention made of the Jews being restored to their own land, upon their conversion, and some other particulars relating to that glorious state of the church in the latter times; let the reader not judge of what is said upon these obscure subjects, as so many positive assertions, but only as probable conjectures. . . . For in these and such like abstruse matters, . . . a modest man should not pretend to be "wise above that which is;" plainly and expressly "written." Louth.

One grand reason of the difficulty found in explaining the predictions of Isaiah, (which the author likewise considers as much greater than exists in the writings of any other prophet,) is the total want of that internal chronology, and geography of prophecy, which is of so great use to the expositor in explaining the most abstruse parts of the predictions of Daniel, and the Revelation of the apostle John. Such a clue, or guide, is wholly wanting in the prophecies of Isaiah; and the times and scenes, to which he prophet calls, can only be ascertained by the events which are foretold, in the most sublime and rapturous language.

CHAPTER I.

THE vision of God, by his prophet, charges Judah and Jerusalem with ingratitude, and atrocious wickedness; and describes their deplorable condition. 2-5. He shows his abhorrence of their sacrifices, calls them to repentance with promises of forgiveness, and warns them against obstinate rebellion, 10-20. He laments Zion's degeneracy and the iniquity of her princes; denounces severe vengeance; yet intimates a subsequent recovery of the nation to purity and prosperity, 21-31.

NOTES.—CHAP. I. V. 1. The name of this prophet, signifying "The salvation of the Lord," was very suitable to the subject on which he so frequently and delightfully expatiated, and which has procured him the title of the 'evangelical prophet,' nay, of 'the fifth Evangelist.' Tradition reports that he was of noble birth; that his daughter was married to Manasseh; and that he was sawn asunder by the command of that idolatrous prince, to which the apostle is supposed to allude. (Note, Heb. 11:35-38.) 'It must, however, be allowed that these traditions are very uncertain; and some think he did not survive Hezekiah; yet, even in that case, he must have prophesied sixty years at least.—In general, the reader must be referred to the notes on the second book of Kings, from the fifteenth to the twenty-first chapter, inclusive; and to the second book of Chronicles, from the twenty-sixth to the thirty-third chapter inclusive, for the state of Judah and Israel, during the term of years in which Isaiah prophesied.—Many of his prophecies, indeed, relate to other kingdoms; but always on account of their connexion, one way, or other, with the chosen race.—The two usual ways, whereby God communicated his will to the prophets, were visions and dreams; see Num. 12:6. In vision the inspired person was awake, but his external senses were bound up, and, as it were, laid asleep in a trance. . . . (Num. 24:16.) . . . It is called vision, not from any use of the corporeal sight, . . . but because of the clearness and evidence of the things revealed. . . . It was sometimes accompanied with external representations." Louth. (6:1. Ez. 40:2. Rev. 21:10.)—This chapter may be considered as an introductory address prefixed to the subsequent prophecies; and the title may belong to the book in general, or to the chapter in particular. It is thought by some, that this was not Isaiah's first vision, though placed as an introduction to the rest.—The prophecy contained in this first chapter stands single and unconnected, making an entire piece of itself. It contains a severe remonstrance against the corruptions prevailing among the Jews at that time; powerful exhortations to repentance; grievous threatenings to the impenitent; and gracious promises of better times, when the nation shall have been reformed by the just judgments of God." Bp Louth.

V. 2. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Deut. 4:26-28. 32:1. Ps. 49:1-4. 50:1-3.) The Lord, in this as in many other places, with peculiar majesty and sublimity, appeals to the whole creation, in the controversy between him and his people. He had brought them up with all the tenderness and attention of a parent, till they had arrived at full maturity; but they had ungratefully rebelled against him, and apostatized to worthless idols.—The word rendered "brought up," generally means exalted: God had greatly exalted Israel, which exceedingly aggravated the guilt of their rebellion. (Notes, Ex. 19:4-6. Deut. 4:6-8. 32:8-15. Ez. 16:9-22. Acts 13:16-19.)

V. 3. (Notes, Prov. 6:6-11. Jer. 8:4-7.) The most stupid of the domestic animals are observant of the hand by which, and the place where, they are fed, though the owner seeks only his own interest in his care of them: but the highly favoured people of God did not know or understand their immense obligations, nor consider their own true interest, which could only be secured by cleaving to him.—The Israelites, chosen by the mere favour of God, adopted as sons, promoted to the highest dignity; yet acknowledged not their Lord and their God, but despised his commandments; though in the highest degree equitable and just." Bochart in Bp. Louth.

V. 4. "They were not only wicked as their fathers, but totally corrupt, and by their evil examples corrupted others.—Every generation of Israel degenerated more and more, from the faith and piety of their ancestors: they were not only corrupted in their early years, but corrupters and tempters of others; a circumstance extremely affecting to those who mark the progress of impiety. In short, almost the whole nation were estranged from the Lord, and had turned their backs on him and on his holy service; and had alienated themselves from him. (Marg.)

V. 5, 6. The wickedness of the people was become so incorrigible that it would answer no purpose to inflict any further chastisement, seeing they would "revolt more and more;" and what did it avail to throw away medicines on the dying patient, when they only exasperated his disease? It might therefore be proper to let them alone, till ripe for utter destruction. (Notes, Jer. 5:3-6. 6:27-30. Matt. 15:12-14.)

voked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone away backward.

5 Why should ye be stricken any more? ye will revolt more and more. The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint.

6 From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and putrefying sores: they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment.

7 Your country is desolate, your cities are burned with fire: your land, strangers devour it in your presence, and it is desolate, as soverthrown by strangers.

8 And the daughter of Zion is left as a cottage in a vineyard, as a lodge in a garden of cucumbers, as a besieged city.

9 Except the Lord of hosts had left unto us a very small remnant, we should have been as Sodom, and we should have been like unto Gomorrah.

10 ¶ Hear the word of the Lord, ye rulers of Sodom; give ear unto the law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah:

11 To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the Lord: I am full of the burnt-offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he-goats.

12 When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread my courts?

13 Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with: it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting.

14 Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth: they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them.

15 And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when ye make many prayers I will not hear: your hands are full of blood.

Or the sentence may mean, that they were so covered with the wounds and bruises of their former smitings, that it might be inquired, where another stroke could be inflicted; or, why they would persist in those crimes, which ensured further punishment, when they were already in so miserable a situation.—The following metaphorical description, taken from the desperately diseased or wounded condition of the body, may relate either to the corrupt state of the Jews in respect of religion; or to their calamities. In the former sense, even the princes, and prophets, or priests, (the head and the heart of the body politic and ecclesiastical,) were altogether diseased, and faint as at the approach of death; religion and justice were expiring; idolatry, impurity, hypocrisy, and every kind of iniquity, were become almost universal; the disease had been so long increasing, and magistrates and ministers had so neglected the proper means of checking its progress, that the whole body was, as it were, ulcerated, putrefying, and tending to one general mortification. (Notes, Jer. 8:21, 22. 30:12-18. Ez. 34:2-6. Matt. 9:10-13.) The passage may be accommodated as an illustration of the total depravity of human nature, but ought by no means to be adduced as a proof of the doctrine; which it cannot be, except as the depraved state of Judah was a fact, which no other principles be accounted for.

V. 7-9. The prosperous state of Judah, during the reigns of Uzziah and Jotham, does not accord to the description here given; and therefore commentators have generally dated this chapter in the beginning of the reign of Ahaz; (Notes, 7:1-3. 2 Kings 16:5-9. 2 Chr. 28:5-8.) though it has been thought, that it might be written in the close of Jotham's reign. (2 Kings 15:37.)—The enemy so desolated the land, that Jerusalem alone was protected from the ravages; and that city was shut up, impoverished, and left alone; so that it resembled a hut erected to accommodate the gardeners, who during a few weeks watched their cucumbers and melons from being destroyed by the jackals, or foxes, or stolen during the night. Zion, with her children or inhabitants, thus cut off from communication with the neighbouring country, resembled a besieged city, or one taken by siege, as some read it.—The original will indeed bear either sense, without altering the text; but in general, whilst any instructive sense can be made of the Hebrew text, as it now stands, it behooves us to be very cautious how we sanction those who alter, without good authority, whatever does not accord with their views, and thus in fact give us their own opinions, instead of the "word of God." But few passages will be left which need alteration, if we adhere to this rule: and perhaps it will be better to consider them as trials of our modesty; than by conjecture, or on dubious authority, to devise new meanings and sentences, and add them to the word of God. (Note, Prov. 30:5, 6.)—The Lord of hosts, the God of armies, had a small remnant of pious servants at Jerusalem, and for their sakes he preserved the nation: otherwise as their crimes had equalled, so their punishment would have resembled, that of Sodom and Gomorrah. (Notes, Deut. 29:19-25. Lam. 4:6. Ez. 16:41-51. Rev. 17:12, v. 8.)

A very small remnant. (9) * A type of those few converts among the Jews, who, embracing the gospel, should escape both the temporal and eternal judgments, which came upon the rest of that nation, for rejecting Christ and his messengers. This remnant are called the Σωκτες in the New Testament. Luke 13:23. Acts 2:47. Lowth. (Note, Rom. 11:1-6.)

V. 10-15. From the mention of Sodom and Gomorrah, the prophet took occasion, with a holy indignation, to address the rulers of Judah, under the title of "the rulers of Sodom," and the citizens of Jerusalem, as "the inhabitants of Gomorrah." Many of them still attended to the ritual observances, in their sacrifices, and solemnities; but their numerous oblations, though such as the law required, were vain, and their very incense an abomination: nay, the Lord was not only weary of their solemn feasts, and hated them; but he would pay no regard to their multiplied prayers, though offered with great apparent devotion. And the reason was evident; because they were hypocrites: they neither regarded the typical intention of the sacrifices and ceremonies, nor used them as acts of holy worship, and as a means of sanctification: but proudly relied on the form as a meritorious service; and wickedly used their pretence of devotion, either as a cloak of atrocious murders and oppressions, or as a compensation for them. Their hands were full of blood-guiltiness, of which they did not repent, and from which they did not desist. (Notes, 66:34, 2 Sam. 15:7-11. Ps. 50:7-21. Prov. 15:9, 21:27. Jer. 6:18-20. 7:8-11. Am. 5:21-24. Mal. 2:14.)—"The solemn meeting," or the day of restraint, "Certain holy days, ordained by the law, were distinguished by a particular charge, that no servile work should be done therein." (Lev. 23:36. Num. 29:35. Deut. 16:8.) This circumstance clearly explains the reason of the name, the restraint, or the day of restraint, given to those days. Bp. Lowth.—The great day of atonement seems especially meant. (Lev. 9:1.)—Although God commanded these sacrifices for a time, as aids and exercises of their faith; yet, because the people had not faith and repentance, God detested them.

V. 16-20. This exhortation to the degenerate Jews implies, though it does not expressly mention, the mercy and grace of God through the promised Messiah; by which they might be enabled to do the duties here insisted on, and also be accepted in doing them. Attending to these most reasonable exhortations, their guilt, though the most atrocious which could be imagined, would be fully pardoned, and their national prosperity restored: otherwise their ruin was inevitable.—The words rendered "relieve the oppressed," are translated by some learned men "amend that which is corrupted;" but perhaps they mean, "make happy such as are bitter of soul."—The word, which is translated "reason together," signifies properly, for two contending parties to argue the case together; but here it seems to mean the effect or issue of such a debate, viz. the accommodating their differences. So God, upon the repentance and reformation of the people, engages to pardon all that is past, and look upon them with the same grace and favour as if they never had offended: for by their "sins being made white as snow" is meant, . . . the sinners themselves being thoroughly purged from guilt. Lowth. (Notes, Ps. 51:2. Ez. 36:25-27. Zech. 13:1. 1 Cor. 6:9-11. Rev. 1:4-6. v. 5. 7:13-17. v. 14.) It is plain, from this and other similar passages, that legal sacrifices could not atone even for external national crimes, where public reformation was generally neglected

' This kind of reasoning by the second table, the Scriptures use in many places against the hypocrites, who pretend most holiness and religion in word; but when the charity and love towards their brethren should appear, they declare that they have neither faith nor religion.' (Marg. Ref. Notes, 58:5-12. Jer. 7:5-11. Ez. 18:28-32. Am. 5:10-17. Mic. 6:3-15.)

V. 21-24. In the time of David, and in the former part of Solomon's reign, Jerusalem was indeed a holy city, a proper type of the true church, the faithful spouse of Christ: but, notwithstanding all her distinguished advantages, this once virtuous matron was become an infamous harlot, to the astonishment and regret of all the true servants of JEHOVAH; and, instead of wholly adhering to his worship, she was most grievously defiled with idolatry, and was also a receptacle of murderers and robbers. Nay, the apparent religion which remained, was hypocritical: dross and not silver; or at best wine mixed with water, by which it had lost its strength and flavour. (Notes, Jer. 6:27-30. 9:7. Lam. 4:1, 2. Ez. 22:18-22. Mal. 3:1-4.) Therefore "the LORD of hosts, the mighty One" who had so often delivered Israel, with most tremendous emphasis declared, "that he would ease him of his adversaries, and avenge him of his enemies." The expressions are taken from the uneasiness which men feel, when provoked to anger by multiplied insults, and the relief and pleasure which revenge seems to afford them. All that is discomposing and the effect of sinful passions, must be removed from our conception of the divine conduct, as thus delineated: but such language strongly marks God's abhorrence of sin, and his love of justice. (Notes, Ez. 5:13. 16:35-43.) He has no pleasure in the sufferings of wicked men: but, as Governor of the universe, he greatly delights in honouring his own law, and displaying his own righteous and holy character; and he will therefore avenge himself on all incorrigible transgressors.

Mixed with water. (22) 'It is remarkable, that whereas the Greeks and Latins by mixed wine, always understood wine diluted and lowered by water; the Hebrews on the contrary, generally mean by it wine made stronger and more enlivening, by the addition of higher and more powerful ingredients. . . . The eastern people to this day deal in artificial liquors of prodigious strength, the use of wine being forbidden.' Bp. Louth. (5:22. Prov. 23:30. Cant. 8:2.)—Wine mixed with water would therefore convey the idea of wine, debased and become worthless. The Septuagint renders the clause: 'Thy vintners (καπνιστοι) mix thy wine with water.' The apostle uses a word from the same root (καπηλευνες) in speaking of those who corrupt the gospel by base mixtures. (Note, 2 Cor. 2:14-17.)

V. 25-27. The Lord did not mean so to destroy a hypocritical and wicked nation, as to leave no remnant: but he foretold for the encouragement of the pious few, that "he would turn his hand upon Zion" to cleanse her, and on the incorrigible to punish them. (Ps. 81:14. Zech. 13:7. Heb.) His most tremendous judgments should be as the fire of a purifying furnace, to separate all dross and alloy of base metal from her silver; to destroy hypocrites from among her worshippers, and to make believers more holy and spiritual. (Notes, 21-24. Zech. 13:8, 9. 1 Pet. 1:6, 7. 4:12-19.) Then judges and counsellors, like the judges raised up to reform and deliver Israel, or rather like David and other pious princes and rulers, in her first and best days, should be raised up, under whom so blessed a change should take place, that Jerusalem should be called "The city of rightteousness, the faithful metropolis." For Zion and her worshippers should be redeemed from enemies and iniquities; and new converts added to her, by the righteous judgments which had been foretold. (Note, Zech. 12:6-8.)—"When God shall redeem Zion, and restore those that truly turn to him, he will make a remarkable discrimination between the righteous and the wicked; God's judgment will be visible in punishing the latter, and his mercy in saving the former." Louth.—The display of the divine justice, as well as mercy, in the way of the sinner's salvation, seems also to be referred to.—The calamities of Ahaz, Sennacherib's invasion, the distress which it occasioned, its surprising event, and Hezekiah's reformation, were accomplishments of this prediction: and so were the Babylonish captivity, the redemption of the captive Jews, and their consequent adherence to the worship of JEHOVAH.—The redemption of the spiritual Zion, by the righteousness and death of Christ, and by his powerful grace; her repeated deliverances by his righteous judgments on her enemies; her prosperity and increase under his government; and her comparative purity on earth, and perfect purity in heaven; indeed most fully accord to the meaning of this energetic language. Yet there is reason to expect a more literal and exact accomplishment of the prophecy, in respect of Israel as a nation, and the city Jerusalem, in the latter days. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Jer. 31:25-26, 35-40. Ez. 34:23-31. 37:24-28. 39:23-29. Hos. 3:4, 5.)

V. 28-31. The ruin of apostates, and of all the wicked, must accompany the purity and prosperity of the true church; and will come upon them suddenly, at once, and on all of them together, so that they cannot help each other. The idols, and the groves or gardens, which the Jews preferred to the worship of JEHOVAH at his temple, would shortly turn to their confusion. (Marg. Ref. Note, 66:15-18.)—The word, rendered "oaks," probably means some trees of the evergreen species: and it was predicted that the wicked Jews should become as one of them, when being blasted by excessive heat, all its leaves fade at once; and as a garden without water, which in those hot countries must very soon be utterly burnt up. Nay, the most potent of them, would become "as tow, and his work," (Marg.) "as a spark to set fire to it;" and thus they should burn together without being quenched. This may describe the wretched state of the Jewish nation, especially when Jerusalem was taken by the Chaldeans; and the destruction of the idols with the idolaters, so that the nation never afterwards relapsed into gross idolatry.—Then both the framers of idolatry and their devices shall perish together, however supported by secular power, or recommended by worldly grandeur. Louth.—The ruin of antichristianism, as well as pagan, idolatry, attended with dreadful judgments on the incorrigible idolaters, seems also predicted: but the language most emphatically describes the state of the wicked in another world; when all their idolized possessions, vain confidences, superstitions, hypocritical, and ostentatious works and services, as well as their wicked works, will terminate in confusion and anguish, and aggravate their tremendous doom. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9. The varied, persevering, and suitable methods, which the Lord, by his ministers, employs to check the progress of impiety and iniquity, to bring sinners to repentance, and to retain his people in his worship and service; when unsuccessful, eventually demonstrate the power of man's depravity, leave sinners more inexcusable in their crimes, and tend to manifest the justice of God in their punishment.

H. Ez. 32:

We should therefore seek his grace to render every means effectual to ourselves and others, with earnestness proportioned to the number of our peculiar advantages; else the gospel of Christ will become "a savour of death to us;" and the heavens and the earth will declare his righteousness in our condemnation.—Man, each man, owes his reasonable powers and valuable distinctions, to his Maker's goodness: he is upheld by his power, and feasted by his bounty, and treated as a favoured child; yet he alone, as a monster of ingratitude, spurns the authority of his gracious Friend and Father, and behaves towards him with contempt and enmity! The dull ox and ass, (as well as the more sagacious animals,) whilst they express a kind of gratitude to the hand which feeds them, judge and condemn the human race, who know not the truths, perfections, or will of their Creator, or who do not consider their folly and criminality in rebelling against him. Where then is the man who can justify himself before God, or even at the bar of his own conscience? If we were appointed to judge our own cause, and had matters fairly stated before us, and no part of the evidence suppressed; we should almost be constrained to take his part against ourselves: no wonder then, that at last "every mouth will be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God." (Note, Rom. 3:19, 20).—But the rebellion and ingratitude of those, who are favoured with his oracles and ordinances, are peculiarly aggravated: and the impiety and wickedness of nations professing Christianity display a sottishness, and a contempt of God, equally astonishing and detestable. With what justice and propriety, then, might JEHOVAH address this favoured land as he did Judah of old, "Ah, sinful nation! a people laden with iniquity!" Our degenerating from the faith, zeal, piety, purity, and patience, which marked our national character, during the progress of the reformation; into open infidelity, impiety, and licentiousness, fraud, and perjury, marks us to be "a people laden with iniquity." The early proficiency of large multitudes of our youth in vice and irreligion, and in tempting others to wickedness, mark them to be "children that are corrupters." In short, as a nation, we have generally "forsaken the LORD, provoked the Holy One of Israel to anger," and are estranged from him. The patience of God has indeed hitherto preserved us from proportionable calamities: we hope that it is not because he has given us up as incorrigible; "seeing we revolt more and more" in the midst both of judgments and mercies. But though it cannot be said, "Your country is desolate, your cities are burned with fire, your land, strangers devour it in your presence;" yet, were it not for a few honourable exceptions, it might be said, as to our religious character, "The whole head is sick, the whole heart is faint." The malignant distemper also breaks forth in every part, and pervades with dire progress, all orders and ranks of men: an impious and infidel contempt of the word and ordinances of God, appears every day more avowed: nay, even those who are maintained in affluence, to promote the cause of true Christianity, often stand forth in the opposite phalanx, or by their doctrines and examples betray her cause; nor does any one call them to account for so doing! So that the "wounds and bruises," under which the religion of the land lies gasping, "have not been closed, nor bound up, nor mollified with ointment." While we seem to prosper in our civil estate, "the daughter of Zion," the cause of the gospel, is left as a cottage in a vineyard, and "as a besieged city," against which the hosts of aliens encamp on every side, with proud menaces and boastings, as if they were about to swallow her up. "Except the LORD of hosts had left unto us a very small remnant, we should have become like Sodom and Gomorrah," in wickedness and in desolation; and doubtless the inhabitants of those cities will rise up in judgment, and condemn numbers in Britain, who are daring in their iniquity amidst so many superior advantages. (Note, Matt. 11:20-24).—How dreadful then must be the depravity of human nature, which grows so exceedingly wicked, under the most suitable means of becoming holy! Surely, in this respect too it may be said, "the whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint!" This evil nature is in every one of us: and no physician or medicine, but Jesus and his sanctifying Spirit, can restore us to spiritual health. Let us then, by faith and constant prayer, put our distempered souls into his hands, that "the wounds, bruises, and putrefying sores" may be mollified and bound up, and closed by his healing care. Thus alone can our ruin be prevented, and holiness and happiness be restored to our souls. Blessed be God, there is a remnant, we trust a greatly increasing remnant, (may he increase it more and more,) of true believers, for whose sake, and in answer to whose prayers, the Lord has hitherto spared us; and whose examples and endeavours may yet prevail to revive the power of godliness throughout our land. To them let us cordially attach ourselves, and join our prayers and endeavours with theirs. Nor should we despair, even if we saw the rulers and inhabitants of the land generally like those of Sodom. The cause is not lost, whilst any witnesses for the truth remain, to preach, and write, and protest, and pray, against prevailing impiety and infidelity; or to oppose a holy example to the torrent of iniquity and licentiousness. (P. O. Ps. 11:1.)

V. 10-20. Many are apt to think that none except infidels and profligates are in danger of impending vengeance: but, in fact, hypocrites are at least as deeply criminal as they. Indeed, "the form of godliness" has very generally been thrown aside among us, as an useless incumbrance. Yet it may be feared, that there are many, who attend places of public worship, nay, contribute largely to the expense of building and supporting them; who hear, or even preach, many sermons; who zealously profess and dispute about the great truths of the gospel; who are found stated communicants at the Lord's table, and even offer many prayers with apparent devotion; to whom the Lord may justly say, "To what purpose are all these services? I can have no delight in them, nor you any profit from them. Who has required persons of your character, and allowed habitual conduct, to appear before me, and tread my courts? I am wearied with and even loathe your worship, your sacraments, your costly and ostentatious services: affront me no more with your hateful and disgusting devotions, which are merely the cloak of injustice and impenitency. I will hear none of your hypocritical prayers; and your public fasts and solemn meetings are iniquity; for "your hands are full of blood," of fraud, oppression, and open or secret licentiousness."—Let us then "judge ourselves, that we be not judged of the Lord." Without a contrite and upright heart God will accept no sacrifice from us: if we allow ourselves in secret iniquity, or forbidden indulgence; or if we reject the salvation of Christ; our very prayers will be an abomination. Nor can any national regard to the externals of religion avert national judgments, so long as murder, and cruel oppression are sanctioned by law, or permitted to be perpetrated with impunity.—But, blessed be God, there is a "fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness," in which the most deeply criminal may wash and be made clean. To this sinners of every order in society are directed by the ministers of religion, with plain and energetic warnings and exhortations. By the grace of the gospel, the most enslaved sinner may "put away the evil of his doings from before the eyes of the LORD:" he may be enabled "to cease to do evil, and may learn to do well;" and may also find pardon and acceptance by faith in Jesus Christ. And when "faith worketh by love" of God and man, and he seeks "to do judgment, to relieve the oppressed," and to patronize the fatherless and widow, according to his station in society: this change of temper and conduct will prove him interested in all the blessings of salvation. Well then may JEHOVAH call upon us to draw near to him, that he may "reason with us;" for all his dispensations are most righteous and most reasonable. But his condescension in allowing us to reason with him cannot be sufficiently expressed; for all our conduct and all our objections are absurd and unreasonable in the extreme. What can be more rational than every precept of this holy law? What more reasonable than his call to repent and believe his gospel? If we be "willing and obedient," our sins, though of crimson and scarlet hue, will become as snow, or wool; and every blessing will be communicated; but if we continue to refuse and rebel, we must be consumed by his righteous vengeance; "for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it." O Lord, incline every one of our hearts to accept of thy mercy, and to live to thy glory!

V. 21-31. Could those, who saw the Christian church, in those pure times, when "great grace was upon all" the multitude of believers; and rulers and teachers were distinguished chiefly by their humility, disinterestedness, simplicity, patience and purity; could they, I say, arise from the dead, and survey the whole of the professing church of Christ; and observe the ambition, magnificence, avarice, luxury, carnal policy, and sloth, of numbers who appear as its rulers and teachers; surely they would exclaim with grief and astonishment, far greater than that of the prophet, "How is the faithful city become an harlot! It was full of judgment, righteousness lodged in it, but now—" (P. O. Rev. 18:9-19.) Alas! the silver is generally become brass, and the wine mixed with water, and horrible abuses almost every where prevail. For whilst men are seeking "every one his gain from his quarter," "loving gifts and following after rewards" no wonder that piety, justice, and mercy are little attended to. (Note, 56:9-12.) But we must leave the impenitent to the judgment of "the Mighty One of Israel," who will certainly "ease him of his adversaries, and avenge him of his enemies." And, whilst we are careful not to be found among them, let us rejoice in the prophetic assurance, that he will purely purge his church from all her dross and alloy, and furnish her with rulers and teachers, like the holy apostles, and martyrs of old, that she may be called "the City of righteousness, the Faithful City." Let us pray for the hastening of those blessed times, when Zion shall be redeemed from her spiritual bondage, by the Lord's righteous judgments on every antichristian opposer; and enlarged by converts innumerable, adorned with the robe of the Redeemer's righteousness, and walking in all holy obedience before him. But believers may expect still more glorious days at the end of the world; at the very time when all transgressors who forsake the Lord shall be confounded and consumed, and shall be ashamed of all those things, which here they desired and rejoiced in: when sinners will become, not only as the withered tree and the parched garden; but even the mightiest of them as tow, and their most splendid performances as fire, and "they shall burn together and none shall quench them."

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 1. This chapter and the two following form one distinct prophecy, or message from God to the Jews, which probably was delivered about the close of Uzziah's reign.

V. 2-5. (Notes, Mic. 4:1-5.) "The last days," or, "the latter days," signify the times of the Messiah, by the common consent of expositors, without excepting even those of the Jews; and generally the latter part of those times. (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, Jer. 48:47. 1 Tim. 4:1-5. 2 Pet. 3:1-4.)—As Solomon's temple, the centre of Israel's worship, was placed upon a mountain, to which the people resorted with their sacrifices from distant places; so the church of Christ, and its instituted worship, are represented as a temple built upon a mountain. (Notes, Ez. 40:2. Dan. 2:34, 35, 44, 45.) The establishment of his religion, by the abrogation of the Mosaic dispensation, and on the ruins of idolatry; and the advancement of his kingdom above all the kingdoms of the earth, are here predicted, under the emblem "of the mountain of the Lord's house being established on the top of the mountains, and exalted above the hills." The calling of the Gentiles, the success of the gospel in the apostles' days, and especially that far more extensive propagation of "all nations flowing to this mountain of the Lord's house," as all rivers flow into the ocean. The earnestness of each new convert to bring others with him, to the knowledge of Christ, and to a life of holiness, is expressed, by the people inviting one another to "go up to the house" of God, to be instructed in his ways. (Notes, 66:19-23. Jer. 31:3, 7. Zech. 8:20-23.) When apostles and evangelists, of the Jewish nation, went forth to preach the gospel to the Gentiles, "a law went forth out of Zion, and the word of God from Jerusalem;" for Christ is a Prince as well as a Saviour, and his word contains precepts to be obeyed, as well as truths to be believed. (Note, 1 Thes. 4:1-5.) By the establishment of the gospel, the Lord becomes Judge among the nations, who willingly submit to his authority, and make him the arbiter of their differences; and by his rebukes and convictions, the instructions that he gives, and the grace which he bestows, he promotes peace as well as purity. If all men were consistent Christians, there could be no war: as far as Christianity has prevailed on earth, wars have been conducted with far greater humanity, than before: as far as it prevails in our hearts it disposes us to peace and love: and we may assuredly expect, ere long, such a general promulgation of the gospel, as will literally fulfil the terms of this prophecy, in the universal prevalence of peace and industry; and then war shall never more be either a science, or an occupation. (Notes, 9:6, 7, v. 7. 11:6-9. Ps. 72:3-7. Luke 2:8-14, v. 14. Rev. 20:4-6.) There needs no other proof, that the grand accomplishment of this prophecy is reserved for some future period, than the consideration, that nothing in any measure answerable to such forcible expressions, has yet occurred on earth.—The prophet closes his prediction, by exhorting his people to avail themselves of their advantages, and not to reject the gospel when preached to them; for these prophecies were intended to instruct future generations.—This prophecy will not receive its utmost completion, till the destruction of the four monarchies, (Dan. 2:35.) and the fulness of the Jews and Gentiles are come into the church. (Mic. 4.) Yet both these prophecies may be partly fulfilled in the several advances which Christ's kingdom makes in the world, who is described as "going forth conquering and to conquer." Rev. 6:2. Lowth.—This seems to have been a maxim in interpreting prophecies, received among the Jews before Christ's time; that wherever they observed an imperfect completion of a prophecy in an historical event, which no way answered the lofty expressions and extensive promises, which the natural sense of the text imported, there they supposed the times of the Messiah to be ultimately intended, "in whom all the promises of God are yea, and amen." To prevent any misunderstanding, it may be proper likewise to take notice, that this mystical sense of the prophecies is now and then, but not so fitly, called a secondary sense: not as if it were less principally intended by the prophets; but rather with respect to the time, because it is the last or ultimate completion of their predictions. Ibid.—The times of the Messiah are the times which intervene between his coming and the end of the world.—Whether the restoration of Israel to their own land, and of Jerusalem to its pristine glory, of being the capital city of the religious world, be intended, events will show; but certainly something far beyond the crushing of the opposing powers is meant, by men's "learning war no more." (Notes, Ez. 38: 39. Rev. 19:11-21. 20:1-6.) "The prophet addresses himself to those Jews of later times, that should live, when the glad tidings of the gospel were published, and exhorts them to make use of those means of grace, which God would so plentifully afford them; and not continue stubborn or refractory, as their forefathers had done. Lowth.

Shall beat their swords, &c. (4) The prophet Joel has reversed the figurative language, in predicting the wars, by which the millennium will be introduced. (Note, Joel 3:9-17, v. 10.)

V. 6-9. The prophet was led, from the view of the glorious times, which were at length to arrive, to reflect on the deplorable state of religion among the Jews in his days. He foresaw that the Lord was about to reject his people, and speaks to him of it as if already done; and he proceeds to assign the reasons of the divine conduct. He observes, that they were "replenished from the east," with idols, or idolaters, or necromancers; with vices, luxuries, heathenish fashions, and every thing which could minister to pride and sensual indulgence. (Note, 2 Chr. 9:13-21, v. 21.) They imitated the Philistines in divination and witchcraft: they took delight in the children of strangers, whom they employed and imitated; and with whom they contracted marriages: and perhaps they even educated their own children after the manner of the heathen nations. Whilst the Lord prospered them in their temporal estate, their grand object was by every method to accumulate treasure; and they multiplied chariots and horses contrary to the law, (Note, Deut. 17:16.)—This account of their prosperity accords very well with the reign of Uzziah; (2 Chr. 26:1-15.) but he did not sanction idolatry. It seems, however, that the land was also full of idols, which the people, in the lower and higher ranks, made and worshipped secretly. In short their wickedness loudly called for divine judgments; and the prophet says, "Therefore thou wilt not forgive them," as it might more literally be rendered. (Note, 27:7-11, v. 11.) "Plenty of silver and gold could only arise from their commerce; particularly from that part of it which was carried on by the Red Sea. This circumstance seems to confine the prophecy within the limits above mentioned," (the reigns of Uzziah and Jotham,) "while the port of Elath was in their possession: it was lost under Ahaz, and never recovered." Ep. Louth. (2 Kings 16:6.)

V. 10-18. The Jews were here solemnly warned to prepare for most tremendous judgments. Let them then hide themselves in those caverns, which were found in the rocks; (Notes, Judg. 6:2,3. Luke 23:26-31. Heb. 11:35-38. Rev. 6:12-17.) as dismayed by the display of the majesty of God, who was coming to take vengeance on them, and to exalt his own glory and authority, by abasing them for their pride; and especially the most exalted and ambitious of them. For that day of his vengeance would peculiarly affect the haughty, and the eminent, who were advanced above others, as the stately cedars on the lofty summits of Lebanon, or as the oaks in the forests of Bashan, or as the mountains and hills above the lowly valleys. And, whilst all their fortifications were levelled, and all those things which ministered to their pride and luxury were destroyed; their distinctions would vanish, and they would become sensible of their weakness, guilt, and misery: and by this the Lord would utterly destroy idolatry from among them.—But of what day does the prophet speak? It may be accommodated to any of those days, when God arises to execute vengeance on guilty nations. The desolations of Judah by the Israelites and Syrians, in the reign of Ahaz, (Notes, 2 Chr. 28:5-8.) and the ravages of Sennacherib, might form a prelude to the accomplishment of the prediction: but the taking of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, and the Babylonian captivity, seem especially intended, when idolatry was indeed entirely abolished among the Jews. The final destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the rejection and dispersion of the Jewish nation, for their opposition to the gospel, might also be referred to: and our thoughts are naturally led forward to the destruction of all antichristian enemies, which will introduce the glorious period before predicted; (Notes, Rev. 19:11-21.) and to the final consummation of all things, and the solemnities of the day of judgment.—"The prophets often take occasion to represent the terrors of the last day, from the particular judgment, which should befall some one nation. . . . Bochart doth probably guess that Tarshish, in its primary signification, was a port in Spain, called afterwards Tartessus. But it likewise appears, (by comparing 1 Kings 22:48, with 2 Chr. 20:36.) that there was a place of the same name near Ophir, famous for its gold, which Ophir the same learned person places in India. . . . Ships of Tarshish signify in Scripture any trading or merchant ships: accordingly here the Septuagint render the words, "ships of the sea," as our old English translation does, Ps. 48:6. Louth. (Note, 1 Kings 10:22.)

V. 19-21. When God should arise "to shake terribly the land," and the affrighted inhabitants should seek to hide themselves in caves of the earth; they would throw away their idols, even those made of gold and silver, as a useless incumbrance; and leave them in any deserted corner "to the moles and bats," that they might flee for their lives, and escape the vengeance of the Lord. (Notes, 30:22, 31:6,7, 46:1,2. Zeph. 1:18.)

V. 22. The Jews were prone to place an idolatrous confidence in their heathen neighbours, with whom they made alliances. Thus they relied on the Egyptians, Syrians, and Assyrians, at different times; but they and all men are here called upon to cease from depending on mortal man, who would not be able to help them when in extreme danger, and in whose profession of friendship and fidelity no confidence could be placed. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 3:1-9, Ps. 62:8-10, v. 9. 146:3,4. Jer. 17:5-8.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9. The unwearied efforts of Satan and his servants to exalt idolatry, infidelity, heresy, and iniquity, and to depress truth and righteousness, may for a time succeed, and then infidels and profligates will triumph: but their joy must be shortlived; for the cause of God shall finally prevail; all the nations of the earth shall flow into the church of Christ, and become his worshippers and servants; and all which has hitherto been done, is only an earnest of what remains to be performed in due season. But whilst we wait and pray for those glorious days, when the kingdoms of the earth shall become the kingdoms of Jesus; and all their inhabitants, being humbled and changed by his grace, shall live in equity, truth, and love; cultivate the arts of useful industry; "study to be quiet and to do their own business," and "learn war no more;" let us avail ourselves of the light afforded us, and come and walk in it. Let us remember, that when true religion greatly flourishes, men bestow great diligence, and take much delight, in going up to the house of the LORD, and in exciting others to accompany them: that they greatly desire, and confidently expect, that He should "teach them his ways," in order that they may walk in them; and that they gladly receive his law from mount Zion, as their rule of duty, welcome the authority as well as the salvation of the Redeemer, and submit to his rebukes, as well as desire his consolations. And let us remember also, that the humble disciple of Christ is, in every age, a harmless and blameless, a benevolent and quiet person, who follows peace and holiness, forbearing and forgiving others, as "Christ hath forgiven him:" inasmuch, that if all were of his temper, wars and violent contentions, public or private, must be annihilated.—But, while we expect more glorious times to the church of God; we cannot but behold with deep regret the present state of the world, and of the visible church. Alas! we need not wonder, that the Lord seems in many places to have forsaken nominal Christians; when we consider to what a degree many cities and countries professing Christianity are replenished with the idolatries, superstitions, vices, luxuries, and ostentatious magnificence of the Gentiles; copy their worst fashions, and form the most unnatural coalitions with the children of strangers. Nay, if we only regard the condition of this Protestant land: amidst the splendour and affluence to which we have arrived, have we not "been replenished from the east," with every species of vice and luxury? Do we not, as a nation, so delight "in the children of strangers," that none else can properly prepare our feasts, or our diversions, and administer to our pride or pleasure? And though our land is not "full of idols," in the literal sense, yet it is full of idolized riches and possessions: and men are in general so occupied about their gains or indulgences, that the Lord, and his truths, ordinances, and precepts, are forgotten, or despised. Whatsoever may be the event of these things as to the land, assuredly God will not forgive those, who persist in abusing themselves by their lusts, and refuse to humble themselves before him; but will inflict on them the most dreadful punishment denounced in his holy word.

V. 10-22. Alas! what can wealth and splendour avail, when the Lord arises to take vengeance on guilty nations? His awful dispensations are especially levelled against those who are haughty and lofty, to bring them low; their pre-eminence and affluence mark them out as the most distinguished prey of the rapacious; and they would then gladly compound, to redeem their lives with their choicest treasures. (Notes, Prov. 138. Jer. 41:3-8.) But the power and indignation of the Lord are chiefly to be dreaded: and in what secret cavern will men hide themselves from his all-seeing eye? He marks out the proud, as the objects of his jealousy, and has determined, "that the lofty looks of men shall be humbled; that He alone may be exalted," either in the submission, or the ruin, of every daring rival of his glory. (Notes, Dan. 4:34-37. 5:18-24. Luke 14:7-11. 18:9-14. Jam. 4:4-6.) And if temporal judgments are often so tremendous, what will be the case at the day of judgment, "when the heavens and the earth shall pass away, and no place be found for them?" Whither will the sinner then flee to hide himself, "for fear of the LORD, and for the glory of his majesty?" Then his idolized gold, silver, and costly furniture, will appear as worthless as the mire in the street; the account to be given of the acquisition and use of them, will burden his heart; and his iniquity committed about them will exceedingly enhance his condemnation. Happy are they who now flee from the wrath to come; who take shelter in Christ, the Rock of salvation; who are humbled before God in true repentance, and desire that God alone may be exalted in their hearts, and glorified in showing them mercy; who willingly renounce all worldly interests and carnal connexions, and cease from dependence on men, and expectations from them, however powerful and friendly; that they may give up themselves to the Lord, to serve him in righteousness all their future days! Such persons will have nothing to fear in those terrible seasons, when the wicked shall in vain call upon the rocks to fall upon them and hide them from the wrath of their offended Judge. Let us then make this our grand concern, and be ready to renounce all for Christ, and to venture or suffer for his sake: and let us cease from expecting help from man, or making any mortal our oracle, our standard, or our confidence; for man is not only feeble, deceitful, and vain, but his breath is in his nostrils, and death will soon deprive him of all his power to help or to harm us. Wherein then is he to be accounted of, that we should, from a desire of his smile, or fear of his frown and reproach, offend the almighty and eternal God, who alone is able to save or to destroy?

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1-9. These verses continue the subject of the preceding chapter, and describe those calamities which would abase the haughty, terrify the daring, and show the folly of idolatry, and confidence in men. (Note, 2:22.)—The gradual approach of the siege and destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans is principally foretold; and the history of that event, with the Prophecy and Lamentations of Jeremiah, form the best comment upon it: but that destruction itself was an emblem and forerunner of the final destruction of the city by the Romans. The prophet calls on all men to behold and observe, for "the Lord," the Governor, "even JEHOVAH of hosts," JEHOVAH, the God of armies,

6 When a man shall take hold of his brother of the house of his father, saying, Thou hast clothing, be thou our ruler, and let this ruin be under thy hand:

7 In that day shall he swear, saying, I will not be man healer; for in my house is neither bread nor clothing: make me not a ruler of the people.

8 For Jerusalem is ruined, and Judah is fallen: because their tongue and their doings are against the LORD, to provoke the eyes of his glory.

9 The show of their countenance doth witness against them; and they declare their sin as Sodom, they hide it not: Wo unto their soul! for they have rewarded evil unto themselves.

was about to deprive Jerusalem and Judah of every stay and support; as well as to reduce the inhabitants to the greatest extremities for want of bread and water. He would speedily cause to cease from among them able commanders and valiant soldiers, active magistrates, faithful teachers and prophets, prudent and experienced counsellors, honourable rulers, expert artificers or builders, who might fortify the city; (Note, 2 Kings 24:8-16, v. 14.) and eloquent orators who might influence the people to unite for their own defence; and their very princes should be mere children in years and want of experience. This was fulfilled after the death of Josiah, by the succession of his sons and grandson in their early youth, and by their foolish and infatuated counsels. During those feeble reigns, the people had license to oppress each other, and all distinctions in society seemed to be abolished; so that children and the meanest of the people, treated the most ancient and honourable with insolence and contempt. 'The usual effects of a weak and unsettled government; when faction grows too hard for justice, and seditious men dare openly to insult those who are in authority.' Louth. (Notes, Prov. 28:23. Ec. 10:16-19.) In such circumstances, offices of trust and honour would become so burdensome, that none could be induced willingly to fill them: whilst every one would see the necessity of some persons exerting themselves to repress internal distractions, and to provide for the public security. Yet the people would be so impoverished, that very few could bear the expense of the magistracy: so that, if any one was decently clothed, that would be deemed a considerable qualification for authority: and his brethren would be ready to lay hold of him, and almost constrain him to be a ruler, and to endeavour to repair the ruined state of the community. But every one would protest against so desperate an undertaking; and be ready to make oath, that he was not in circumstances for such a charge, having neither bread nor clothing at home, adequate to the expense. Or, every one would be so concerned for his present ease, and so anxious to shift for his own safety, that no one would trouble himself about the public. For, in fact, the city and land would be ruined and desolated: because their words and works had been so daringly rebellious against the Lord, and even before his glorious eyes, in his holy city and at his temple, as if they had determined to provoke him to wrath. Nay, their proud and insolent looks, and avowed purposes of wickedness, rendered them like the abominable inhabitants of Sodom; so that they had merited the severest vengeance, and had brought their calamities upon their own head. (Marg. Ref. on 1:9, 10. Notes, Jer. 6:13-15, v. 15. 44:15-18.) 'It is customary, through all the east,' says Sir J. Chardin, 'to gather together an immense quantity of furniture and clothes; for their fashions never alter.' Princes and great men are obliged to have a great stock of such things in readiness, for presents upon all occasions. . . . A great quantity of provision for the table was equally necessary.' Bp. Louth. (1 Kings 4:22, 23. Neh. 5:17, 18.)—The prudent. (2) cop, 'the d-viner.'

V. 10, 11. There was a remnant of pious persons among the Jews, even in the worst of times: and though the prophets did not effect a national reformation, so as to prevent public calamities, they doubtless were instrumental in bringing many individuals to repentance. It was therefore proper, that such persons should be encouraged: and they were here by the express command of God assured that, notwithstanding national crimes and judgments, however great and many, every upright believer would be graciously accepted and recompensed, and have the comfort and benefit of his righteousness: whilst the wo denounced upon the wicked was 11 *Wo unto the wicked! it shall be ill with him; for the reward of his hands shall be given him.

12 ¶ *As for my people, children are thy oppressors, and women rule over them. O my people, they which lead thee cause thee to err, and destroy the way of thy paths.

13 The LORD standeth up to plead, and standeth to judge the people.

14 The LORD will enter into judgment with the ancients of his people, and the princes thereof: for ye have beaten up the vineyard; the spoil of the poor is in your houses.

15 *What mean ye that ye beat my people to pieces, and grind the faces of the poor? saith the Lord God of hosts.

16 ¶ Moreover, the LORD saith, because the daughters of Zion have haughty, and walk with stretched-forth necks, and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they go, and making a tinkling with their feet:

17 Therefore the LORD will smite with a scab the crown of the head of the daughters of Zion, and the LORD will discover their secret parts.

V. 12-15. It was time for the Lord to interpose: for even children and women ruled over his people; (either weak and effeminate persons; or bad women, by their influence with those who administered public affairs;) nay, their teachers led them astray, and, by their false doctrines, and opposition to the true prophets, obstructed and destroyed the way in which men ought to have walked. (Note, Matt. 23:13.) The Lord was therefore determined to stand up and plead his own cause, and to enter into judgment with the people; especially with their elders and princes, who were notorious for robbery and oppression. For what could they mean, who might to have been the support of justice, and the guardians of the poor, by enslaving, and cruelly beating, and almost starving them; so that their very countenances showed how they were crushed, and nearly ground to powder by their exactions? (Notes, Am. 5:10-13. 8:4-10. Mic. 2:1-3. 3:8-12. 6:10-15.) *The words, (translated "children are thy oppressors,") may be rendered thy oppressors glean them; i. e. take from them the poor remainder of their substance, which the former calamities had left. The word is used for gleaning grapes after the main vintage is already gathered, Deut. 24:21. . . . "They that lead thee. . . . The margin reads, "They that call thee blessed;" i. e. the false prophets, who sooth thee up in thy sins, and foretell nothing but peace and prosperity. Louth. (Note, 30:8-11. Jer. 28:8, 9.)

V. 16, 17. The prophet next reproved the women of Jerusalem, especially those in superior stations. It might indeed have been expected that "the daughters of Zion" would be sober, decent, and modest in their attire, and adorned with holiness: but they resembled the wanton courtesan, instead of imitating those holy women of old who trusted in God. (Note, 1 Tim. 2:9, 10. P. O. 9-15. Note, 1 Pet. 3:1-4. P. O. 1-7.) They walked with stretched-forth necks, to show themselves, to gaze, and to be gazed on; and with wanton eyes, set off with artificial painting of the eyelids, inviting the beholders to accost them. Pride and affected delicacy, nay a total want of modesty, and regard to decorum, were shown in all their motions; whilst, after the fashion of their heathen neighbours, they wore little bells in their shoes, the tinkling of which announced their approach. *Some interpret this of chains, like a sort of trammels put upon their feet, which hindered these nice ladies from making too large strides. . . . But the words which describe the women's ornaments, in this, and the following verses, are of a very doubtful signification, the modes of every age and country varying so often, that the succeeding fashion makes the former to be quickly forgotten, and the words that express it to be outdated. Louth. But the Lord was determined to disgrace and expose them for this vanity and wantonness: some loathsome disease should be sent utterly to destroy their comeliness; and, being taken captive, stript, and sold for slaves, they should experience the most shocking and distressing treatment from their inhuman conquerors. (Notes, 10:2-4. 47:1-3. Jer. 13:22.)

V. 18-26. The prophet here proceeds to enumerate the various ornaments, in which his countrywomen prided themselves, but of which they would shortly be deprived. (The word rendered "bravery," implies, splendour or magnificence.) It is not necessary to attempt the explanation of the terms, and indeed little satisfactory can be advanced, on many articles of this very singular inventory; and nothing interesting, without an inadequate degree of labour, merely in a matter of curiosity. The fashions of those ages doubtless varied much from those of our times; but human nature was the same. (Note, Ez. 16:9-14.) The Lord was so displeased with the pride and ostentation of the females, that he joined it with the impiety and oppression of the princes, as a reason for his judgments on the land; and he declared that he would so punish them, that a loathsome smell, through disease and squalid neglect, should be substituted in the place of their costly perfumes; rent and tattered garments, instead of their beautiful girdles; sackcloth instead of their fine linen; and a skin scorched, and even blistered, by the burning sun, instead of that beauty of which they were so vain: for the forces of the Jews being utterly vanquished, Jerusalem would be levelled with the ground; which event is represented under the idea of a desolate female seated upon the earth. Jerusalem is here described as a woman bereaved of her children, and lamenting over them in this melancholy posture. And thus she was represented in a medal coined by Vespasian's order, after the destruction of that city by the Romans. Louth.—The prophet, indeed, more immediately foretells the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans: but the representation would equally suit either catastrophe. (Marg. Ref.)—Nose-jewels. (21.) PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11. If men do not "stay themselves on God," he will at length remove from them all other supports; and, as the body soon languishes and dies, from which "the staff of bread, and the stay of water," are utterly withheld; so the soul, which has not learned to trust in God, must fall into entire misery, when separated from its worldly pleasures and possessions.—It is vain for nations to rely on able statesmen and chieftains; on valiant soldiers, prudent counsellors, or eloquent orators: for, when the Lord pleases, "he taketh away their breath, and they die," in the very crisis when their aid is wanted; or, if they live, their wisdom, courage, or success, may vanish at once, and disappoint every expectation formed from them. And what benefit can individuals or communities expect from true prophets, or faithful teachers, whose admonitions they neglect? or from those false prophets, "who speak peace when there is no peace?" (Note, Ez. 13:10-16.)—The Lord has various ways of punishing obstinate transgressors: he gives up offending nations to foolish and feeble governors, and to distracted counsels: he leaves men to their selfish passions, to oppress and punish each other; and he corrects the aged and honourable, who despise him, by means of the insolence of their juniors and inferiors.—In times of heavy calamity, when little can be expected in exalted stations, except trouble and expense men generally despise them, even though there be a prospect of doing good. For most are aware, that rulers should be "healers," and should aim to compose distractions, and promote the public good: yet few seek and use authority for these purposes; or choose to sacrifice personal interest to genuine benevolence. However, though one nation, city, or company of professed Christians, after another, be ruined; we have a Ruler, who is also our Brother, who has unsearchable riches, and almighty power, and immeasurable love: he is indeed "a Healer," and has undertaken our ruined cause, and given himself a ransom for our souls: in his hand we are safe, and his true church, and every believer, will certainly obtain complete deliverance. But profession and external advantages will only aggravate the crimes of those, who sin as in God's more immediate presence, and "provoke the eyes of his glory" by their wicked words and actions. And men should remember, that their impudence and insolence in wickedness, and their daring looks, which "they declare their sin as Sodom," will testify against them, and prove that "they have rewarded evil to themselves;" when the Lord shall denounce and execute vengeance upon them. But blessed be God, there is abundant encouragement to the righteous to trust him, and for sinners to repent and return to him. However his providential dispensations may vary, he will invariably bless his people, who shall reap the fruit of their faith and piety; and he will punish his impenitent enemies according to their works.

V. 12—26. Our righteous Lord has always wise and holy reasons for his severest judgments, as it will be made manifest in due time:—Rulers, nobles, and teachers also, are not unfrequently ringleaders in ungodliness, and the great promoters of wickedness in church and state: and when authority falls into hands of men destitute of piety and justice, and the instructors of the people are "blind guides," who oppose and "pervert the right ways of the Lord," it may be expected that he will stand up to execute vengeance. But he knows how to distinguish between the righteous and the wicked, the tempted and the tempters, and the different degrees of guilt in men's conduct: he will judge impartially, as well as punish severely; and he will call men to a strict account for all their wealth and power, and the use which they made of them. (Notes, Matt. 25:14—30. Notes, & P. O. Luke 16:1—13.) Many, indeed, who eat up the vineyard of the poor, and embellish their splendid palaces with the gains of extortion and oppression, elude human justice. But what do professed Christians mean, by beating and persecuting the people of God, and "grinding the faces of the poor?" Do they indeed intend to bring on themselves the fierce wrath of the Lord, who is the Patron and Advocate of the afflicted and oppressed? (Note, Prov. 14:31.)—Nor let it be thought that the Lord disregards the conduct of those females, who are chiefly remarkable for their vanity and dissipation. He watches over, and registers, all their thoughts and words, and every wanton look; and all their affected and ostentatious delicacy, the expression of their pride and self-admiration. Especially he notes with abhorrence such wantonness and haughtiness in "the daughters of Zion," in women professing the gospel. He does not deem these indifferent or trivial matters, as many speak of them: but he, as it were, keeps an inventory of all their ornaments; and, by his prophets and servants, protests against that fondness for external show, and that desire of being admired and flattered, and of becoming temptations to others, which are the sources of this vanity. The profuse expense also of money, and of still more precious time, to the neglect of piety, charity, and even justice; to the ruin of families, and the subversion of all distinction of rank and society, meet his most decided disapprobation. The occasion, which these vanities afford for temptations to still further crimes, in order to support the expense of them; the violation of his holy day resulting from them; and the abominable practice of coming to places of worship, as to a theatre, on which to exhibit their vain decorations; whilst those, who should be worshipping, or hearing the word of God, are employed in admiring, envying, or making remarks on their finery: all these, and innumerable more evils arise from this contagious folly, which is far too generally tolerated in our congregations; but which will eventually eat out the life of godliness, where not opposed and protested against, as inconsistent with the word of God. Without all doubt, the more care people take to have their souls "beautified with salvation," and to do good to their poor brethren; the less time and money will they waste in this manner. If indeed be beautiful and glorious, and "the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely, for them that are escaped of Israel."

3 And it shall come to pass that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem:

Christians are bound to "redeem their time," "improve their talents," refuse conformity to the world, and "to do all things to the glory of God;" surely some regard should be paid to the scriptural examples and exhortations on this subject; and "women professing godliness" should be an entire contrast to these wanton daughters of Zion, in their deportment and apparel! If any despise, or be offended by admonitions of this kind; perhaps the Lord may in this world visit them with such disease, poverty, and calamity, as may convince them of their sin and folly. Death, however, will soon strip the poor body of all its ornaments, and bereave it of all its comeliness: then, indeed, there will be a stink instead of a perfume; and all that taste and elegance, which have been for a moment admired, will be changed for the cold grave, for putrefaction, and the consuming worm. And what will such ornaments and distinctions avail at the resurrection, and the day of judgment; when every one, without respect of rank or sex, must give an account of the things done in the body, whether good or evil? May every reader henceforth renounce such childish vanities, as well as more gross iniquities, and seek that beauty and that adorning, which will endure, brighten, and purify for ever; which, at the hour of death, will render the soul meet for the company of holy angels and will ensure to the body a glorious resurrection, in the image and likeness of our exalted Redeemer, to be with him for ever in his heavenly kingdom.

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. I. This verse should not have been separated from the preceding chapter, as it evidently relates to the same subject. When Jerusalem was besieged by the Chaldeans, and after it was taken, (for those times seem to be intended,) the young men were generally destroyed; (3:25.) but the young women survived in very disproportionate numbers, and had little prospect of being married: and, as the unmarried state was generally deemed reproachful among the Jews, it is foretold, that in those circumstances they would disregard the ordinary rules of decorum, and many of them together importunately solicit the same man to take them in marriage, that they might bear his name and be exempted from the reproach: and that the expense might not be an objection, they would undertake to maintain themselves. (Marg. Ref.) The conduct here predicted is so contrary to female modesty, and to the aversion which women feel to share a husband's affections, with rivals, that it strongly marks both the peculiarity of their circumstances, and the impropriety of their deportment.—Reproach, &c.] Euripides thus introduces Polyxene, when led away to be sacrificed, exclaiming, "Without a husband, without marriage, which it behooved me to obtain!" (Note, Judg. 11: 34—40.)

V. 2. The Lord did not intend to destroy either the family of David, or the seed of Israel; but purposed that they should again shoot forth and prosper.—Either Zerubbabel of David's line, or Jeshua of Aaron's line, might be called "the branch of the Lord:" and the plenty produced by the land for the returning Jews after the captivity may be foretold; but these can only be as types and feeble shadows; for the expressions are so peculiar, that they must be applied to the Messiah, and the Christian dispensation. The Messiah is repeatedly called "the Branch;" (Notes, 11:1. Jer. 23:5, 6. Ez. 17:22—24. Zech. 3:8. 6:12, 13.) and this "Branch of the Lord" is altogether beautiful and glorious; or "Beauty and Glory;" (Marg.) his human nature is the most excellent and beautiful production of the earth; or "the fruit of the earth" may mean, the blessed fruits of his mediation, which belong to the remnant of true believers. (Notes, 45:8. Ps. 85:10—13.) But not only the establishment of his kingdom in the times of the apostles; but its enlargement also, by the gathering of the dispersed Jews into the church, seems predicted. Then they will see that the Branch which they despised, is indeed "beautiful and glorious;" and his fruit, which they neglected, truly "excellent and comely" for them. We shall have frequent opportunities of showing that the prophets use the expression "In that day," with a latitude thus large; for with the Lord "a thousand years are but as one day." This phrase often denotes in Isaiah 'not the same time with that, which was last mentioned, but an extraordinary season, remarkable for some signal events of Providence; called elsewhere by way of excellency, "The day of the Lord;" (Comp. 2:11, 12. 10:20. 17:7. 19:18.) just as that day denotes the day of judgment, in the New Testament, as a time of all others most remarkable. (See 2 Thes. 1:10. 2 Tim. 1:12, 18. 4:8.) ... Even Grotius ... acknowledges (in his notes on 14:21.) that it is usual for the prophets to pass from the threatenings that relate to their own times, to the promises which belong to the times of the gospel. . . . Them that are escaped.] This may be partly understood of those that were converted by the preaching of Christ and his apostles, and thereby escaped the vengeance which involved the rest of the nation; (see Acts 2:40. 1 Thes. 2:16.) but I apprehend it is chiefly meant of those Jews which shall be converted at the end of the world, (when the obstinate and incorrigible shall be destroyed,) and shall return home from their several dispersions. (Comp. 27:12,13. 45:20. 66:19. Ez. 20:34-43.) Louth—The words plainly point at the conversion of the Jews in the latter ages of the world, and the flourishing state of the church, which shall follow it.

V. 3, 4. The Jews relapsed no more into idolatry after the captivity; and they were greatly reformed, and had much true religion among them. The daughters of Zion, also, who had thought themselves very delicate when the Lord saw them to be very filthy, were purified by the captivity; and the innocent blood which had been shed was purged out of Jerusalem by those desolating judgments. (Notes, Ez. 22:18-22. 24:9-14.) Yet this was only a shadow of more glorious blessings. That "remnant, according to the election of grace," (Note, Rom. 11:1-6.) which forms the true church, is a holy people, and they are written or enrolled as the living citizens of Jerusalem; ^{whose} names are written in the book of life, among God's elect, to whom the promises to God's people peculiarly belong. (See Ps. 69:28. Ez. 13:9. Phil. 4:3. Rev. 3:5. 21:27.) The phrase alludes to the registers which were kept of the Jewish tribes and families. Ezra 2:59. Louth—The Jews who embraced the gospel in the apostles' days, were, and the descendants of that nation who shall hereafter be restored to their place in the church shall be, washed from the guilt and pollution of their sins; and especially from their blood-guiltiness in murdering the prophets, and in crucifying the Lord of glory. (Notes, Zech. 12:9-14. 13:1,7-9.) And this effect is produced, not merely by outward calamities, but by the Holy Ghost, rendering these effectual, as "a Spirit of judgment, and "a Spirit of burning;" that is, as convincing and humbling the sinner, leading him to judge and condemn himself, and to hate and oppose his sins; and thus, like purifying fire, consuming the dross, and transforming the soul into his own holy likeness. (Notes, Mal. 3:1-4. 4:1. Matt. 3:11,12. John 16:8-11. Acts 2:2,3.)

V. 5, 6. The pillar of cloud and fire was Israel's protection, guide, and honour, in passing through the wilderness: and it is here predicted, that God would equally take care of all the habitations of his people, as well as all their assemblies for public worship. (Notes, Ez. 13:21,22. 40:36-48.) When he puts his glory on them, by a new creation into that holiness, which is his own glory, (Note, 2 Cor. 3:17,18.) he places them under his special protection; as the splendid curtains of the tabernacle were covered by those of goats' hair, and of badgers' skins. (Note, Ez. 26:7-14.) Thus he defends the church and every true believer from temptation and persecution, and from all perils in life and death. (Notes, 25:3-5. 32:1,2,16-20. Zech. 2:1-5, v. 5.)—As a prophecy this will receive a more signal accomplishment in the times predicted.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It frequently happens, that those who suffer for their sins, are more careful to avoid outward inconveniences than to obtain forgiveness: and instead of being ashamed of their crimes, are more solicitous to avoid the reproach which arises from unavoidable misfortune, than the infamy which results from voluntary and open wickedness. But such conduct tends to indelible disgrace and increasing misery.—The Lord will not contend for ever with his church: and though it seem cut down as a tree, it will shoot forth again, and its branches shall be "beautiful and glorious;" yet all its excellency is ^{derived} from "the branch of the Lord," "the Only-begotten of the Father," who is "full of grace and truth," and is the perfection of "beauty and glory;" and the fruits of his incarnation and mediation are inexpressibly excellent and desirable, in the judgment of all those who have begun to experience deliverance from wrath, and from the power of Satan. These are the citizens of Zion, whose names are registered in the book of life; and every one of them partakes of the Spirit of Christ, and is daily renewed into his holy image; they wash away all their guilt and pollution, in the fountain which he has opened: every affliction serves as a furnace to purify them from their dross; and the efficacious influence of the Holy Ghost, (with which they are baptized as with fire,) gradually extirpates their lusts, invigorates their spiritual affections, and renders them holy as he is holy. In proportion as the Lord thus sanctifies believers, or any part of his professing church, he will vouchsafe them the tokens of his favour, and the comforts of his presence, in their habitations, and in their assemblies; and he will assure them of his guidance and protection, through the perils of the wilderness, "as the light of a flaming fire by night, and as a tabernacle for a shadow from the heat by day." For if we be made glorious by the renewal of his image on our souls, "on all this glory shall be a defence," during the trials of life, in the hour of death, and in the day of judgement. Let us then seek earnestly to be washed from sin and made holy, and then we must be safe and happy. Let us assure ourselves that the Lord will take care of his own cause, in all possible emergencies: let us seek his presence in our families, and his protection of our habitations, by constantly worshipping him in them; and his blessing upon our assemblies, that his ordinances may be honourable and useful: and let us anticipate with joy those blessed times, when the purity, extent, peace, glory, and security of the church will fully explain the import of these predictions. (Note, Rev. 20:1-6.)

NOTES.—CHAP. V. V. 1. This chapter contains a detached prophecy, which, probably, was delivered about the same time as that in the preceding chapters. "The subject of it is nearly the same with that of the first chapter. It is a general reproof of the Jews for their wickedness: but it exceeds that chapter in force, in severity, in variety, and elegance; and it adds a more express declaration of vengeance by the Babylonian invasion." Bp. Louth—It begins with a parable formed into a sacred song, which the prophet proposed to sing to his "Well-beloved." JEHOVAH is the Owner of the vineyard: but the father reveals himself by his only-begotten Son, who is the Well-beloved both of the Father, and of every believer. The original word for "my Beloved" occurs more frequently in Solomon's song, than in all other parts of the Bible, at least in this meaning and connexion. (Cant. 1:13,14,16. 2:3,8-10,16,17. 4:16. 5:2,4,9,10. 6:1-3. 7:12-14. 8:1,4. Heb.)—Some render the first clause "Now will I sing to my Beloved a song of loves touching his vineyard." No doubt, however, Christ is meant, whether the prophet be supposed to speak in his own name to the Messiah; or the Father by the prophet thus to address his well-beloved Son. He had "a vineyard in a very fruitful hill," or "in a horn, the son of oil," as it is in the original. "A high and fruitful hill." Bp. Louth—The situation of Canaan, being very high, is represented by a horn, which is higher than any other part of the animal: and the son of oil, is a Hebraism denoting fertility; oil-olive being one of the most valued productions of the promised land. But the peculiar religious privileges of the Israelites may be intended under this emblem, as well as the situation and fertility of Canaan.

V. 2. (Notes, Ps. 80:8-16. Matt. 21:33-46. John 15:1-8.) The care of the Lord over Israel is here described, by expressions taken from the enclosing and cultivation of a vineyard. When he separated that nation from the heathen, made a national covenant with them, gave them laws and ordinances, and took them under his own special protection and government, "he fenced" his vineyard: the destruction of the Canaanites, and their idolatrous worship, was as "the gathering out of the stones," which would have injured the vines. His care, in forming this church of the descendants of faithful Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and in reforming the nation under Moses, Aaron, and Joshua, before their entrance into the promised land, was represented by his

5 And now, ^{go} to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: ^oI will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden down:

planting the vineyard with the choicest vine, or the vine of Sorek. (Note, Jer. 2:20, 21.) The temple, with its altar and worship, is intended by "the tower," in which the husbandman might safely lodge, to watch, and be ready to tend, the vineyard. The stated ministry of the priests and Levites, the occasional ministry of the prophets, and all the means of grace, are denoted, by the wine-press, or vat, into which the juice of the grapes, when pressed out, might run. But, after all this preparation, the vineyard, instead of producing abundance of good grapes, as might have been expected, yielded only wild grapes, or poisonous berries, offensive to the smell and nauseous to the taste, yet with some resemblance of grapes: that is, hypocrisy and impiety, instead of righteousness and true holiness. (Notes, Deut. 32:23, 33. 2 Kings 4:39-41.)

V. 3, 4. Perhaps the Jews murmured at the judgments denounced against them: but the Lord here offered to make them judges in the controversy between him and his vineyard; as a judge, before he passes sentence, asks the criminal, what he can urge in his own behalf: why he should not be condemned. (Notes, 2 Sam. 12:1-7. Ps. 51:4.) With the manifold advantages, and encouragements to holiness, which they enjoyed, and the promises of effectual assistance contained in their Scriptures, they ought to have been a "peculiar people zealous of good works:" nor could they mention any thing, that ought to have been done for them, which God had not done, or was not ready to do, whenever they earnestly asked him to do it. So that they could assign no reason for their wickedness, but the desperate depravity of their own hearts.—"From this, among many other texts of Scripture, we may conclude, that those may have sufficient means of grace afforded them, who nevertheless are not actually or effectually converted." Louth.—This is clear and satisfactory: but the sufficient grace, insisted on by numbers, which yet by their own statement proves insufficient, is not very intelligible. Sufficient means leave no insurmountable obstacle, were the heart properly disposed; but sufficient grace properly disposes it. Neither of these, however, can be to a sinner a matter of debt, but wholly of grace.—"What was there more to be done to my vineyard?" This seems the literal translation: not that God had done all that was in his power, and so was disappointed when he failed of success; but that he had done all that was proper, or could reasonably have been expected. (Notes, 2 Chr. 36:14-16. Ps. 81:11-15. Jer. 6:27-30. 36:1-3, v. 3. Matt. 23:37-39.)

V. 5, 6. The Lord next passed sentence on the vineyard, and informed the people what he meant to do with it. He

10 Yea, ten acres of vineyard shall yield ^{one} bath, and the seed of a homer shall yield ^{an} ephah.

11 [¶] Wo unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, till wine ⁱⁿflame them!

12 And ^{the} harp, and the viol, the tabret, and pipe, and wine are in their feasts: but ^{they} regard not the work of the LORD, neither consider the operation of his hands.

13 Therefore ^{my} people are gone into captivity, because ^{they} have no knowledge; and ^{their} honourable men are famished, and ^{their} multitude dried up with thirst.

14 Therefore ^{hell} hath enlarged herself, and ^{opened} her mouth without measure: and ^{their} glory, and their multitude, and their pomp, and ^{he} that rejoiceth, shall descend into it.

would withdraw his protection; give up the land, city, and temple, to be ravaged by their enemies; deprive the Jews of the means of grace, and leave numbers of them to mingle with the heathen: he would thus let his vineyard be overgrown with thorns and briars: nay, he would "command the clouds to rain no rain upon them:" he would awfully withhold the sanctifying influences of his Spirit. This was, in part and for a time, fulfilled during the Babylonian captivity; but far more exactly in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; their exclusion from the church; their long-continued dispersion, even to this day, without priest or prophet; and either without means of grace, or without heavenly influences to render them effectual. (Marg. Ref. Note, Hos. 3:4, 5.)

V. 7. This verse gives the application of the parable. (Notes, 2 Sam. 12:7. Ez. 13:10-16, v. 16.) It related to the whole people of Israel, but especially to Judah, who had been peculiarly favoured and delighted in as "a plant of pleasures;" (Marg.) but the Jews were so degenerated from the piety of their ancestors, that, instead of judgment and righteousness, the land was full of oppression, and the cries of the oppressed. (Marg. Ref. Note, Jam. 5:1-6.)—The living members of the church are called "the branch of God's planting." 6:13. . . The Jews should have been such, and had sufficient means of grace to make them so." Louth.

V. 8-10. The prophet next declared, in plain language, that the vengeance of God was coming on the Jews for their various transgressions: but he so expressed himself, that he included with them all persons, of every age and nation, who should be guilty of the same crimes. He first denounced a woe upon the avaricious and rapacious, who were intent by every means on increasing their estates; not regarding who was turned out destitute from his dwelling or patrimony, provided they could "add house to house, and field to field;" that they might be placed alone in the midst of the land, as sole proprietors, attended only by the vassals and dependents. But the Lord had told the prophet in his ears, privately, that ere long, many houses would be left uninhabited, especially the most magnificent and elegant; and that their estates should be almost wholly unproductive, so that ten acres of vineyard should only produce a few gallons of wine, and their corn-fields yield one-tenth of the seed generally sown upon them: that is, the land would be desolated, and their estates would become of no value. (Note, Lev. 27:16.)—A bath, in liquids, and an ephah in solids, were measures of equal size; and were the tenth part of a homer, which contained a hundred omers. (Tables.) the Syrians and Israelites, in the reign of Ahaz, may be here intended, which were so terrible, that the hills trembled; and perhaps they were attended by earthquakes. (Notes, 7:1, 2, 4-6. 2 Chr. 28:5-8.) 'The mountains and the earth itself are often said to tremble at God's judgments; (see Jer. 4:24. Mic. 1:4. Hab. 3:10. Hab. 3:3-10. Rev. 20:11-15.) The terrible attendants and effects, however, of these judgments, failed of bringing the people to repentance; and they were insufficient to appease the righteous indignation of God: inasmuch, that he predicted still further and more dreadful vengeance, in that remarkable and often repeated clause, "For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still." The flame, &c. (24) "The tongue of fire." (marg.) 'The flame, because it is in the shape of a tongue, and so it is called metaphorically. ... The disparated tongues, as it were, of fire, (Acts 2:3.) which appeared at the descent of the Holy Spirit on the apostles, give the same idea; that is, of flames shooting diversely into pyramidal forms, or points like tongues. ... The prophet has in this place given the metaphor its full force, in applying it to the action of fire, in eating up and devouring whatever comes in its way, like a ravenous animal, whose tongue is principally employed in taking his food.' Bp. Louth.

V. 26-30. This animated description seems to predict the invasion of Nebuchadnezzar, rather than that of Sennacherib.—When the Lord lifted up his ensign, or gave the signal, as by a hiss or whistling sound, the executioners of his vengeance would come, with inconceivable celerity, from the most distant countries: (Note, 7:17-19.) being eager for the expedition, and being prospered by God himself, they would meet with nothing to retard them, and would lose no time through indolence or weariness. 'As the scoffers had challenged God to make speed and hasten his work of vengeance; so God now assures them, that with speed and swiftly it shall come.' Bp. Louth. (Note, 18:19.) Being fully armed for the battle, their horses' hoofs, (which were not then shod with iron, as in modern times,) should be wonderfully preserved, as if made of flint, and their chariots should run with the rapidity of a whirlwind; their rage and boldness would resemble those of lions, young or old, or lionesses, and they would meet with no effectual resistance, when they came to seize upon their prey. In short, they would be as terrible to the Jews, as the roaring of the sea to the shipwrecked mariner; who looking towards the land can see no way of escape, and who is surrounded with despair and sorrow: for every beam of hope and comfort would be enveloped in utter darkness, as the heavens are sometimes wholly covered with black and gloomy clouds. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. Whilst they, who truly love our God and Saviour, endeavour by every proper means to do good to men, they primarily seek his glory: and they discern and adore his justice in the dispensations which disgrace and afflict those, with whom they are most intimately connected.—Such as are favoured with the word and ordinances of God, and the encouragements of his gospel, stand in a peculiar relation to him. The tendency of these advantages is to render them fruitful in good works: this the Lord requires of them, and nothing else will satisfy him; and when they bear the wild grapes of hypocrisy, impiety, and iniquity, instead of "the fruits of the Spirit," "in all goodness, righteousness, and truth," they are nigh unto destruction. Indeed the case is so plain, that if the fact were so stated in a parable, that self-love could be fully precluded, sinners must be induced to give judgment against themselves: and at the day of judgment, when sentence shall be given on all the workers of iniquity, the criminals will universally perceive, that every attempt to justify their conduct is entirely useless. Those excuses, by which many now pacify their consciences, will then appear futile and desperate; as they charge the blame of man's wickedness on God, and vindicate all the crimes which can possibly be committed. (Notes, Rom. 2:4-6. 3:19, 20.) But, as "all things pertaining to life and godliness" are proposed to us by the gospel, and we are commanded to ask what we will, that it may be given to us; the sinner's persevering wickedness will be found to arise from his enmity to God, aversion to his service, and contempt of spiritual blessings; and it will appear, that he would not consent to the mortification of his lusts by the special grace of God. So that it may with proper like young lions, yea, they shall roar, and lay hold of the prey, and shall carry it away safe, and none shall deliver it.

priety be inquired, 'What more could have been done for these men, that has not been done for them?' Indeed the Lord is not bound to afford his rebellious creatures any advantages: but if he graciously vouchsafe them, and men will "rebel against the light," or take encouragement to sin from the truths of the gospel; their guilt will be peculiarly aggravated, and they may expect to be doomed to everlasting unholiness and misery. (Mark 11:14, 21. Note, Rev. 22:10-12.) Nations and churches also, who abuse their privileges, may expect to be deprived of them: the Lord will "take away the hedge" of his unfruitful vineyard, "and it shall be eaten up." "He will lay it waste, that it shall not be pruned or digged; there shall come up briars and thorns;" and he will even "command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it." Whatever delight he has taken in any company of Christians; if they, or their posterity, degenerate from that faith and purity, which once distinguished them, and become generally addicted to covetousness, oppression, or any other vices; we may shortly expect to hear woes denounced against them, or judgments executed upon them. Few, if any, of the descriptions of professed Christians in our land, are unconcerned in this observation: may we all be zealous and repent, and do "the first works" of the zealous reformers from popery, that the awful sentence may not be awarded against us.

V. 8-17. Men are commonly deemed happy, who grow rich with rapidity, and add one possession to another, as if they would appropriate the whole earth. But covetousness is idolatry: and it is generally attended by fraud and oppression of the poor, which God abhors; and whilst many envy the prosperous wretch, the Lord denounces an awful woe upon him. Providence may, perhaps, deprive him of his wealth, or render it a burden to him: God, however, will speedily require his soul, and then whose will all his riches be?—Nor are the luxurians and intemperate less obnoxious to divine vengeance. (Notes, and P. O. Luke 12:13-21, 16:19-26.) How many are there who inflame themselves with excessive indulgence, and gratify every sense, as if their only business on earth were to pamper the body, and there were no other use to be made of their time and substance! Men, engaged in such sensual courses, "regard not the works of the Lord, nor consider the operation of his hands;" the wonders of creation, providence, and redemption are alike unnoticed by them: nay, they observe not his terrible judgments, and expect not his threatened vengeance. The prevalence of such impiety and vice brings desolating judgments on kingdoms, which reduce all ranks to the most abject misery: and no tongue can express what multitudes both of the honourable from their pompous feasts, and of the mean from their licentious revels, descend into hell, "which enlargeth herself, and openeth her mouth without measure," to swallow up the multitudes who continually become her prey. In that dreadful place there will not be so much as "a drop of water to cool the burning tongue" of those, who here "fared sumptuously every day." But, while the impious profligates are abased to the lowest misery and contempt, "the Lord of Hosts will be exalted in judgment, and God that is holy will be sanctified in righteousness." In every case he will also provide for the meek and humble, and feed both the bodies and souls of his people.

V. 18-30. Wherever we turn our eyes, it is lamentable to observe what pains men bestow in pursuing the vanities of the world, and in gratifying their lusts, and in drawing down the judgments of God upon them: and what prodigious excesses of impiety and iniquity men gradually arrive at! Every sin needs some other to conceal it, to secure the success of it, or to defray its expense. Youthful lusts lead to depredation, lying, perjury, perhaps to murder; (Notes, Prov. 1:10-19.) corrupt practices lead to infidel principles; and thus men sin away fear, shame, and remorse, till they set God at defiance by their blasphemies; and they can be convinced of the truth of his word, only by his hastening his threatened vengeance; and then too late they know it, and become sensible of their own madness and folly. In the mean time, they continue to "call good evil, and evil good, to put darkness for light, and light for darkness, and bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter;" it is evidently the tendency of their discourse and writings, to confound the most important distinctions, and to prejudice men's minds against the truths, precepts, and ways of the Lord: and their self-sufficiency, and the arrogant and supercilious manner, in which they behave to believers, mark them out, as exposed to the additional woe, denounced on those "who are wise in their own eyes and prudent in their own sight." Whilst many, in this respect, "glory in their shame;" others, of a different description of rebels, can pride themselves in being "mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink;" as if their ability, through habit or constitution, to waste the gifts of God, to inveigle others to drunkenness, and to take that opportunity of imposing on them and defrauding them, would plead an excuse for their excess! We be unto such men, and wo to that nation, in which they obtain authority; for it cannot be expected, that they should scruple to commit the most flagrant injustice, when their own lucre requires it. But while men thus "cast away the law of the Lord, and despise his holy word;" they become fuel for the fire of his indignation, and destroy the very root of all their own prosperity: and after he has smitten them, and their carcases are torn in the streets, or lodged in the grave, "his anger will not be turned away, but his hand will be stretched out still," to "destroy both body and soul in hell."—The earth itself will indeed tremble, and flee away, when he shall summon its inhabitants before his tremendous judgment-seat. Even in this world, he will never be at a loss for instruments of his vengeance. At his signal, they will come from the ends of the earth with unabated force and speed: when he gives commission, all resistance is vain: and as we know not how soon all earthly comforts and confidences may fail us, and sorrow and despair may overwhelm us; let us diligently seek the well-grounded assurance, "that when flesh and heart shall fail, God himself will be the Strength of our heart, and our Portion for ever."

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 1-4. It may be inferred, from the first verse of this book, that Isaiah delivered some prophecies before the death of Uzziah: but he was at this time more solemnly commissioned to the prophetic office, and prepared for the proper execution of it.—This august symbolical vision of the glory of the Lord is described as made at the temple; the several interposing veils being removed out of the way: for the vision specially related to those times, when "the way into the holiest was made manifest." The Lord upon the throne, according to St. John (12:1.) was Christ; and the vision related to his future kingdom, when the veil of separation was to be removed, and the whole earth was to be filled with the glory of God, revealed to all mankind. Bp. Louth. The Lord appeared to the prophet, "sitting on a throne," as in a human form; for he then "saw the glory of Christ, and spake of him" (Notes, Ez. 1:26-28. 43:2-3. John 12:37-49.) "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son who is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." (Note, John 1:18.)—It was the unanimous sense of the ancient church, that all the divine appearances in the Old Testament, were made by the Son of God, by whom all the affairs of the church were ordered from the beginning. Louth.—The "throne high and lifted up," seems to have been the place of the mercy-seat, over which the glory of the Lord used to appear, and where he reigned, as the God of Israel and of the whole earth: and as an exterior symbol of his Majesty, "his train," or the skirts of his robes, filled the whole temple.—"Above," or rather over against, this throne, stood the Seraphim, the burning ones, the most glorious of the angelic orders, glowing with the holy flame of divine love. They stood, as employed in celebrating his praises, and prepared to execute his mandates.—Each of them had "six wings; with twain he covered his face," an emblem of his inability steadfastly to behold, or fully to comprehend, all the glory of the Lord, and of profound reverence and adoring awe. "With twain he covered his feet," denoting humility, as conscious that he and his services were unworthy the notice of the Lord, or even of the other Seraphim in the presence of the Lord. "And with twain he did fly," representing prompt celerity and alacrity in executing the will of God. At the same time they sang aloud, responsive to each other, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts." (Notes, 30:8-14. Ez. 15:11, 20:21. Num. 6:23-26. Rev. 4:6-8.) This threefold repetition has, generally and justly, been deemed to refer to the three divine persons in the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke.

5 ¶ Then said I, Wo is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts.

6 Then flew one of the Seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar:

7 And he laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged.

8 ¶ Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I, send me.

Trinity; and to the holiness displayed in the great work of redemption. For the Seraphim seem to celebrate the Lord's holy hatred of sin, as displayed both in the salvation of the gospel, and in the punishment of its opposers; in which respect, "the whole earth," as well as the heavens, has been or will be, "filled with his glory." (Note, 40:3-5.)—While this solemn hymn of praise was echoed from one to another of the angelic worshippers, the posts, or pillars of the porch, of the Temple shook at every response, and the whole house was filled with smoke, or thick darkness, as when it was dedicated by Solomon. (Note, 1 Kings 8:10-14.)

V. 5. This glorious and awful vision of the divine Majesty, and the exalted worship of the Seraphim, overwhelmed the prophet with a sense of his own sinfulness; and his humiliation was attended with great dismay. (Notes, Judg. 13:18-22. Job 40:3-5. 42:1-6. Dan. 10:4-9. Luke 5:1-11, v. 8. Rev. 1:12-20.) If these glorious spirits thought humbly of their exalted services; what would become of him, who had presumed to speak to JEHOVAH, and in his name, with unclean and unhallowed lips? He had denounced woes on others: (Notes, 5:8-23.) but he now perceived himself liable to the same condemnation; not only for his other sins, but also as "a man of unclean lips;" as one, who had used his tongue, (which had often spoken vain and sinful words,) in declaring the message of God, and had mixed much evil with his very worship, and prophesying. He was sensible also that he "dwelt among a people of unclean lips," the sinfulness of whose worship he did not fully discern, till "his eyes had seen the King, the Lord of hosts;" and, having measured himself by others, he never was before so sensible of his own unworthiness, and unfit for the prophetic office, which he now feared would only end in his and their condemnation. The Septuagint translation of this verse is very striking. "And I said O wretch that I am! for I am pierced through; because being a man, and having unclean lips, I dwell in the midst of a people having unclean lips; and I have seen with mine eyes the Lord of hosts." (Note, Rom. 7:22-25.)—"Alas for me for I am struck dumb." He immediately gives the reason, why he was struck dumb; because he was a man of polluted lips, and dwelt among a people of polluted lips; and was unworthy, either to join the Seraphim in singing praises to God, or to be the messenger of God to his people. Bp. Louth. (Note, Rom. 3:19, 20.)—"In these words therefore he deprecates the undertaking of the prophetic office. . . . What the prophet here calls "unclean," . . . Moses (Ez. 6:12.) styles "uncircumcised lips;" where he excuses himself from a lie employment, both from his own incapacity, . . . and from the cold reception he was like to meet with among the Israelites." Louth. (Notes, Ez. 4:10-14. 6:12. Jer. 1:6-8. Zech. 3:1-4. Matt. 10:19, 20. Luke 21:12-19, v. 15.) It, however, appears from the next verses, that the prophet expressed consciousness of guilt, as to the past, even in his worship and ministry, as well as apprehensions respecting the future.

V. 6, 7. The Lord was pleased to encourage his dismayed servant by a symbolical action of a Seraph, who flew to him with a live coal taken from off the altar. "The altar of burnt-offerings, placed near the porch of the temple, where the vision appeared." Louth.—The sacred fire from the altar represented the sacrifice of Christ and its effects; and the live coal applied to the prophet's lips, denoted the assurance given him of pardon, and acceptance in his work, through the atonement of the promised Messiah; and the communication of divine grace, to cleanse away pollution, to kindle the flame of divine love in his heart, and to fit him for the execution of his office with zeal and fervency, and ensure his gracious acceptance in so doing. (Notes, Jer. 23:28, 29. Matt. 3:11, 12. Acts 2:2, 3.)

³*Covered,* that is with an atonement. (Note, Ps. 32:1,2, v. 1.) V. 8. The Lord would not send his message to the people by one of the Seraphim, but by a prophet like themselves; and he openly inquired, whom he should send; who was willing to undertake the service. The expression, "who will go for us?" corresponds with several others which have been already noticed. (Notes, Gen. 12:6,27, 3:22-24, 11:6-9.)

⁴So God speaks in the plural number, Gen. 1:26, which is justly thought to imply a plurality of divine persons. For it cannot be said with any probability, that God is described in Genesis, as advising with, or communicating his purposes to the angels, which is the fancy of the Rabbins: because the history of the creation takes no notice of angels; and consequently there is no ground for interpreting any text in the first chapter of Genesis, with relation to them.¹ Louth.—And now the prophet, who was before "struck dumb," or greatly dismayed, being assured of assistance and acceptance, and warmed with zeal for the glory of God, readily answered, "Here am I; send me." He would go on any message, to any person, or any whither, whatever hardship, difficulty, and peril attended it.

V. 9, 10. This awful passage is quoted, or referred to, six times in the New Testament; (Marg. Ref. g. Notes, Matt. 13:13, 14, John 12:37-41, Acts 28:23-29.) which shows that the vision had relation to the rejection of Christ by the Jews, and their consequent calamities even to this day; as well as to the men of that generation, to whom the prophet was sent. It is remarkable, that the verbs here are imperative; but they are not so in any quotation in the New Testament. The Septuagint also render them in the future, while many other futures, in passages not dissimilar, are rendered in the imperative or optative in that version.—Where the word of God is not made effectual, through the regeneration of the Spirit, it gives occasion to those very evils, which are most contrary to its genuine tendency. (Note, 2 Cor. 2:14-17.) By opposing the pride, prejudices, and lusts of men, they become more outrageous; and, by producing convictions which are violently resisted, the conscience grows callous: the uneasiness thus excited drives men into excess, infidelity, or furious enmity, for shelter; and when they are once engaged in open opposition, obstinacy, and regard to worldly interests, and credit among proud and ungodly men, push them forward to the most desperate extremes. Thus the gospel is heard, but not understood: something of its nature is seen, but the glory and excellency of it are not perceived: and men become more and more insensible both to promises and warnings; so that "their hearts are made fat" and unfeeling, their "ears become heavy, they shut their eyes," and the whole tends to their deeper guilt and condemnation. God frequently leaves them to this judicial blindness and hardness for their other sins, especially for resisting the convictions of their own consciences, and the stirrings of his Spirit. (Notes, Ez. 4:21, 7:13, 8:15, 14:3,4, Rom. 9:15-21, 2 Thes. 2:8-12.) This was the awful case of numbers in the days of Isaiah, and of still greater numbers in those of Christ and his apostles; and the Lord, foreseeing this effect, and intending to leave the Jews to this obduracy, "lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed," or saved; commissioned the prophet to go for this express purpose. "The prophets are said to do things, when they declare God's purpose of doing them. In this sense, Jeremiah was appointed of God, to "root out and destroy, to build and to plant," (Jer. 1:10, that is, to declare God's purpose in these matters. In like manner Ezekiel says, He was "sent to destroy the city," (Ez. 4:3.) i. e. to prophesy the destruction of it. So here Isaiah is said to harden the people's hearts and to blind their eyes; i. e. to declare this to be the event of his preaching; which prophecy should be more signally accomplished, when the Jews should reject the preaching both of Christ and his apostles. . . . "Make the heart of this people fat." This St. John expresses by hardening their heart, (John 12:40.) so that it becomes insensible." (Pa. 119:70.) "God is said to harden men's hearts, by those very means of grace, which are in themselves proper to produce a quite contrary effect: but withal he foresees, that meeting with a perverse and refractory temper, they will in the event make them more obdurate; and he is resolved, for great and wise reasons, not to hinder it." Louth. (Notes, 29:9-12. Rom. 11:7-10,25-32.)

V. 11, 12. The prophet did not object to the service assigned him; or question the justice and goodness of God in the awful sentence. But he inquired how long this was to be the case. And he was answered, that this would be the case, till the cities and lands were utterly desolated, and the inhabitants carried into captivity; (Note, 5:8-10.) and this forsaking of the whole land would continue for a long time. This was verified in the Babylonish captivity; but far more emphatically in the final desolations of the temple, and of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the dispersed and forsaken state of the Jewish nation, now for almost eighteen hundred years. (Note, Gen. 49:10.)

V. 13. The Lord meant, however, to preserve a remnant, like the tenth, or tithes, that were holy to him. These would return from captivity, and be converted to the truth, and devoted to him, as those holy things which were eaten in his courts by the priests. Nay, the nation of Israel, in its lowest state, would be like an oak, or elm, or any other tree, which is stripped of its leaves, lopped, or cut down; yet the trunk or root still remains, and has life in it, and will again shoot forth. Thus the remnant of believers, during and after the captivity, were a "holy seed," the substance of the nation, which shot forth again and flourished. Thus Christ especially, and with him the Jews who embraced Christianity, and were incorporated with the Gentile converts when the nation was rejected, were "the holy seed;" and thus the Jews, who shall in future generations become his disciples, are "the holy seed;" the substance of the tree, which has been lopped and cut down, but which will at length revive and flourish again more than ever. "Though there be a tenth part remaining in it, even this shall undergo a repeated destruction. Yet, &c." . . . This passage, though somewhat obscure, . . . has been made so clear by the accomplishment of the prophecy, that there remains little room to doubt the sense of it. When Nebuchadnezzar had carried away the greater and better part of the people into captivity, there was yet a tenth remaining in the land, the poorer sort, left to be vinedressers and husbandmen under Gedaliah. (2 Kings 25:12,22. Jer. 40:12.) Yet even these, fleeing into Egypt after the death of Gedaliah, . . . miserably perished there. Again, in the subsequent and more remarkable completion of the prophecy, in the destruction of Jerusalem, and the dissolution of the commonwealth, by the Romans, when the Jews, after the loss of above a million of men, . . . had become very numerous again in their own country, Hadrian, provoked by their rebellious behaviour, slew above half a million more of them, and a second time almost extirpated the nation. Yet, after these . . . and so many other repeated exterminations and massacres of them, in different times and on various occasions, we yet see with astonishment, that the stock still remains, from which God, according to his promise frequently given by his prophets, will cause his people to shoot forth again, and to flourish." Bp. Louth. (Notes, 27:2-6, v. 6. Jer. 30:10,11, 40-41:—) "And it shall return and be for a devouring." See also the margin.—"In it shall be left a tenth, after it is . . . again eaten, or devoured." . . . Although God suffers the Jews to be devoured by repeated judgments, first carried captive by the Babylonians, and afterwards destroyed by the Romans: . . . yet still he will preserve a remnant, (1:9.) called here a tenth part, which holy seed shall be a seminary to preserve the nation to after times. . . . The words contain in them a promise, that God will never utterly reject the whole nation of the Jews, who severely soever he deals with them." Louth. (Notes, Jer. 31:35-37. Rom. 11:1-6,25-32.)—Let the reader reflect that this prophecy has been extant above two thousand five hundred years, by the acknowledgment of the Jews themselves: and, comparing it with the state of that remarkable people, in every subsequent age, and at this day; let him ask himself whether it does not prove, beyond all rational doubt, that Isaiah spake by inspiration of God.—Indeed the condition of the Jews through revolving ages, so different from that of any other nation, compared with the prophecies concerning them, both in the Old and New Testament, is a complete moral demonstration, that the Scriptures are "the oracles of God;" which is the only kind of demonstration of which the Ahaz and his people are greatly terrified by hearing, that the Syrians and the Assyrians had confederated against them, 1, 2. Isaiah is sent to assure Ahaz, that they should not accomplish their purpose; but he speedily ruined, 3-4. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. The discovery of the glory of God, as revealed in Christ Jesus, prepares the heart for the exercise of every grace, and the practice of every duty. Indeed, all external symbols must be inadequate fully to represent JEHovah's essential majesty and excellency: yet they may suit our present state, in which we "see through a glass darkly." "Though the LORD is high and lifted up," yet, in and through the divine Saviour, he is seated on a "throne of grace," and "the way into the holiest is now laid open." While his full glory is displayed in his temple above, his train fills the outer sanctuary; yea, he dwells in every broken heart, as in a temple in which he delights.—Every rational creature worships God, in humility and reverential fear, proportioned to the degree of his own holiness and wisdom; and this is attended with an adequate measure of fervent love, gratitude, zeal, and delight in obedience. The cherubim and seraphim, before the throne, are so occupied in admiring and adoring the ineffable glories of JEHovah, that they have no leisure, or inclination, to admire themselves, or applaud one another, though indeed lovely and glorious. Satisfied with his approbation, they want no other praise: and they know, that they cannot but possess each other's love, whilst they bear the image, and concur in the worship, of the Lord: for all the self-admiration, ambition, and mutual adulation of us sinful creatures originate from ignorance and pride, and would be annihilated by clear and abiding views of the divine glory.—The essential holiness of God reflects honour on all his natural attributes: whether he pardon or punish, he has so arranged his plan, that his hatred of sin, and love of justice, will be displayed and adored; in the cross of Christ, and by the gospel and its effects, the whole earth is or will "be filled with his glory;" and these form the most exalted and favourite themes even of the adoration of angels, who sing, "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, and good-will to men." (Notes, Luke 2:8-14, v. 14. Eph. 3:9-12. 1 Pet. 1:10-12. Rev. 5:11-14.) Nor is there one of them, who does not think it an honour to worship him, who was crucified on mount Calvary; even him whom infidels pride themselves in degrading and opposing! Nay, these blessed spirits vie with each other, who shall most fervently adore the true God of our salvation. Even to witness their holy strains, and active obedience, would be more than we sinners could endure: yet they count all beneath his worth, and undeserving of his notice. But such scenes are too dazzling for our constant contemplation: a few glimpses suffice to convince us, that "we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses as filthy rags." (Note, 64:6-8.) Nor is there a man on earth, who would not be ashamed of his most admired performances, and sink into habitual self-abhorrence, if he had a clear and full view of the divine glory, and of the worship of heaven: nay, this would be attended with despair; and he would no more dare to speak to the Lord with his "polluted lips," if he so saw the justice, holiness, and majesty of God, as not to discern also his glorious mercy and grace in Jesus Christ. But when the atonement is understood, and by faith applied to the heart; the iniquity of our holy things is taken away, and "the conscience purged from dead works to serve the living God;" and when by the Holy Spirit, the love of his name is shed abroad in the heart; then the humble sinner takes encouragement, and feels an ardent desire to glorify the Lord, and make known his salvation to his fellow sinners. Thus men become ready for any service in which he pleases to employ them; and neither the sense of their own unworthiness and insufficiency; nor a view of the importance and difficulty of the work; nor a prospect of hardships and injuries in it, will deter them from any attempt, to which they judge themselves to be called in his providence; but they are ready to say, "Here am I; send me." The love of Christ constrains them, and encourages and prepares them for labouring with diligence, suffering with patience, and bearing injuries with persevering meekness. Thus reconciled enemies are formed to be ambassadors for Syria 'is confederate with Ephraim: and his heart was moved, and the heart of his people as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind.

3 Then said the LORD unto Isaiah, Go forth now to meet Ahaz, thou and Shear-jashub thy son, at the end of the conduit of the upper pool, in the highway of the fuller's field;

4 And say unto him, Take heed, and be quiet; fear not, neither be faint-hearted for the two tails of these smoking fire-brands, for the fierce anger of Rezin with Syria, and of the son of Remaliah.

Christ, holy apostles and evangelists, self-denying heroic missionaries, and patient labourers in more ordinary services. Thus were formed 'the goodly fellowship of the prophets;' 'the glorious company of the apostles;' and 'the noble army of martyrs.' And thus Christians of inferior station are animated to improve their several talents, to "do what they can," and "to live no longer to themselves, but to him who died for them and rose again." (Note, 2 Cor. 5:13-15.)

V. 9-13. They, whom the Lord sends to preach his gospel, must expect in very many instances, to labour without apparent success: and even to be the instruments of rendering some of their hearers more hardened and inexcusable in their crimes, and more ripe for divine judgments; even as if they were sent upon that melancholy business: and humble resignation, to a most painful trial, becomes their duty. We should, however, persist in praying for the divine blessing on our labours; and solemnly warn men of the danger of resisting convictions, "quenching the Spirit," and "holding the truth in unrighteousness." And no humble inquirer after Christ need fear this awful doom; which is a spiritual judgment on those who hate the light, because they determine to hold fast their sins. Let then every one who hears or reads the gospel, watch and pray against pride and love of wickedness, and all those previous provocations, which tend to this dreadful obduracy; let none of them harden their hearts, lest God give them up to a strong delusion; and let every one pray for the illumination of the Holy Spirit, that he may perceive the glory and excellency of divine things; and for "the love of the truth," by which alone we are secured against this dreadful danger. And whilst we read of the fate of Jerusalem, and witness the deplorable state of the unbelieving Jews; let us take warning not to imitate their crimes. Blessed be God, he still preserves his Church for the sake of the remnant of true believers which are "the substance of it;" and however professed Christians, or visible churches, may be lopped off as unfruitful branches: the holy seed shall shoot forth; yea, "Israel" as a nation shall yet again "bud and blossom, and fill the face of the world with fruit." May the Lord hasten that glorious time, which shall be as life from the dead to all the nations of the earth.

NOTES.—CHAP. VII. V. 1. The Syrians and Israelites repeatedly vanquished the Jews, with most terrible slaughter; but they were not able to take Jerusalem, or dethrone the family of David. (Notes, 5, 6. 2 Kings 15:37. 16:5. 2 Chr. 28:5-8.)

V. 2. Ahaz, though a very wicked man, was preserved because he was a descendant of David, and of that family from which the Messiah was to arise. Perhaps his enemies had formed their plan of dethroning him and destroying his race, in contemptuous opposition to the promises and prophecies of God, respecting David and his seed. (Notes, 6-13. 65:8-10. 2 Kings 19:30-34.) It is probable, that this report was brought to him and his people, after the slaughter before referred to; (Notes, 1. 2 Chr. 28:5-8.) and related to a second assault by the united forces of Syria and Ephraim. The terror, which was excited by this information, in Ahaz, and in the family of David, and in the people of Judah, is illustrated by a most striking simile: (Marg. Ref. e.) nor can it much be wondered at, when the success of the Syrians, and the dreadful blow already given by Ephraim alone, are considered; and when it is recollected, that Ahaz and most of his subjects were entirely destitute of faith, and well-grounded confidence in God.

V. 3. Isaiah seems to have been very little noticed by Ahaz, if at all, and perhaps could not have access to him in his palace. (Note, 2 Kings 18:4.) but he was ordered to meet him in a place which was pointed out to him; probably because Ahaz and his nobles assembled there, to concert measures for their defence. (Marg. Ref. g.) He was also commanded to take Shear-jashub his son with him; but the reason of this command is not mentioned. Some think it was merely because his name, A remnant shall return, was itself a sign of mercy in reserve for the Jews: others suppose that some reference was had to Isaiah's child in the prophetic sign afterwards given. (Notes, 14-16.) 'The name probably alludes to the promise made by the prophet of the people's return from the captivity; (6:13.) and imports that

5 Because Syria, Ephraim, and the son of Remaliah, have taken evil counsel against thee, saying,

V. 4. (Notes, 30:6, 7, 15-17. Ez. 14:13, 11.) Rezin and Pekah had been two destructive firebrands, which made a dreadful conflagration; and the Jews feared still more fatal effects from their confederacy: but their successes were at an end, and they were only the "two tails" of "smoking firebrands," which were ready to be wholly extinguished, "which are so far from being able to consume any thing else, that they are almost consumed themselves." Louth. (Note, Judg. 15:3-5.)

V. 5, 6. Rezin and Pekah intended to subjugate the whole kingdom of Judah, and to divide it between them: and to set over it another king as their vassal. "Let us rend off a part of it for ourselves." Bp. Louth. It is not known who Tabeal was. The frequent mention of the house of David, and the sign afterwards given, indicate that they designed to destroy that family. (Note, 2.)

V. 7-9. Damascus was the capital of Syria; and that kingdom had arrived at its height of prosperity under Rezin, and would thenceforth decline; and Ephraim, or the kingdom of Israel, of which Samaria was the capital, was more prosperous under Pekah than it would ever afterwards be; so that in the space of sixty-five years, it would be so ruined as to be no more a people. It is computed to have been sixty-five years from this prediction to the time when Esarhaddon carried away captive the last remains of the Israelites, about the twenty-second year of Manasseh's reign. But the exact time, in which Esarhaddon carried away the remains of Israel, is not easily ascertained: much less can it be satisfactorily shown in what year of his reign Manasseh was carried to Babylon. (Notes, 2 Kings 17:24. 2 Chr. 33:11. Ezra 4:1, 2:10.) There can, however, be no doubt, that Ephraim ceased to be a people before, and very little before, the end of the sixty-fifth year after this prophecy was delivered. It was therefore absolutely determined that Syria and Israel would never subjugate Judah: yet, unless Ahaz and his family and subjects believed the word of God, and depended on him for protection, they could not be established in prosperity, or secured from perils and terrors, similar to those with which they were at this time agitated. (Notes, 2 Chr. 20:14-19. Rom. 11:16-21.) "Though the head of Syria be Damascus, and the head of Damascus, Rezin; and the head of Ephraim be Samaria, and the head of Samaria, Remaliah's son: yet within threescore and five years, Ephraim shall be broken, that he be no more a people." Dr. Jubb in Bp. Louth. This rendering supposes that a transposition in the order of the several clauses has taken place, of which the Bishop gives a very probable account. But as the meaning is still the same, it is not necessary to dwell on it.

V. 10-12. Ahaz did not properly regard the message from God, delivered to him by the prophet; he was therefore by an additional address from God required to ask a sign for the confirmation of it. "A sign wrought is a miracle for the confirmation of some message or promise delivered from God. See Ex. 4:8. Judg. 6:17. Is. 38:22. This was usually wrought presently: but sometimes a thing future, where the event is remarkable, is proposed as the sign. See also Ex. 3:12. 1 Sam. 2:34. Jer. 43:8-10." Louth. And, as a proof that Isaiah spake by divine authority, he was allowed to choose one from the depth beneath, on earth, or in the grave; or, if that would be more satisfactory, (according to the prevailing opinion of the Jews,) he might ask a sign from heaven. (Note, Matt. 16:1-4.) But he, (probably assenting in a general way to the promise which had been given, and perhaps not desiring any further intercourse with the prophet,

10 ¶ Moreover, the LORD spake again unto Ahaz, saying,

11 Ask thee a sign of the LORD thy God; ask it either in the depth, or in the height above.

12 But Ahaz said, I will not ask, neither will I tempt the LORD.

13 And he said, Hear ye now, O house of David; Is it a small thing for you to weary men, but will ye weary my God also?

14 Therefore the LORD himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son; and shall call his name Immanuel.

lest he should require him for his sins;) refused to ask a miraculous sign, avowing that he would not, without necessity, put the power and truth of God to the trial, or presumptuously demand his extraordinary interposition. (Marg. Ref. u.) He seems to have made some show of piety, but to have acted wholly under the influence of unbelief, and alienation from God.

V. 13. (Note, 2.) Ahaz was the representative of the house of David, though utterly unlike his pious ancestor; and his obstinate rebellion and unbelief not only wearied out the prophets and servants of God, which was no light matter, whatever he thought of it; but he was about to weary out the patience of God, to his own ruin; though the house of David would still be preserved. Perhaps some others of the royal family were present, with whom the prophet thus remonstrated.—Wearily. Marg. Ref. Notes, 43:22-25. v. 24, 63:10. Am. 2:13. Mal. 2:17.

V. 14. The Lord shall give it unasked, and such a sign as could not enter into your thoughts to desire. This shows that the promised sign was an extraordinary miracle, the immediate work of God, such as a son of a virgin is, which therefore must be the genuine sense of the . . . words. . . The Hebrew word (עלמה) most properly signifies a virgin, and so it is translated here by all the ancient interpreters; and is never once used in the Scripture in any other sense, as several learned men have proved, against the pretensions of the modern Jews. . . The primary signification of the word . . . is, hid or concealed: from whence it is taken to signify a virgin, because of the custom of the eastern countries to keep their virgins concealed from the view of men. Louth.—That the reader may judge of this for himself, I shall point out all the texts in which the word is used in Scripture. (Gen. 24:43. Ex. 2:8. Ps. 68:26. Prov. 30:19. Cant. 1:3. 6:8. Heb.)—Christ is called "the Seed of the woman," by way of distinction, (Gen. 3:14.) as not to be born in the ordinary way of generation. Louth.—The prophecy is introduced in so solemn a manner; the sign is so marked, as a sign selected and given by God himself, after Ahaz had rejected the offer of any sign of his own choosing, out of the whole compass of nature; the terms of the prophecy are so peculiar, and the name of the child so expressive, containing in them much more than the circumstances of the birth of a common child required, or even admitted; that we may easily suppose, that in minds prepared by the expectation of a great Deliverer to spring from the house of David, they raised hopes far beyond what the present occasion suggested; especially when it was found that in the subsequent prophecy, delivered immediately afterward, this child, called IMMANUEL, is treated as the Lord and Prince of the land of Judah. Who could this be other than the heir of the throne of David? under which character a great and even a divine person had been promised. . . St. Matthew, therefore, in applying this prophecy to the birth of Christ . . . takes it in its strictest, clearest, and most important sense; and applies it according to the original design and principal intention of the prophet. Bp. Louth. (Notes, 8:6-10. Mic. 5:3, 4, v. 3.)—Would it not be very unnatural to suppose that the prophets have been entirely silent concerning this most remarkable sign of the Messiah, (viz. his being born of a virgin,) inasmuch that an evangelist should be obliged to accommodate to this singular circumstance, a passage, which originally had no reference to the Messiah? Granville Sharp.—Thus we are to understand the Messiah as being called IMMANUEL; i. e. being really what that name imports, . . . GOD WITH US; being both properly and truly God, and called so, &c. and also living or dwelling with us men. Louth.—GOD WITH US; 'which name can agree to none, but to him who is both God and man.' (Notes, 9:6, 7. Jer. 23:5, 6.)—The passage cannot be made to accord to any events of those times, as if it meant, 'that one, who was at that time a virgin, should be married, and bear a son.' The application of the name Immanuel to one who was the governor of the land, (88.) can comfort with none but the reigning king, or the heir-apparent. but

Hezekiah was born before his father Ahaz came to the throne; so that he cannot be meant; and to whom else can the several particulars be made to accord? We can therefore admit of no interpretation, (or even accommodation,) of the prophecy, except that given by the Evangelist, (Notes, Matt. 1:22, 23.) 'that a virgin of the house of David should miraculously conceive and bear a son, who should be known to the church in all succeeding ages as "Immanuel, God with us;" "God manifest in the flesh," and become our Brother and Saviour. This event is predicted as a sign, a most extraordinary fact, a most signal interposition of Omnipotence. This virgin's Son would be called by this name, as Solomon was called Jedidiah: (Note, 2 Sam. 12:24, 25.) not that he should have no other name, or be commonly addressed by that name; but as it would properly belong to him, and he would be what that name signified. This sign was given to faith, and would encourage believers alone; for it would assure them that no designs formed to destroy the family of David could be successful, as such a Blessing was in it. (Notes, 65:8—10. Ex. 3:12. Jer. 31:21, 22, v. 22. Mic. 5:2.)

V. 15. Though this child should be miraculously conceived, and be properly called IMMANUEL; yet he would grow up like other children, by the use of the diet customary in those countries, in times of peace especially, till, or rather when, his faculties were unfolded, and he became of age to distinguish between good and evil; and then, unlike other children, he would uniformly "refuse the evil and choose the good."—I confess that I am singular, or nearly so, in supposing this language to mean any thing more than the capacity of distinguishing between good and evil; but, as all other children, when left to themselves, are without exception disposed "to choose the evil and refuse the good," decidedly preferring sin to holiness; and as Immanuel, that "holy child," no sooner exercised the rational faculties of his human nature, than he (and he alone), perfectly used them in a holy manner; I must be of opinion that this singular case was intended by the sacred writer, or rather by the Holy Spirit, who inspired him to use these peculiar expressions. (Marg. Ref. e.)

V. 16. There is very great difficulty in making out the connexion between this and the preceding verses; which is the case in some of the most remarkable predictions of Scripture: for the Lord seems purposely to cast an obscurity on them, as a trial of our humility; and to prove whether we will receive and profit by what is obvious, though we cannot satisfactorily solve every difficulty; or whether we will proudly reject the whole on that account. Some suppose, that by this child, the prophet meant his own son Shear-jashub, who stood by him: (Note, 3.) but this is not natural; and it may be questioned whether the expression, "shall know to refuse the evil, and choose the good," could properly be applied to him. Others think that the prophet meant that in less time than would be required after the birth of the Virgin's Son, for his attaining to this capacity, (that is, within two or three years,) the dreaded enemies of Judah would perish. The land of Israel must, on this interpretation, be exclusively meant, as the land which Ahaz dreaded and abhorred, for one land alone is spoken of; and "both her kings" must denote Pekah and his ally, Rezin, king of Syria; for the former was soon after cut off by Hoshea, and the latter by Tiglath-pilezer. (Notes, 8:1—4. 2 Kings 15:29, 30, 16:10—16.)—But some have supposed that the whole of the promised land was intended, and that the termination of regal authority, both in Israel and Judah, before the time that Immanuel should "know to refuse the evil and choose the good," was predicted.—'Before this child can know good from evil, this land, . . . which thou art so solicitous about, . . . shall be bereaved of both her kings: by which, we think, ought to be understood not the kings of Syria and Israel; for the former could not be called her (Canaan's) king, and the latter had but a share in it at best: but the kings of Israel and Judah; as it really was before the coming of the Messiah.' Universal History. The clause may be rendered "the land by," or concerning "which thou art disquieted;" and both the dread of Israel, and anxiety about Judah, disquieted Ahaz; and were to him as thorns or goads to keep him awake; (which the word may signify;) and no doubt the word king is often used for a succession of kings in prophetic language. Now it is very remarkable that Herod

20 In the same day shall the LORD shave with a razor that is hired, namely, by them beyond the river, by the king of Assyria, the head, and the hair of the feet: and it shall also consume the beard.

the great, the last who could be called "the king" either of Judah or Israel, lived till after Immanuel's birth, but died while he was yet an infant; and then, Shiloh being come, the sceptre departed finally from Judah, as it had long before from Israel. (Note, Gen. 49:10.)—How far the prophecy may be supposed to have received a primary accomplishment, by the deliverance, within two or three years, of Judah from the two kings which threatened its destruction; and yet afterwards to have had a far more striking and exact completion, when Immanuel was born, and when he was yet an infant, the former being a confirmation and sure pledge of the latter; I shall leave it with the reader to determine: but upon so difficult and so important a subject, I was willing to adduce every hint which might tend to a fuller elucidation of it. 'Butter and honey shall he eat, when he shall know to refuse what is evil, and to choose what is good. For before this child shall know, to refuse the evil and to choose the good, the land shall become desolate, by whose two kings thou art distressed.' Bp. Louth. As butter and honey were articles of food, plentiful in Judea during peaceable times, but not to be obtained when the country was the seat of war; the Bishop supposes, that the child referred to was born in a time of war; but that before he arrived at the age of two or three years, he should be enabled to eat butter and honey. (Note, 21—25, v. 23.)

V. 17—19. The Lord would not permit the Syrians and Israelites entirely to prevail against Ahaz; but he would have him, and his family, and idolatrous subjects to know, that such judgments were coming upon them, as had never been experienced, since the days of Rehoboam, when Jeroboam and the ten tribes revolted from the family of David. These would be brought on them especially by the king of Assyria, on whom Ahaz placed an improper dependence. (Notes, 2 Kings 15:19, 20, 16:7—18. 1 Chr. 5:25, 26. 2 Chr. 28:16—18.) but the Egyptians would also concur in them. Probably, Egypt abounded with troublesome and noisome swarms of flies; and Assyria might be remarkable for bees, which gave great pain by their stings, and collected honey from every quarter. In allusion to these insects, the Lord intimated his design of giving the signal to those nations, to come in great multitudes, and possess every part of the land. (Marg. Ref. k, l.)—'The metaphor is taken from the practice of those that keep bees; who draw them together from their hives into the field, and lead them back again, . . . by a hiss or whistle.' Cyril in Bp. Louth, on 5:26.—Judea lay between the kingdoms of Egypt and Assyria, and was continually harassed by those contending powers. The Assyrians weakened Ahaz, instead of helping him; Sennacherib exceedingly impoverished the land in Hezekiah's reign. The Assyrian king took Manasseh captive, and made the land tributary; and the kings of Babylon, who destroyed Jerusalem and desolated the land, ruled over many of the same countries. Pharaoh-necho, king of Egypt, slew good Josiah, and carried Jehoahaz prisoner into Egypt, and thus hastened the ruin of Judah.—'The uttermost parts of the rivers of Egypt,' may mean those parts of the land which bordered upon the seven mouths of the river Nile; or which lay beyond them.—Archbishop Usher . . . supposes that the conquest of Egypt (20) happened before the siege of Jerusalem by Sennacherib; and that a great many Egyptians were his auxiliaries in that expedition. Louth.—Sennacherib invaded Judea, and took the fenced cities: but he was not permitted to besiege Jerusalem. (37:33—35. Notes, 8:6—8.)

V. 20. The Lord intended to employ the king of Assyria, (whom Ahaz had hired with the sacred treasures: Note, 2 Kings 16:7—9.) as his servant in executing judgment on the land, and to give him the spoil of it for his wages: (Note, Ez. 29:17—20.) and he would destroy both princes and rulers the priests and most eminent persons, and the poor of the land, in such a manner; that the desolation would resemble the razor clearing away the hair from the head, the feet, and the beard, without any discrimination. To be shaved was considered either as a deep disgrace, or a token of mourning and distress. This gives an idea of much more terrible depredation and destruction by the Assyrian invasion, than we are apt to receive from a cursory reading of the history (Notes, 8:6—8, 10:28—34, 33:7—9. 2 Kings 18:13, 19:3.)

V. 21—25. Through the scarcity of inhabitants, and o. cattle, after these desolations, the pastures would be so luxuriant, that a young cow and two ewes would plentifully supply a man's family with milk and butter, which, with honey, would be almost the only remaining productions of the land. (Notes, 15:16.) Vineyards, which had been let at high rents, (as a thousand vines for a thousand pieces of silver yearly, Note, Cant. 8:11,12,) would then be overgrown with briers and thorns; and would become the coverts of wild beasts, or the resort of robbers, which the inhabitants should come with bows and arrows to destroy. Nay, the mattock and plough would be generally disused, of which the thorns and briers are figuratively represented as afraid; or the expression may mean, that those places, which, when the prophet wrote, were so well cultivated, that no one would have feared their being covered by briers and thorns, would then be overrun with them: in short, agriculture would cease, and the whole land would either become a forest, or a pasture for cattle. The promise made to Hezekiah, just before the destruction of Sennacherib's army, may intimate, that the land had, during the preceding desolations, been generally left uncultivated, and would require some time to bring it into the former state of cultivation. (37:30. Note, 2 Kings 19:29.) Yet, probably, subsequent more entire and long-continued desolations of Judah, by the inhabitants of the same regions, are intended. (Notes, 17-19. 27:7-11, v. 10. 32:9-14, v. 14.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9. Ungodly men are often punished by others as wicked as themselves.—"In the fear of the LORD is strong confidence;" but those who despise him, not only meet with great afflictions, but are destitute of support and comfort under them: and the most daring rebels against God are frequently most terrified by perils from their fellow-creatures; so that their "hearts are moved, as the trees of the wood are shaken by the wind." But, whatever men devise, "the counsel of the LORD shall stand;" and regard to his own glory, and to his faithful word, frequently induces him to interpose in our favour, when there is nothing else to move him to it.—When ungodly men are in distress or terror, they devise many expedients for safety: but they seldom think of humbling themselves before God, and seeking help from him; nay, if left to the bent of their own evil inclinations, they will venture any extremity of danger and misery, rather than submit to it. Our God will, however, proceed with his own plan; and not leave sinners any excuse, either through want of warning or encouragement, for continuance in sin.—Whilst he has work for the firebrands of the earth to perform, they continue to consume all before them; but when they have fulfilled their commission, they will be extinguished in smoke and stench; and they are often on the summit of prosperity, and most confidently expecting its continuance and increase, when ruin suddenly overtakes them. (Notes, Nah. 1:9-13. 1 Thes. 5:1-3.) We should then take heed to the word of God, and quietly wait its accomplishment; and committing our cause to him, we need not be faint-hearted because of any enemies. But, whatever unmerited and unexpected deliverances the Lord may vouchsafe; except we believe and obey his word, and trust in his protection, we cannot be established either in outward prosperity, or in serenity of mind.

V. 10-25. The Lord is ever ready to satisfy the humble inquirer, who desires to know and believe his truth, yet is perplexed with difficulties and objections; but no evidence can convince such as "hate the light," because they are enemies to God through pride of heart and love of sin: and infidelity is equally provoking, whether it haughtily despise the evidence which the Lord vouchsafes, or whether it presumptuously demand such proof as the case does not require or admit.—But ungodly men always vanish over their crimes with some specious colouring, even when their rebellion is most daring; and many pretend a fear of tempting God, when in fact they are determined not to trust or serve him. It is, though in itself a heinous crime, yet comparatively but a small thing, for men to grieve and weary the faithful and pious servants of God, who honestly seek their good: alas! sinners also weary the Lord himself, and daily urge him to execute vengeance upon them. But he will encourage humble believers, whilst he leaves hardened infidels to their own

By the name given to a son of the prophet, the speedy ruin of Syria and Israel, and the invasion of Judah by the king of Assyria, are predicted, 9,10-8. A formidable confederacy against Judah would be defeated, 9,10. The Jews are exhorted to fear and trust God, and not to fear men; as the way to safety, when numbers would be ensnared and destroyed, 11-15. The prophet, (as a type of Christ,) with his disciples, are signs to the people, 16-18. He warns them against diviners; directs them to the word of God as the only test and standard of truth; and predicts the blasphemy and despair of the rebellious, 19-22.

delusions: and the recollection of those promises, which will surely be fulfilled in their season, tends greatly to invigorate true faith, in the most trying circumstances.—If the prospect of the coming of the divine Saviour was a never-failing support to the hopes of ancient believers: what cause have we to rejoice and be thankful, that "the virgin hath conceived and born a Son, and called his name Immanuel" that "the Word was made flesh;" and that in our nature he passed through the several stages of childhood, youth, and manhood, to "fulfil all righteousness," as our surety, and to set us an example through all, of "refusing the evil and choosing the good;" and then closed his life, by offering himself an all-sufficient sacrifice for our sins! May we learn to trust and love him, as now risen, ascended, and, in our nature and for our benefit, reigning upon the mediatorial throne; and, whilst we come to our reconciled Father through his advocacy, may we copy his example through every scene of life and death. Thus we shall speedily be delivered from all that we dread or abhor, and become "more than conquerors" over every enemy, "through him that loved us."—But sorrows of every kind are speedily coming on all those, who "neglect so great salvation;" nor can any dignity or sacredness of character, or obscurity and meanness, preserve those from divine judgments, who continue in rebellion against God.—The desolations, which sin has brought on many churches and nations, that once were very prosperous, not only give warning to others not to copy their example, but teach every individual to moderate his regard to those objects, which may soon be torn from him; and they awfully assure us, that if we remain unfruitful under the means of grace, the Lord will shortly pronounce sentence on us, and say, "Let no fruit grow on thee henceforth for ever." (Notes, Matt. 21:17-20. Luke 13:6-9.)

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 1-4. This chapter begins a new prophecy, which some think is concluded at the seventh verse of the ninth chapter; but others suppose to be continued to the end of the twelfth chapter.—The Lord commanded his prophet to take a large roll, sufficient to contain, in legible characters, the words which are mentioned, and perhaps the whole prophecy connected with them; and "to write in it with a man's pen," that is, in the plainest manner.—Such a pen, and such characters, as are in ordinary use among men. . . . Rev. 21:17. Louth.—Some render the word, translated "a roll," a plate of polished brass, such as were used for mirrors; and by "a man's pen," an engraving tool; that, being written in this manner, it might be publicly exhibited. (Note, Hab. 2:1-3.)—The words to be written were "concerning Maher-shalal-hash-baz," which signifies, "to hasten the spoil, to take quickly the prey." It is probable, that this title was affixed to the prophecy, and it was thus intimated, that the Assyrians would speedily and rapidly execute the predicted vengeance. (Notes, 7:17-25.)—Accordingly the "prophet took faithful witnesses to record," who might be ready to testify, if required, that he wrote the prophecy at the time mentioned, and prior to the events foretold. And his wife, (called "the prophetess," either on account of her relation to him, or because she too was endued with the spirit of prophecy,) being pregnant at that time, or about that time becoming pregnant, he was ordered to give the same name to the child, when born, as a memorial of the prediction, and a token of its accomplishment. For before this child should know how to cry "My father and my mother," which children soon learn, the king of Assyria would seize and carry away the immense riches of Damascus, and all the spoil of Samaria. This prophecy was accordingly fulfilled within three years; when Tiglath-pilezer, king of Assyria, went up against Damascus and took it, and carried the people of it captive to Kir, and slew Retzin; and also took the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh, and carried them captive to Assyria. Bp. Louth. (Notes, 7:15,16. 2 Kings 15:29. 16:7-16. 1 Chr. 5:25,26.)—Some expositors think, that "the witnesses" and "the record" imply, that Isaiah, on this occasion married another wife; though it is not said that the mother of Shear-jashub was dead. (Note, 7:3.) but others suppose that these witnesses (who were persons of rank, though Uriah was a man of very bad character, Marg. Ref. c.) were called on to attend the circumcision of the prophet's son, and to attest the name by which he was called, as well as the prophecy confirmed or illustrated by that name.—⁴ And I took unto me faithful witnesses, both of this act that I did, in fastening this roll upon the doors of the temple, and the name given to my said son, in his circumcision: for . . . my wife, the prophetess, had conceived and born a son, and the Lord had appointed me to call him by this name? Bp. Hall.—It has been thought, that these scenes were only acted in vision: but this way of interpreting what is related as fact, without evident necessity, seems a dangerous liberty in explaining Scripture. (Note, Hos. 12:3.)

V. 6—8. Perhaps, there was a strong party in Judah disaffected to the family of David, which secretly favoured the confederates; and this part of the prophecy might be addressed to them, as well as to the people of Israel who had revolted from that family.—Shiloah was a rivulet near Jerusalem, from which the pool of Siloam, probably, was supplied, and of which the very name had a typical meaning. (John 9:7).—The gentleness of this small current represented the mildness and equity of the government of David and his posterity, compared with that of other neighbouring princes. (Preface to 1 Kings. Notes, 1 Kings 12:4, 16.) The Israelites, and many Jews also, ungratefully forgot their obligations to the house of David, and, through unbelief, despised the still greater Blessing which was to descend from it: so that condemning its enfeebled condition, they were ready to concur with Rezin and Pekah, in their attempts to destroy it.—As a gentle brook is an apt emblem of a mild government; so a large, impetuous, overflowing river aptly represents a mighty conqueror and a powerful tyrant; and God was about to bring the waters of such an overwhelming torrent, to punish the people for rejecting David's family, and for their multiplied sins. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 59:16—19. Rev. 12:13—17.) Sennacherib, the king of Assyria, at the head of numerous, victorious, and veteran troops, glorying in his conquests, and grasping after new acquisitions, was like a mighty river overflowing all his banks, and rolling his impetuous streams through the adjacent lands. (Note, Dan. 9:25—27.) The kingdom of Judah was represented as a human body. The inundation reached even to the neck; but the head, the capital city, Jerusalem, still remained above water. (Note, 7:17—19.)—The success of the Assyrian was also described by the similitude of a monstrous bird of prey, which stretched forth its wings over the whole land. (Notes, Ez. 17:3, 4, 7, 8.) Yet the prophet, in predicting these dreadful scenes, addressed himself to Immanuel in person, as the Proprietor of this land: the promised Messiah, "in the form of God," was then Lord of that land especially: there, in the fulness of time, he would surely assume human nature, and appear "in the form of a servant": and Immanuel would therefore certainly deliver his land from Sennacherib's invasion for his own sake, and for the sake of his promise to David his servant. (Notes, 7:14. 2 Kings 19:30, 31. Matt. 22:41—46.)—The prophet never calls Immanuel his son: and here he speaks of him as a distinct person, from both the children above mentioned; and in such a style, as befits none but him, that was to be in an eminent manner the Son of David and King of Israel. Louth.

most profound policy, and promise themselves and each other success, with the utmost confidence; and let them give their orders with the greatest decision: their efforts would be frustrated, and themselves broken to pieces. This the prophet repeated three times, to show his confidence that it would certainly be so, "for," says he, "God is with us." The word is "IMMANUEL," referring to the virgin's Son before promised: (Note, 7:14.) as this blessing was ensured to them, no counsel or confederacy which interfered with it could prosper.—This prediction has been fulfilled in the ruin of Syria and Israel; in the destruction of Sennacherib's powerful armies from various countries; and in that of Babylon and its dependences: and it is equally applicable to every combination against the church of Christ, and will be fulfilling till the last enemy shall be put under his feet. (Notes, 7:12. 54:15—17. Ps. 46:1—7. Joel 3:9—17. Mic. 4:11—13. Zech. 14:1—3. Rev. 16:12—16. 17:9—14. 19:11—21.)

V. 11—15. The prophet next declared the instruction, which the Lord had powerfully impressed upon his mind, by no means to walk in the way of that people. "The prophet felt an extraordinary impulse to deliver this message as from God, containing a doctrine of importance: (13) who likewise inspired him with courage and presence of mind to discharge his duty in this particular." Louth.—He commanded and encouraged him also to address the people saying, "Say ye not, A confederacy, &c." This was a caution to them, not to give credit to every report of combinations formed against the nation, and not to yield to desponding fears. (Note, 7:2) The word rendered "confederacy" is commonly used in a bad sense, for a unlawful conspiracy; and the combination of Rezin and Pekah was an impious attempt to defeat the promises of God to the house of David. (Notes, 7:5, 6.) It was also the effect of unbelief in the Jews, to be so alarmed at a confederacy which was sure to be defeated; and their propensity to form alliances with heathen princes arose from distrust of God, and disregard to his commandments. "Many of the Jews were secret friends to Rezin and Pekah, and this circumstance much increased the fears of that invasion; because it was given out that they had a strong party among the people of Judea." Louth.—This was therefore a conspiracy in the most criminal sense of the word. Instead of this sinful fear of man, the people were called on to "sanctify the LORD of hosts himself, and let him be their fear, and their dread." (Notes, Matt. 10:27, 28. Rev. 15:4—4, v. 4.) That is, they were required to honour his glorious majesty, to dread his wrath, to reverence his authority, to cleave to his worship and service, and to trust in his mercy, truth, and power. For "he would be a Sanctuary," a holy Refuge to such as thus sanctified him: (Notes, 26:20, 21. Ez. 11:14—16.) but, at the same time, he would be "for a Stone of stumbling, and a Rock of offence" or an occasion of falling, "to both the houses of Israel" that is to that large majority of both nations, which did not trust in him and serve him: "and for a Gin and a Snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem" especially.—In the time of Sennacherib's invasion, and afterwards during the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, and the consequent captivity, and at many other times; whilst true believers found "the LORD a Sanctuary" to them; multitudes of unbelieving Jews were emboldened in presumptuous confidence, by their external relation to God, and by their privileges; and this unwarranted dependence, whilst they continued impenitent and rebellious, proved a snare to them, and accelerated their ruin. But the references made to this and similar passages, in the New Testament, point out its grand accomplishment, and show whom the apostles understood to 15 And many among them shall ^{stumble}, and fall, and be broken, and be snared, and be taken.

16 ^{And} ^{bind up} the testimony, ^{seal} the law ^{among} my disciples.

17 And ^I will wait upon the LORD, that ^{hideth} his face from the house of Jacob, and ^I will look for him.

18 Behold, ^I and the children whom the LORD hath given me, ^{are} ^{for} signs and for wonders in Israel from the LORD of hosts, ^{which} dwelleth in mount Zion.

19 And when they shall say unto you, ^{Seek} unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards ^{that} peep, and that mutter; ^{shall} not a people seek unto their God? ^{for} the living to the dead?

20 To ^{the} law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, ^{it} is because ^{there is} no light in them.

21 And they shall pass ^{through} it, ^{hardly} bestead and hungry: and it shall come to pass, that, when they shall be hungry, ^{they} shall fret themselves, and ^{curse} their king and their God, and look upward.

be "the LORD of hosts himself." (Notes, 28:16. Matt. 21:40—44. Luke 2:33—35. Rom. 9:30—33. 1 Pet. 2:7,8.) For while Christ and his cross were a Sanctuary to the remnant of believers, they proved a stumblingblock to the Jewish nation in general; and their erroneous explication of their own Scriptures, and false confidence that God would protect them, ensnared them to their ruin, which was attended with unheard of circumstances of horror.—This text is directly spoken of God by the prophet, but applied to Christ in the above-mentioned places. . . . A plain proof that Christ is God, and is described as such by the prophets. Louth.

V. 16. The prophet delivered the testimony and command of God to the people. (Notes, 20. Ps. 19:7—11. 1 John 5:9—12.) but they, being generally blinded by their prejudices and sins, did not understand his words; so that they were "bound up and sealed among his disciples," or those who cordially attended on his instructions. (Notes, 28:14,15. 29:9—12,17.) Nay, they were in a great measure closed, and "sealed up" from believers, as they related to future events; yet the prophet was ordered to preserve his predictions, as a sacred deposit for future ages. (Note, Dan. 12:4.)—Thus the doctrines, promises, predictions, and commandments of Christ, were "sealed among his disciples;" others disregarded them, and the Jews in particular have the veil upon their hearts to this day. (Notes, Matt. 13:10—15. 2 Cor. 3:12—16.) nay, where the word of Christ relates to future and remote events, it is, in great measure, sealed up even from his disciples, until its accomplishment. 'Although at present they were as a book sealed up: yet when the event answered the prediction, they would be a justification of God's truth, and of those who depended on his word.' Louth.

V. 17. The prophet foresaw, that the Lord would "hide his face," and withdraw the tokens of his special favour, from the house of Jacob; but he would "wait on" him, and look for his return in favour to them. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 30:18, 19. 54:6—10. Mic. 7:5—7. Hab. 2:1—3. 3:17—19.) This might refer to preceding calamities, and to the Babylonian captivity, and the restoration of the Jews to their own land: but it seems also to mark out their present rejected and dispersed state, and to imply a promise of their future admission into the church, and restoration to their former prosperity.

V. 18. The prophet had called the two children, "which God had given him," by very significant names; (Notes, 1—4. 7:3.) and every time they were mentioned, they would bring his predictions of judgment and of mercy to remembrance. Some of the people would be astonished, that the prophet should give his sons such remarkable names; and others would deride both him and them with the most entire scorn and contempt: so that "he and his children were for signs and wonders in Israel, from the LORD," who had ordered him thus to call them. (Notes, Ps. 71:7. Zech. 3:8.) For though they were not miraculous signs, confirming to the senses the certainty of the predictions: yet they were memorials from God concerning them, suited to excite attention and expectation.—St. Paul has quoted this passage in an argumentative discourse, and applied it in such a manner, as proves, that Immanuel himself, and his people, whom he condescends to own both as brethren and children, were especially intended. (Notes, 53:9,10. Ps. 22:30,31. Heb. 2:10—13.) He was "a sign, that should be spoken against;" (Note, Luke 2:33—35.) and they have ever been beheld with wonder and derision, or detestation, because of their conformity to him, and their zealous attachment to his cause, doctrines, and precepts.—This is, among many, a clear instance, by the apostle's testimony, of a twofold fulfilment of prophecies; one more immediate, but less important or adequate; the other more remote, but more fully answering to the emphatical language of the inspired writer.

V. 19. The unbelieving Jews were prone to seek information, counsel, and help, from diviners and wizards of different deceptions; which was expressly forbidden in the law, and was in fact worshipping the devil: and they even counselled and encouraged each other to do it, in their difficulties, and when "the LORD hid his face from" them. (Notes, 47:12—15. Ex. 21:18. Lev. 20:6. Deut. 18:9—12.) These persons, it seems, used strange fantastic gestures in their incantations; such as peeping out of the corners of their eyes, and muttering as if they spake out of their belly; with other ceremonies suited to their abominable practices. (Marg. Ref.) But when the Jews were persuaded to seek unto such persons, the prophet instructed them to inquire, whether a people should not seek to their God; and whether it were right or reasonable to leave the living to consult the dead; the living God, to consult dead idols, or the spirits of dead men, whom these witches and wizards pretended to bring up to them! (Notes, 1 Sam. 28:6—19.) A strong expression of indignant abhorrence.

V. 20. The law of God is the standard of duty; his "sure testimony," the standard of truth; his promise, the firm ground of hope.—When, therefore, the people wanted instruction, counsel, or encouragement, let them go to the law, truths, and promises of God. If they would not receive the prophet's message, or doubted its authenticity, let them recur to the law of Moses, and other preceding parts of revelation. Let them prove all their principles, practices, and characters, by this standard: and try the doctrines and counsels of the instructors and advisers by the same touchstone. But if any were so perverse, as to reject and contradict this simple rule of judgment, it was plain they were devoid of spiritual understanding; for no hope or comfort could be found in any other way.—They have no knowledge, but are blind leaders of the blind." (Notes, 30:8—11. Ps. 119:130. Jer. 8:8,9. Mic. 3:5—7. Matt. 6:22,23. 15:12—14.)—Philosophical illuminators, and enthusiastical pretenders to new revelations, not to be judged of by "the law and the testimony," are alike concerned in this decision.—This interpretation, however scriptural, apposite, and important, is objected to, on account of a critical difficulty; as if our translation could not convey the true meaning, because the root of the word rendered "light," signifies "to make dark." But the same noun is used for the morning or day-break. (when a little light diminishes the darkness,) in the following passages, among many more: (Gen. 32:25,27. Josh. 6:15. 1 Sam. 9:26. Job. 38:12. Ps. 139:9.) so that the last clause, I apprehend, with deference to the authority of Bp. Louth, may be fairly translated: "if they speak not according to this word, it is because no morning" (not the least dawn of light) "is in him;" i. e. in any one of them. (Notes, Prov. 4:18,19. Hos. 6:1—3. 2 Pet. 1:19—21.) "Unto the command, and unto the testimony, let them seek: If they will not speak according to this word, in which there is no obscurity." Bp. Louth.—In this translation, the verse contains an appeal, in support of the prophet's word; in which there was no obscurity, to the law and to the testimony; to the preceding parts of the sacred oracles. But our translation, which seems genuine, contains a more solemn, decisive, and scriptural appeal, applicable in all ages and cases.

V. 21, 22. Inevitable and intolerable evils were coming on each of those, who rejected "the law and testimony" of God, to trust in diviners, idols, or carnal confidences. None of them would by any means escape the approaching calamities, and all would pass through them in the utmost distress and penury. And when ready to perish with hunger, they would increase their own anguish by extreme impatience: they would curse their king, or rulers, for their ruinous measures: and even blaspheme God, while in vain they looked upward for help. (Notes, 2 Kings 6:28—31. Rev. 16:10,11.) Nor could any assistance or relief be obtained: but on which side soever they looked, they would behold troubles, dismay, and increasing anguish; till hardened in impious and impetuous rage and blasphemy, they would be driven into final despair and misery. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 10:21—23. Prov. 14:32. Luke 21:25—28. 2 Pet. 2:17. Jude 11—13.)—This may refer to the miseries of many individuals in Sennacherib's invasion: or rather predict the dreadful calamities during the

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. We have continual reason to bless God, for causing his revealed will to be written for our instruction, "with a man's pen," in language level to our feeble capacities; and for giving us, in his providence, a faithful translation of the Scriptures into our own tongue.—Those who treat on divine matters ought to study plainness, that men in general may understand them: even though it should interfere with the display of their eloquence and erudition, and with their reputation among the learned and judicious few.—The accomplishment of the prophecies forms a conclusive evidence of the divine original of the Scriptures: too much care cannot be taken to ascertain, that they were written on the occasions mentioned in them; and the testimony of the Jews, who have ever been "faithful witnesses to record," that the books of the Old Testament have been handed down, through succeeding ages, from the persons whose names they bear, is very valuable and useful, as a cogent argument in our controversy with the enemies of our holy faith.—We should endeavour, that every surrounding object may remind us of the words of God, whether of judgment or of mercy; and that those treasures which men idolize or abuse, will speedily be torn from them.—Those, who reject the salvation and authority of Christ, and refuse his peace and consolation, that they may rejoice in worldly confidences and pleasures; will soon find their licentious liberty to be the basest slavery, their joys to terminate in anguish, and their security in desperation. But happy are the subjects of Immanuel, who live in his land; for he will take care of his church in the most urgent circumstances. The enemies of his cause may often come in, like an inundation from some mighty river, overflowing all its banks; they may sweep to destruction numbers of professed Christians, and occasion many troubles to believers; but the church will hold her head above water, in the worst of times, and may bid defiance to all the hosts of her enemies. (Notes, Matt. 7:24-27. 16:18.) Let persecuting kings and nobles conspire against her, with combined power; let wealth and nobility unite with learning, genius, and philosophy, to run down the despised doctrine of the cross; let men of every nation associate, and gird themselves; let them take counsel, give laws, menace, boast, speak, write, triumph; yet, as Jesus is "Immanuel, God with us," we may boldly say, "the LORD of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our Refuge." (Notes, Ps. 46:1-7.) Their counsel shall come to naught, their words shall not stand; and the present and future enemies of the church shall share the fate of those, who formerly have been broken to pieces; and have been constrained to say, "Thou hast overcome, O Nazarene!"

V. 11-22. It requires the powerful influences of divine grace to preserve even pious men from conforming, in some respects, to the way of nominal Christians, and formal professors of the gospel; and from either desponding, or employing, carnal weapons, in perilous times. When those who are weak or wavering in the faith see persecuting powers, or boasting scholars, combining against the people or truths of Christ, they are ready to give up all for lost. But let us not be thus dismayed; the cause of God is in no danger; but the ruin will fall either upon open opposers, or hypocritical friends. They who "sanctify the LORD of hosts himself," and fear and trust in him, as dwelling in human nature; who value nothing in comparison with his grace, and fear nothing so much as coming short of it, or dishonouring his name, shall find him "a Sanctuary," and be kept by his power through faith unto salvation.—But the crucified Immanuel, who was, and is, "a stumblingstone and a rock of offence" to unbelieving Jews; is no less so to thousands, who are called Christians. The preaching of the cross is foolishness in their estimation: his doctrines and precepts, and the reproach of his cause offend them; and yet they rely on a name, a form, or a notion; and are buoyed up in vain confidence, till they are snared and taken captive by Satan at his will.—Even to this day, the truths and commands of Christ are scorned from the generality of his nominal disciples; so that they do not perceive the nature or glory of them. "It is given" to believers only, "to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God;" but "to them that are without" all is enveloped in parables. (Notes, 6:9,10. Matt. 13:10-15.) "The secret of the LORD is with them that fear him;" (Notes, Ps. 25:14.) and they are "all taught of God;" yet their knowledge will not be complete, till "the mystery of God be finished," and till he see him face to face. In the mean time they wait on him, and look for him, even when he hides his face from the land of Naphtali, and "afterward did more grievously afflict her" by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, in "Galilee of the nations."

them, and is pleased to leave his church in trouble: and they shall not wait or look in vain. He will come at death to receive their souls; he will come ere long to render his truth universally victorious, and he will come at length to raise the dead, and to judge the world.—As the Divine Redeemer was contradicted, and blasphemed, and treated with the utmost scorn and enmity, even by Israel; and as "he is not ashamed to call us brethren" and "children;" surely we should not be averse to be treated by the world, and even by professed Christians, as he was, and as prophets and apostles were in their days. But let us aim to be a memorial, and an example to them: and let parents so educate their children, and ministers so watch over their people, as may give them a good hope of being able to say, in the great day of account, "Behold, I, and the children whom the LORD hath given me;" and then will their salvation be completed "from the LORD of hosts, which dwelleth in Zion."—Let us then keep close to his word and ordinances, and not listen to deceivers of whatever name, who would excite our attention by unscriptural and unauthenticated pretensions to intercourse with the world of spirits; or who use vain and unaccountable observances by way of charms or incantations, in order to obtain supernatural help and information. Should not the worshippers of God trust in him, and seek assistance from him alone? and should they use any suspicious or unwarranted means of obtaining relief? And would not this be, to go from the living God, to seek help from the dying, or the dead? Let us then attend to the law of God, where all such practices are condemned; and to his "testimony," where all needful or desirable help is promised, in the use of appointed or allowed means. Let us try all doctrines and practices by that unerring rule and warranted standard: and so trust his promises, as to obey his precepts. In all this, neither obscurity, nor any thing dubious, can be found: but those who speak contrary to this word, and attempt to establish aught in opposition to it, are evidently infatuated and "blinded by the god of this world;" and all the miseries, which ever were felt or witnessed on earth, are as nothing, compared with that anguish, despair, and blasphemy which will shortly overwhelm them. Then will they fret themselves, and curse those who have led them into their delusions; and, looking round on every side for help, but in vain, they shall be driven into "the blackness of darkness for ever." May the Lord preserve us from this condemnation!

NOTES.—CHAP. IX. V. 1. The connexion of this verse, with those which precede and follow it, is attended with great difficulty; and its meaning, as it stands in our translation, very perplexed. It probably should be rendered, "But there shall not hereafter be darkness in the land which was distressed: in the former time he debased the land of Zebulun, and the land of Naphtali: but in the latter time he hath made it glorious; even the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the nations." Bp. Lowth. The kings of Assyria first ravaged those countries, which lay on the coasts of the sea of Tiberias, and on the northern part of Jordan, called "Galilee of the Gentiles," as bordering on the Gentiles, or long occupied by them: (1 Kings 9:11. Note, 2 Kings 15:29.) and that region was first favoured and honoured with the preaching of the gospel by Christ and his apostles. (Marg. Ref. Notes, John 1:43-46. 2:1-11.) The word (הבכר) rendered "more grievously afflict," may mean, and indeed more properly signifies, made glorious; and this gives a clear sense to the passage. Whatever judgments came upon unbelievers, or the nation in general, mercy was reserved for Israel, which would be first communicated to those parts of the land, which had been first ruined. And this event seems to have been exclusively predicted, according to St. Matthew's interpretation of it. (Note, Matt. 4:12-17.) To make the Hebrew text correspond with the sense of it given by the Evangelist, we must understand it as a comfortable promise to those parts: . . . whereas the contrary is rather suggested in the usual translation of the words. Lowth.

V. 2. When Israel forsook "the law and the testimony" of God, the nation was left in darkness and ignorance, wickedness and misery; as "in the land of the shadow of death," a shadow of the state of the wicked in another world. But when Christ came, "a great light shined upon them," to show them the path of truth, comfort, and holiness. (*Marg. Ref. Notes, 60:1-3. Matt. 4:12-17. v. 16. Luke 1:76-79. John 12:34-36. V. 3. The nation of Israel had been immensely multiplied, notwithstanding all calamities; yet in general their joy was not increased, because of their sins. But when this light arose, believers rejoiced before God with holy joy; as men rejoice when they reap the harvest, after the toil of cultivation and the patience of waiting for it; or when they divide the spoil, after the perils of the battle. (Marg. Ref. Note, 53:9-12.) 'When thou shalt thus graciously visit thy people, howsoever the nation shall not be greater than it now is, yet the joy of it shall be more: as now contrarily, the people are more, but the joy is not more.' Bp. Hall. 'The prophet notes it to be a religious joy; because it is said to be before God, that is in his presence, and with a grateful acknowledgment of his benefits. (Deut. 12:12.) Louth.—Several manuscripts read, (as the margin also does), "Thou hast to him," (or to the nation, to Israel), "increased the joy," which seems to denote, that the events predicted would be the source of greater joy to all true Israelites, the substance of the nation, (Note, 6:13.) than any of their former deliverances; though at the same time, the unbelieving Jews, who constituted the bulk of the nation, would be driven into darkness; as they accordingly were, both as to their outward miseries, and their dark and blinded state in respect of spiritual concerns.

V. 4, 5. The Jews were successively delivered from the burdensome and galling yoke of the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Persians, and Macedonians: but these deliverances were only a shadow of redemption from the yoke of Satan; and that redemption seems here especially predicted, as if already accomplished. By the gospel of Christ and the pouring out of his Spirit, the Lord brake the yoke from off his people, and delivered them from the heavy burden, hard drudgery, and cruel treatment, of that insolent oppressor; as in the day when he delivered Israel from the Midianites by Gideon. (Notes, 10:24-27, 14:24-27, 21:61.—3. Judg. 7:16-25.) Those battles, by which successful warriors rescued nations from oppression, were attended "with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood;" but the redemption, here predicted, would be "with burning, and fuel of fire" the influences of the Spirit are like purifying fire; sharp afflictions, as a fiery trial, refine believers as gold in the furnace; and the predicted events were attended with most tremendous vengeance upon the unbelieving Jewish nation; as they will be finally on all unbelievers. (Notes, 2 Thes. 1:5-10, Rev. 20:11-15.)—Some explain the fifth verse of the burning of the weapons of war, the accoutrements of warriors, and the garments rolled in blood, under the reign of the Prince of peace. (Notes, Ps. 46:9. Ez. 39:8-10.)

V. 6, 7. The connexion of this illustrious prophecy with the preceding verse assures us, that it was the immediate scope of the Holy Spirit in the whole passage, to point out the coming and kingdom of Christ.—The prophet spake of the predicted blessings, as if already communicated. "Unto us," says he, "a Child is born." Angels say, "Unto you," (Note, Luke 2:9-14, v. 11.) but this Child was born for the benefit of us men, of us sinners, of us believers, of all believers from the beginning to the end of the world.—"Unto us a Son is given." The only begotten Son of God is given to us, and for us, to become the Son of man; that he might be our Surety, Sacrifice, Advocate, and Salvation: he was given by the Father, and he gave himself.—"And the government shall be on his shoulder." (Marg. Ref. s. Notes, 22:20-25. Rev. 3:7.) The Redeemer rules, not only over his people, but over all worlds as Mediator, for their benefit; and he is able to support the weight of this universal and absolute authority. (Notes, Matt. 28:18. Eph. 1:15-23, v. 22. Phil. 2:9-11.) "His name shall be called WONDERFUL," he is wonderful in his person, as IMMANUEL, God and man, "God manifest in the flesh," in his love and mercy; in his hatred of sin, and righteous regard to the holy law; in his compassion to the vilest and worst of sinners; in his majesty and humiliation: in his perfect righteousness, and willing sufferings; and in the method which he took to baffle Satan, overcome death, reconcile divine justice and mercy, and establish his kingdom by dying on the cross. In every part of his character and work, he may justly "be called Wonderful;" and also, in that his glory is incomprehensible, "for no man knoweth the Son but the Father." (Notes, Gen. 32:

(Notes, Zech. 6:12, 13. John 1:18. Eph. 3:9-12. Col. 2:1-4, 8-10.) For "this child born" is indeed "the mighty God," one with and equal to the Father, according to the sacred mystery of the Trinity in Unity: he possesses all divine attributes, and exercises them through his human nature; and thus is he "mighty" to save his people, and to vanquish and destroy all enemies. (Marg. Ref. x. Note, 1 Tim. 3:16.)—He is also "the everlasting Father;" "the second Adam, the Lord from heaven," "the everlasting Father" of the whole church, which derives its spiritual being and life from him, as the whole race of men derive their existence from the first Adam. He is "become to all them that obey him, the Author of eternal salvation;" (Heb. 5:9.) "the Author of eternity, by whom the church and every member of it, shall ... have immortal life." (Notes, 1 Cor. 15:45-49.) "The Septuagint render the words Πατήρ μελλοντος αιωνος, 'The Father of the world to come,'" and the Vulgar Latin follow this translation; which since the Hebrew words admit of it, I can't but have a particular regard for: ... because I am persuaded it is from the authority of this text, that the kingdom of the Messiah is called in the New Testament, by the title of μελλον αιων, 'The age, or world to come.' (Matt. 12:32. Heb. 2:5. 6:5.) Louth. And as he has loved his church "with an everlasting love;" so he will for ever live to bless it, being "the Prince of peace;" the great Author of reconciliation to God: the Giver of peace in the heart and conscience; the Prince, who commands all his subjects to live at peace with each other, and inclines them to follow peace with all men. (Marg. Ref. z. Notes, Jer. 23:5, 6. Heb. 7:1-3.)—"Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." When his kingdom is truly set up in the heart, the efficacy of it shall endure and increase for ever: as it is set up on earth, it shall continue to diffuse its influence, till his authority be universally submitted to, and produce universal harmony; so that men shall "beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation: neither shall they learn war any more." (Notes, 2-5. Rev. 20:1-6.) yet even this shall be increased, and perfect in heaven for ever.—He shall reign "upon the throne of David, to order it and establish it ... from henceforth even for ever." (Note, Luke 1:26-33.) He rules in perfect wisdom and equity, he requires righteousness of his subjects, and teaches them to do judgment: he justifies and sanctifies them, and at length will present them faultless before his Father's throne. And, though his mediatorial kingdom, as he reigns in human nature over all worlds, to fulfil his gracious undertakings, will then terminate, "that God may be all in all;" yet his special relation to his people, as their Lord and King, will endure for ever. (Notes, Dan. 2:44, 45. 7:13, 14. 1 Cor. 15:20-28.)—These predictions implied most stupendous interpositions of the Lord, in the behalf of his people; and the complete performance of them would be attended with immense difficulties: yet the "zeal of the Lord," for the glory of his own justice, truth, and love, and of his holy law and service, would ensure the event; and his power, as the Lord of hosts, would render the whole perfectly easy. (Note, 2 Kings 19:30, 31.)—The exact coincidence of this prophecy with the doctrine of the New Testament, in the literal interpretation of each, shows evidently, that Jewish prophets and Christian teachers had precisely the same view of the person and salvation of the Messiah: and not only tends to demonstrate the divine authority of the Scriptures, in opposition to avowed infidels of every name; but to assure us of the doctrines therein to be taught by them, that we may be fortified against the subtle attempts of more covert enemies to explain them away.

V. 8-12. 'This whole passage,' (to the fourth verse of the next chapter,) 'reduced to its proper and entire form, and healed of the dislocation, which it suffers, by the absurd division of the chapters, makes a distinct prophecy and a just poem, remarkable for the regularity of its disposition, and the elegance of its plan. It has no relation to the preceding or the following prophecy; though the parts, violently torn asunder, have been, on the one side, or the other, patched on to them. Those relate principally to the kingdom of Judah; this is addressed exclusively to the kingdom of Israel.' Ep. Louth.—The Lord had, in the law of Moses, and by the ministry of the prophets, denounced dreadful threatenings on those of the posterity of Jacob, who should renounce his worship; and this word "lighted," or was aboⁿ, to have its full effect, on the people of Israel. Then the Ephraimites, (the kingdom of the ten tribes,) and the citizens of Samaria, would know the truth of JEHOVAH's word, and the power of his wrath. For under the more gentle rebukes, by the first inroads of the Assyrian kings, they continued proud and stout-hearted, and despised the judgments of God; boasting that they would rebuild their ruined cities and palaces, in a far more magnificent manner, and with more durable materials. But indeed he was about to visit them with more dreadful vengeance: for the king of Assyria, the adversary of Rezin, would shortly subjugate Syria; and then, under the command of the conqueror, the Syrians would appear as enemies to Israel: and whilst these combined forces met them from the east, the Philistines would also attack them from the west, and cut off those who attempted to flee. Thus they would devour Israel with open mouth, as the wolf does the helpless lamb; or, in every corner, as the clause may be rendered: yet even this would not appease the Lord's anger, or prevent his continuing to execute vengeance upon them. (Note, 5:24, 25.)—Some expositors, by a change in the text, on the authority of certain manuscripts, suppose that the princes, not the enemies, of Rezin are meant: but in fact the desolations of Israel were principally made by the Assyrians, after they had subverted the kingdom of Syria, and we do not any where read, that either Rezin, or his princes, invaded the kingdom of Israel. (Notes, 7:5-9. 8:6-8. 2 Kings 15:19, 20, 29. 17:1-6. 18:9-12.)

Shall know, &c. (9) 'With briars and thorns Gideon taught the men of Succoth; (Judg. 8:16.) or, as the margin reads, "made them to know" what they had deserved.' Louth. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 13-17. The Israelites did not at all repent of their sins, or return to the worship of the Lord, when he punished them; nor did they seek help and protection from his power. He was therefore determined to cut off every order and description of men from the land, even "the head and the tail," as from the body of an animal; even the stoutest branch from a tree, and the rush which grows in poor or marshy lands. By "the head," the elders and nobles of the land were intended; and their false prophets were "the tail," the most worthless and contemptible part of the body politic. (Notes, 29:9-12. 56:9-12. Jer. 23:16-30. Ez. 13:1-16. Mal. 2:4-9. Rev. 19:17-21.) For both their rulers and teachers had flattered the people in sin, and grievously misled them to their destruction. (Marg. Note, 3:12-15.) and they were become so wretchedly corrupt, that every one was either profane, or a hypocrite in his religion, and an evil-doer in his dealings, and deceitful in his conversation: so that God could no longer take pleasure in any of them, neither would he have mercy even on orphans and widows, seeing even they were involved in the general guilt and condemnation; nor would any judgments short of utter ruin appease his wrath, or terminate the execution of his vengeance.—The leaders, &c. (16) 'When the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch. The margin reads, They that call this people blessed.' Louth. (3:12.)

V. 18-21. The wickedness of the nation like a fire for a time smothered up, would at length burst forth into a universal conflagration, causing all their glory to vanish, as the columns of smoke ascend and are dissipated. (Notes, 27:2-6. 33:10-13. Ez. 15:6-8. Deut. 32:22. Job 31:9-12. Ez. 20:45-48. Mal. 4:1. Luke 23:26-31. Acts 2:14-21.) For their sins rendered them fuel for the wrath of God, and this would darken all their hopes and prosperity: and whilst his judgments, and their enemies, straightened them on every side, they would be so infatuated as to destroy each other without mercy. In their extreme necessity they would plunder and devour one another; snatching on every side for sustenance, yet consumed by unsatisfied hunger, till they were ready to tear their own flesh, or to destroy their nearest relations, as both Manasseh and Ephraim were descended from Joseph. (Note, 49:22-26.)—When they thus preyed on their nearest relations, from whom help might have been expected; they, figuratively, "ate every man the flesh of his own arm." (Jer. 19:9.)—But the more they were wasted, the more furious would their contentions be; and yet, when occasion offered, the most enraged parties would unite to harass the kingdom of Judah. (Marg. Ref. Note, Gal. 5:13-15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. The Lord sometimes visits with his choicest mercies those places which have experienced his severest vengeance: and the gospel, faithfully preached, is an abundant counterbalance for all the temporal vexations, to which any nation can be exposed. Wretched is the state of fallen man without this blessed word of salvation. Men "walk on still in darkness," yea, in the way to final darkness and hopeless misery. Such must have been the dreary condition of the whole human race, ever since the entrance of sin, had it not been for the promised Saviour, who, "in the fulness of time," "came a light into the world," "to lighten the Gentiles, and to be the glory of his people." Blessed be God, this "Sun of Righteousness" has risen on our land, and still shines around us with glorious splendour: yet numbers prefer darkness, and choose to continue "in the land of the shadow of death," that they may have no disturbance in their sinful pursuits. (Notes, Job 24:13-17. John 1:4, 5. 3:19-21.) Yea, many who glory of living in this enlightened age, and even of being its luminaries, hate this heavenly light, and prefer to it their own proud imaginations and vague conjectures! But let us remember that this light is intended "to guide our feet into the ways of peace," and let us earnestly pray that it may shine into our hearts, and make us wise unto salvation. Then indeed the multiplying of believers will "increase our joy" in the Lord. This will far exceed "the joy of harvest," or of "those who divide the spoil;" (Note, Ps. 4:6-8.) and abundantly recompense us

CHAPTER X.

Woe denounced against the rulers for their iniquitous laws and decrees, 1-4. God commissions the prophet to punish the Jews; describes and rebukes his insolence and impiety, and predicts the ruin of him and his army, 5-19. He promises mercy to a remnant, attended with righteous judgments on the nations, 20-23. The people are encouraged not to fear the Assyrians; and a prophetic description is given of Sennacherib's progress, and the sudden ruin of his army, 24-34.

W^O unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness which they have prescribed; for all our godly sorrow, self-denial, diligence, losses, and persecutions for the Lord's sake; for if he has delivered us from the slavery of sin and Satan, he will at length rescue us from the yoke and scourge of every oppressor.—Our chief conflict must be with our own sins; and in this warfare we may hope to obtain more splendid victories, than any conqueror ever did in his bloody contests; for the influences of divine grace will daily weaken our lusts; even fiery trials and afflictions shall concur in securing our victory; and every advantage over the enemy will be an earnest of our eternal triumphs, when made "more than conquerors through him who loved us."—But all our hopes and joys originate from the incarnate Redeemer: 'for us men and for our salvation' he became "a child born, a Son given," that he might be "the propitiation for our sins;" for us he obeyed, suffered, and died; for us he arose, ascended, reigns, and intercedes; in our behalf, "all power is given to him in heaven and earth." Let us adore the wonders of his person, character, and love; and learn in every thing to seek and follow his "counsel," as well as to obey his command. (Notes, Prov. 1:19-31. Rev. 3:17-19.) We may indeed safely intrust our souls in his hand, for he is "the mighty God," and if, from him as "the everlasting Father," we receive spiritual life, and bear his image, and are "counted to him for a generation;" we shall certainly enjoy that peace which he made and bestows; and shall learn, as the subjects of "the Prince of Peace," to be peaceable and peacemakers, and to seek the peace of the church and of the world. Let us then pray without ceasing, that his government and peace may increase in our hearts; and rapidly diffuse their benign influence in the world, until they prevail against all opposition, and make all things subject unto them. No doubt this will ere long be the case; for "the zeal of the LORD of hosts will surely perform" whatever relates to the execution of his purposes, the ruin of his enemies, the prevalence of his cause, and the salvation of his people.

V. 8-21. The words of terror which God has spoken will as surely be accomplished, as those of his love; and they often "light" with dreadful efficacy upon his professing people: for they, who will not trust and serve him as a God of mercy, must know him as a "God to whom vengeance belongeth." That pride and stoutness of heart, which render numbers fearless of consequences, and induce them to despise rebukes and warnings, and to flatter themselves, and each other, with the hopes of impunity and prosperity in sin, will hasten and aggravate their destruction; and unless the afflicted "turn to Him that smiteth them," and humbly seek his mercy, "his anger will not be turned away, but his hand will be stretched out still;" and temporal calamities will only prove an earnest of eternal misery. Even "the ancient and honourable" will thus perish, if they continue in sin; but the false teachers, who for filthy lucre's sake promise them peace, will be marked with peculiar contempt and detestation. Yet how common is it for the leaders of the people to cause them to err, and for "the blind to lead the blind," and to speak peace and blessedness to themselves, and to each other; till they fall together into the pit of destruction! (Notes, Deut. 29:13, 20. Jer. 6:13-15.)—The righteous Lord can take no pleasure in the works of iniquity, however they may be distinguished: if those, who are young in years, be old in wickedness, they may expect the more speedy punishment: nor will he spare the impenitent, however otherwise entitled to commiseration.—Hypocrisy, or impiety, is commonly connected with dishonesty and deceitful insinuation; and when these become general, they mark a people ripe for destruction: for this is a fire which will consume all before it.—The vengeance of God is frequently executed on men by means of their own iniquities: and in times of public calamity, the rich and noble are only distinguished from the poor, as the lofty cedars are from the briars and thorns, when the whole forest is destroyed by one general conflagration. But all that can be suffered on earth, from the anger of the Lord, is but a shadow of the wrath to come: and the enraged and furious discord to which men have sometimes been given up, when suffering for their sins, to the increase of their own and each other's torment, suggests to the mind a horrid idea of the misery of the wicked in another world; when, bereft of all hope and comfort, and enduring the fiery wrath of God, every one will be tormented by his own conscience, and express without restraint all his malignant passions; and so enhance the anguish and vexation of his fellow-sufferers.—Blessed be God for "Jesus Christ, who delivereth us from the wrath to come!"

NOTES.—CHAP. X. V. 1-4. These verses belong to the subject of the preceding chapter: yet they are so expressed as to include the rulers and magistrates of the Jews, as well as those in Israel; and indeed those of every nation who pervert authority in a similar way. (Note, 9:8-12.) The persons, whose conduct drew on them the denounced wo, enacted laws which authorized grievous oppression, and decided causes in the most iniquitous manner: and their edicts and decrees were enrolled by the scribes and writers, and prescribed for rules and precedents in the inferior courts. This was purposely done, in order that they might rob the poor, and seize upon the property of the orphans and widows, under colour of law and justice. (Notes, 1:16-20. 3:12-15. 1 Kings 21:8-14. Ps. 94:1-7, 20, 21. Am. 5:10-13. Mic. 2:1-5. 3:8-12. 7:1-4.)—The Lord, indeed, still acknowledged Israel as his people. He had yet a small remnant, especially among the poor, who were peculiarly exposed to these oppressions. But he was about to send the Assyrians from afar to execute his vengeance, and what would the oppressors do in those desolations? whither would they flee for safety? or to those keeping would they commit their ill-gotten riches, in which they gloried, and with which they then lived in splendour and luxury? (Notes, 2:19-21. Prov. 10:2, 3. 11:4. Jam. 5:1-6.) For the Lord would certainly withdraw his protection: and then the very prisoners, or men who had been mortally wounded, and left among the slain, would prevail against them. (Jer. 37:10.) These strong expressions denote how easily and certainly they would be ruined, by the continued anger and powerful vengeance of God.—Day of visitation. (3) (Marg. Ref. f. Notes, Gen. 21:1, 2. Jer. 10:12-15. v. 15.)

V. 5, 6. The prophet here enters on another subject: and some think that this prediction was delivered after the ruin of Samaria, in the reign of Hezekiah; because Sennacherib is introduced, boasting of what he had done to that city. But perhaps this also was spoken prophetically, as what the Lord foreknew he would say, when marching against Jerusalem: and this prophecy might have been delivered, when Ahaz was depending on the assistance of the king of Assyria; both to warn the people of their danger from that quarter, and to encourage them to place their confidence in God. (Note, 2 Kings 16:7-9.) He here pointed out the Assyrian king, as the rod with which he meant to correct his offending people; and his righteous indignation was the staff, with which that prince would beat and bruise them. "The staff, that is in their hand, is my indignation." (Notes, 15. 14:3-6. Ps. 17:13-15. v. 14. 125:3. Jer. 51:20-25.) For God would send that insolent conqueror against a nation, which professed to worship him, but which was generally ungodly; the most of whom would comply with Hezekiah's reformation in a hypocritical manner. And he would commission him to take the spoil and prey, and to debase and trample upon them as if they were the very mire of the streets. (Notes, 25:10-12. 51:21-23. Mic. 7:8-10.) "God often prospers wicked and tyrannical governments to be his scourge, and the instruments of his vengeance upon others: and when they have done the work which God allotted them, he then punishes them for those very oppressions, which they have exercised against their neighbours, and to which they were carried on purely by their own ambition and covetousness; although Providence made them serviceable to better ends and purposes." Louth.

V. 7. The Lord would give Sennacherib power and success, and use him as his instrument in the work assigned him: but Sennacherib would not do it, because the Lord commanded him, or as his willing servant. He had no intention or inclination of that kind; but was actuated entirely by enormous ambition, rapacity, and cruelty.—The wickedness of 11 Shall I not, ^{as} I have done unto Samaria and her idols, so do to Jerusalem and her idols?

12 Wherefore it shall come to pass, that, ^{when} the Lord hath performed his whole work upon mount Zion and on Jerusalem, ^{he} will ^{punish} the fruit of ^{the} stout heart of the king of Assyria, and ^{the} glory of his high looks.

13 ^{For} he saith, by the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom; for I am prudent: and ^I have removed the bounds of the people, and have ^{robbed} their treasures, and I have ^{turned} down the inhabitants like ^a valiant man:

the facts being altogether their own; and the good ends served by them to be wholly ascribed to God." Louth. (2 Kings 9:7. Hos. 1:4.) "Here is declared the difference of the work of God, and of the wicked, in one very thing and act: for God's intention is to chastise them for their amendment; and the Assyrians is to destroy them, to enrich themselves; thus, in respect of God's judgment, it is God's work; but, in respect of their own malice, it is the work of the devil." (Notes, 47:6. Gen. 50:20. Ps. 76:10. Acts 2:22-24. 4:23-28.)

V. 8-11. (Notes, 2 Kings 18:19.) Sennacherib proudly deemed his princes, or his vassals, or tributaries, altogether equal to other kings, as it was common at that time for a conqueror to be styled "king of kings." He had subjected one kingdom after another, and none of their deities had been able to defend them against him; (Marg. Ref. s-u:) yet their images were more splendid than any to be found in Jerusalem: he therefore supposed that he should easily conquer that city and her idols; either numbering JEHOVAH among them, or utterly disregarding him. (Note, 2 Chr. 32:15.)—Shalmaneser took and destroyed Samaria; but probably Sennacherib had some share in the victory, the whole honour of which he arrogated to himself. (Note, 2 Kings 17:1-6.)

V. 12-14. (Notes, 28-34. 14:24-27. 2 Kings 19:22, 25, 35-37.) This haughty conqueror supposed, that his success was wholly owing to the number and valour of his troops, and to his own wise and prudent conduct and extraordinary courage. (Notes, Ez. 28:2-5, 12-15. Dan. 4:28-37. 5:18-23.) The taking and plundering of cities was to him like gathering eggs, when the timorous bird has flown away and left them; and so sure and easy was his success, that no one even dared to interrupt him, or to complain of him: or so much as to come and see what was going forward. (Marg. Ref. h.)

V. 15. (Note, 5:6.) These animated interrogations have a peculiar energy. JEHOVAH as much employed the power which he had given to Sennacherib for certain purposes, as a man does a tool which he has formed for that use. But could an axe be conceived to glory over him, who hewed with it? or a saw, to menace him who moved it? or a rod, him that corrected another with it? or a staff, as if it were not mere wood, to strike the man who used it? The absurdity in these instances would not be greater, than it was for Sennacherib to vaunt himself against JEHOVAH; on whom he was far more dependent, and to whom he was immensely more inferior, than the axe, or the saw to him who used them. Yet, ignorant of him by whom he lived and moved, and forgetful of his own weakness, he defied the God of Israel, and expected to overcome him! (Notes, 45:9, 10. Rom. 9:19-21.)

No wood.] "The Hebrews have a peculiar way of joining the negative particle Al to a noun, to signify in a strong manner a total negation of the thing expressed by the noun." Ep. Louth. (Job 26:2, 3. Am. 6:13. Heb.)

V. 16-19. To convince the proud worm of his madness, and to promote his own glory, the Lord determined to enfeeble his overgrown power and prosperity, and to consume his stoutest commanders and forces, and all that in which he gloried. For the holy Protector and Light of Israel, would be a fire to destroy the Assyrian army, as "briers and thorns;" and he would level them to the ground as a conflagration does the forest, or the crop of corn: yea, he would destroy them, both "soul and body," absolutely and finally; and the desolations would be as "when a standard-bearer fainteth," and all who followed his standard are put to confusion, and cut in pieces. So that the few men, who should remain of that army, which had been numerous as the trees in a large forest, might be numbered and registered even by a child. (Notes, 9:18-21. 30:29-33. 33:10-13. 2 Kings 19:35-37. Nah. 1:9-13.)

V. 20. The Jews and Israelites were wont to rely on the assistance of the neighbouring nations, and they were smitten by them one after another. Under Ahaz, they sought the protection of the Assyrians, who were employed to correct or punish them. (Notes, 7:17-19. 1 Kings 16:7-9.) But the remnant who escaped Sennacherib's ravages, by the miraculous interposition of God, would renounce these vain confidences, and learn in truth to rely on "the Holy One of Israel;" for they would not only return to their habitations, from which the invaders had driven them, but to the worship and service of God also.—"The expression "in that day," is not always confined to the time last spoken of, but often signifies some time that shall be remarkable for God's mercy toward his people. . . . Here it seems to point at that signal time, when there shall be a general conversion of the Jews to God." Louth. (Notes, 21-23. 1:7-9. 4:2-6. 17:4-8. 50:10, 11. 2 Kings 19:4, 30, 31. Rom. 11:1-6.)

V. 21-23. The original of "a remnant shall return," is Shear-jashub, the name given to one of Isaiah's sons, in confirmation of the perpetuity of God's promises. (Note, 7:3.) The descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, according to the promises of God, were indeed become numerous as "the sand of the sea;" yet in general they had forsaken him; and no more than a remnant, even on this great occasion, would return to him. Not only did Sennacherib execute vengeance on many of the people; but further judgments were decreed, and predicted, which, in strict and awful justice, would make them desolate for their sins: for the Lord had determined to make a consumption of the people throughout the land. The use, which the apostle makes of this passage shows that the Holy Spirit intended likewise to foretell more important events; even the conversion of a remnant of the Jews to Christ, and the execution of righteous vengeance upon the bulk of the nation which rejected him. (Notes, 6:13. 28:21, 22. Dan. 9:24-27. Rom. 9:24-29.)

Sennacherib and the Assyrians, (after the manner of Pharaoh and the Egyptians,) threatened the entire destruction of Israel; but in a very short time it would appear, that the Lord's anger against his people was turned away, by the destruction of their enemies: in the same manner as he destroyed the Midianitish oppressors, by the enfolded Israelites, and overwhelmed Pharaoh and the Egyptians in the Red Sea. But without question the Messiah, the Anointed in an eminent sense, ... is principally intended here. ... God preserved the kingdom of Judah from utter destruction, because the Messiah was to come from that tribe. V. 28-34. These verses contain a prophetic description of Sennacherib's march towards Jerusalem, when he desolated all before him, and threatened that city with immediate destruction. The consternation and flight of the inhabitants of the cities, near to Jerusalem, is also represented in a very animated and sublime manner. But when he was come almost to the walls of the city, and began to "shake his hand against the daughter of Zion," as menacing her destruction, with a special enmity to the temple and the worship there performed; the Lord, in whom Hezekiah trusted, lopped off the spreading branches of this cedar with dreadful terror: he slew by "a mighty one," an angel of his strength, all his valiant captains; and he cut down a hundred and eighty-five thousand of his soldiers, like the hewing down of a forest. (Notes, 16-19. Dan. 4:10-18, 20-26.) Thus his army, which resembled Lebanon covered with stately cedars, fell at once, to the confusion of its haughty leader, and the grateful and triumphant joy of Hezekiah and his people. The places here mentioned, were all in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem: most of them within a few miles to the north and west. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-19. Injustice and oppression are most atrocious when sanctioned or prescribed by law; and a tremendous war is denounced against all those who enact iniquitous statutes, or decree injustice from the seat of the magistrate. The more indigent and destitute the persons are, who are thus robbed, the deeper is the guilt of their oppressors; and when persecution "for righteousness' sake," is added, it speedily fills up the measure of national guilt.—Even in temporal calamities, tyrants and persecutors know not how to secure that power, pomp, or affluence, which they account "their glory" (Gen. 31:) or even their own lives; and if the Lord withdraw his protection, the most despicable instruments will execute deserved vengeance on them. But what will sinners do, whither will they flee, and what will their glory avail them, in the approaching day of judgment?—When the Lord intends to desolate nations, or to chastise his people, he sometimes arms with power, and renders successful, the basest of men; and commissions them to smite those who have provoked his anger. He purposes to destroy the most criminal, and to excite others to repentance; the instruments however do not seek his glory, but their own; and count it their pleasure to destroy, and to "cut off nations not a few."—The lust of dominion renders men callous to the feelings of humanity; and, forgetful that they are the creatures and subjects of the Almighty, authority, power, and success inflate their minds with increasing arrogance; and, whilst they ascribe all their achievements to their own prowess and conduct, they suppose that nothing can stop their progress: nay, they can be so infatuated, as to "exalt themselves above all that is called God and is worshipped;" and to suppose themselves able to overcome the deities, as well as the kings, of opposing nations! How lamentable was it, that Jerusalem, which was single and unrivalled in her relation to JEHOVAH, should set up graven images, in which she was excelled by all the heathen cities! and it is equally foolish for Christians to emulate the people of the world, in those vanities, in which they will always be eclipsed. (Note, Ex. 15:6-8 P. O.)—The Lord allots to every man his part, in fulfilling his grand designs. When any one serves him humbly and willingly, He graciously recompenses his faith and obedience: but those, who unintentionally perform his purposes, are influenced by corrupt motives, and will be punished for their sins.—Men's words and works are "the fruit of their hearts," whether they be good or bad; and those "high looks," which are admired as full of dignity and glory, being the fruit of a "stout heart," will expose a man to divine judgments. (Note, 47:7-10.)—When mighty conquerors are cut off in the very crisis of their success, the event often occasions various conjectures, suspicions, and speculations: but in fact they have done their whole work, and are ripe for divine vengeance, and therefore the Lord stops their career: and this has often taken place, when they have been glorying in success, and anticipating fresh triumphs! Such overgrown murderers, robbers, and scourges of mankind, think the horrors and miseries of war a mere pastime: they act as if the wealth of the world were created for them alone, and as if every man deserved death, who was not willing to be their slave; and we need not wonder that the lives of thousands are so vile in their esteem; when the God, in whom they live and move, and from whom they have all their power and success, is most entirely despised by them. Instead of his instruments, they affect to be his rivals; and, forgetful how easily he can crush them, they set themselves against him. But when the Lord of hosts is pleased to repress their insolence, he can soon thin their ranks, either by the sword of an enemy, or by famine and pestilence. And "the Light of Israel" will be a fire to consume all the dignity, prosperity, and multitude of "the workers of iniquity," "both soul and body." Some few indeed escape the most tremendous temporal judgments: but not a single impenitent sinner will escape the wrath to come. Then even the standard-bearers of infidelity and impiety will utterly faint, and doubtless all their legions will be driven into "the blackness of darkness for ever."

than a remnant, who "stay upon the Holy One of Israel in truth." (Note, 48:1, 2.) Most professed Christians still cleave to sin, and stay themselves on the world, though often troubled and injured by it: but, blessed be God, that there is a remnant who return to Him: may we be found of that happy number! Then, while we expect his righteous judgments, according to his word, to overflow the profane and hypocritical multitudes, we may dwell in Zion, fearless of every enemy and catastrophe: (Notes, 33:15—19.) nay, even the corrections which we receive by the hands of wicked men, who are the rod of our Father, will be long cease, in the execution of his indignation on them for their crimes. (Note, Ps. 125:3.)—All former judgments on proud oppressors have been and are only specimens of the final ruin, reserved for the enemies of God. "Because of the anointing" of our great Redeemer, the yoke of every antichrist must be broken from off his church: and if our souls partake of the union of his Holy Spirit, our complete and eternal deliverance is ensured to us. In the mean time, whilst our enemies defy "the daughter of Zion," and seem to make swift progress in their attempts against her; let us not yield to unbelieving fears. The Lord in his own time, by his own hand, or by some instrument, endowed with power from on high, will bring down his most exalted and haughty enemies: and all opposition shall fall before him, and his cause shall finally prevail and triumph.

NOTES.—CHAP. XI. V. 1. The transition, from the temporal deliverances of Israel to that spiritual redemption from which they all originated, is very common in the prophetic writings. Sennacherib's chiefs and army were like the unnumbered stately cedars of Lebanon; but speedily cut down by a mighty one. But the extraordinary Person here predicted, would resemble a tender shoot from the decayed root of a tree which had been cut down; and yet he attained to the highest exaltation. Some think that the prophecy had reference to Hezekiah, or Zerubbabel, as types of Christ. But Hezekiah was born long before it was delivered; and there was nothing in the state of the Jews under Zerubbabel, answerable to the glorious things spoken in the sequel of this chapter: so that it must be entirely a prophecy of Christ, and can accord to no other. (Notes, 52:3. Zech. 6:12, 13. Rev. 22:16, 17.)—The prophet spake of the Messiah, as springing from the root of Jesse, rather than from that of David, because Jesse lived and died in a private station; but David was a prosperous monarch; and when all the glory of his family seemed to be like the withered trunk or stump of a tree, a tender shoot or rod would spring forth, in which that glory would revive, increase, and be established for ever; and which would indeed become "a Plant of renown." (Marg. Ref. Notes, Jer. 23:5, 6. Ez. 17:22—24. 34:23—31. Rom. 15:8—13.) "We have here a remarkable instance of that method so common with the prophets, and particularly with Isaiah, of taking occasion from the mention of some great temporal deliverance, to launch out into the display of the spiritual deliverance of God's people by the Messiah: for that this prophecy relates to the Messiah, we have the express authority of St. Paul. Rom. 15:12." Bp. Louth.

V. 2—5. The human nature of Christ was formed by the operation of the Holy Spirit, in the womb of the virgin; and all his power, wisdom, and holiness, as Man, are ascribed to the same divine influence; for the Holy "Spirit was not given by measure unto him." (Notes, 42:1—4. 59:20, 21. 61:1—3. John 1:30—34. 3:27—36. v. 34. Acts 1:1—3.) The varied expressions here used, denote the manifold endowments of the human nature of Christ, for the work which he had undertaken, and the fulness treasured up in him for his people. Every kind of divine knowledge and sagacity, of wisdom and prudence, of piety and courage; of holy affections and spiritual relish for heavenly things, and delight in them: of vigour and strength of mind for obedience, and for the earth: and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.

5 And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins.

6 The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fawning together; and a little child shall lead them.

7 And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

8 And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den.

suffering with unabated courage, zeal, and patience: whatever was requisite for the exercise of his personal ministry attended with numerous and extraordinary miracles on earth, or for that of his mediatorial kingdom in heaven, to the end of time, are comprised in the expressions before us. So perfect would be his knowledge, wisdom, and justice, that he would in no case judge by appearances or report; but would distinguish characters, and decide causes, with the most exact discernment and impartiality. He would be the Protector of the poor and needy, especially of his poor and humble people, and plead for them against oppressors: and, while he saved all those who submitted to him, he would destroy the enemies of his kingdom, by denouncing and executing vengeance upon them; as if an iron rod proceeded from his mouth to dash them in pieces, or as if his breath were a flame of fire to devour them. (Notes, 30:27, 28. 2 The. 2:8—12, v. 8. Rev. 19:11—16, v. 15.) His consummate righteousness and faithfulness likewise would establish him on the throne, prepare him for filling it in the most perfect manner, and be the ornament and glory of it. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 59:16—19. Ps. 72:1—7, 12—14.) The general character of the Redeemer, and the manner in which he would exercise his authority, with the effects produced by it, to the end of time, are here stated; rather than any special events predicted.—The Spirit of knowledge, &c. (2) "Of the knowledge and fear of the LORD." 'Of knowledge and godliness.' Sept.—Reprove, &c. (3) Note, Prov. 31:8, 9.—"With equity shall he work conviction in the meek of the earth." Bp. Louth. (Note, Ps. 25:8, 9.)

Faithfulness, &c. (5) 'The expression implies here, that a strict regard to truth, integrity, and justice, will be the honour of Christ's kingdom. (Eph. 6:14.) On the contrary antichrist is described, as coming "with all deceivableness of unrighteousness," or all the arts of unrighteous deceit. (2 The. 2:9.) And without question, nothing has more tended to the corrupting the truth of the gospel, or weakening the power of it, than the giving encouragement to pious frauds and forgeries.' Louth.

V. 6—9. (Marg. Ref. Note, 9:6, 7.) The effects of divine grace on the minds of men, in the times of the Messiah, are here represented, with much beauty, under the most significant emblems. Persons of the most dissimilar dispositions and pursuits, and by nature and custom addicted to various kinds of wickedness, would be so changed by the grace of the gospel, that they would become of "one heart, and one way." (Notes, Jer. 32:39—41. Acts 2:44—47.) The selfish, the penurious, the rapacious, the contentious, the ambitious, the savage, the subtle, and the malicious, would lose their peculiar base dispositions, and become harmless, sincere, peaceable, benevolent, and affectionate; they would live together in harmony, hearken to instruction, and be guided by gentle persuasions and entreaties. So that the change would be as evident and surprising, as if the wolf, the tiger, the lion, the bear, and other fierce carnivorous animals, should learn to be gentle and harmless as the lamb, the kid, the calf, or the cow; to associate with them, to graze the pasture as they do, or to feed on hay and straw; and should be so tractable that a little child could lead them. Or, as if the asp and the cockatrice should no longer be disposed to bite with venomous teeth; but should be so inoffensive, that infants might safely play by their holes: for there would be no more a disposition in the inhabitants of Zion, the true church of Christ, to hurt or destroy: and the knowledge of the Lord, with all its sanctifying effects, should at length cover the whole earth, "even as the waters cover the sea." (Notes, 55:12, 13. 65:24, 25. Lev. 11:2. 11:2. Acts 10:9—16.)—Such changes, as are here described, may be imagined, but they never actually take place, in the literal sense. Every creature on earth, man alone excepted, continues from first mountain: ⁴ For the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the earth.

[Practical Observations.]

10 ¶ And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious.

11 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea.

12 And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.

re last, of that disposition, and retains unchanged those propensities which belong to its nature. But in those of the human race, who are "born of God," an entire change and revolution is effected, in their propensities, desires, affections, and pursuits: they become "new creatures," "all old things pass away, behold all things are become new," and "they walk in newness of life." The emblem is completely answered; the figurative description realized. (Notes, John 3:3, 2 Cor. 5:17.) The fables and imaginations of the Gentiles, of a golden age, and the return of it in the latter days, in which some of their writers use not dissimilar expressions, but inferior in beauty and energy, seem to have been taken from the scriptural account of Adam in paradise, and from the predictions of the Messiah's happy reign.—To suppose that the Holy Spirit, by this decisive language, foretold events no way answerable to their exact meaning; and that they are merely highly wrought figures of speech, like those of uninspired eastern poets; and suited to raise expectations in simple hearted believers, which must be eternally disappointed, savours too much of infidelity, not to say blasphemy, to deserve a serious refutation. The earth has never yet been "full of the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea;" and therefore the grand accomplishment of the prophecy has not yet taken place. (Marg. Ref. q. Notes, Hab. 2:12-14, v. 14.)

V. 10. (Notes, 1. 10:20.) When the gospel began to be publicly preached, the divine Saviour, as springing from the root of Jesse, and as crucified for sinners, ascended into heaven, and being exalted to the mediatorial throne, stood as an ensign to which the chosen people of God resorted. (Notes, 11-16, 59:16-19, v. 19. Gen. 49:10. Matt. 11:28-30. John 3:14, 15, 12:27-33, v. 32.) The Gentiles sought to him as their Lord and Saviour; and "the rest of soul," which they found by trusting in him, was connected with the glory and beauty of holiness, and an earnest of the glory of heaven. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 60:1-3, 66:19-23.) Or rather, the Saviour would rest with full complacency in his redeemed people, chiefly from among the Gentiles, in whom his name would be exceedingly glorified. (Ps. 132:13. Note, Rom. 15:8-13, v. 12.—Root of Jesse.) Notes, 53:2, 3. Rev. 5:5-7, v. 5. 22:16, 17, v. 16.

V. 11-16. The Lord recovered a remnant of his people from Assyria and Babylon, by the same power with which he had brought the whole nation out of Egypt: and it is here predicted, that he would "set his hand again the second time," to gather those, who would be left of them, from all nations whither they had been scattered; and several of the adjacent countries, and some very distant ones in different directions, are specified. By "the islands of the sea," all the regions separated from Asia are generally meant; and here the British Isles are included. (Note, Gen. 10:2-5.)—The crucified Saviour, doubtless, as he had forth in the preaching of the gospel, is that Ensign to which he will assemble "the outcasts of Israel, and the dispersed of Judah," from the four corners of the earth. United in dependence on "the Prince of Peace," and in obedience to him, that envy, competition, and enmity, which so long kept the Jews and Israelites at variance, shall be finally terminated; (Notes, Jer. 3:16-18, v. 18. Ez. 37:15-28. Hos. 1:11. Zech. 11:12-14, v. 14.) their adversaries shall be cut off, and many of their former enemies shall be subjected, or willingly submit and become tributary to them, or powerfully assist them, which seems implied in the expression, "they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines towards the west." (14) For the Lord will then remove all obstacles, by the same powerful atterment, which he vouchsafed in behalf of Israel, when 13 The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off; Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim.

14 But they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines toward the west; they shall spoil them of the east together: they shall lay their hand upon Edom and Moab; and the children of Ammon shall obey them.

15 And the LORD shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dryshod.

16 And there shall be a highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.

he separated "the Tongue," or Bay of the Egyptian or Red Sea, and destroyed that hindrance to their departure; and, "with a mighty wind," he will so separate the waters of the river, (Euphrates), in all its streams, that men may pass over dryshod. (Notes, Dan. 11:40-45. Zech. 10:5-12. Rev. 16:12-16.) Thus a highway shall be made for Israel's return, as there was for their ancestors to pass from Egypt unto Canaan.—This part of the chapter contains a prophecy, which certainly remains yet to be accomplished. Ep. Louth.—This chapter contains a general prophecy of the advancement Christ's kingdom should make in the world. But as this advancement is made by different steps and degrees; so the several parts of the prophecy may be supposed to point at different ages and periods of time. . . . And I take this part of the chapter . . . to foretell those glorious times of the church, which shall be ushered in by the restoration of the Jewish nation; when they shall embrace the gospel, and be restored to their own country from the several dispersions where they are scattered. This remarkable scene of Providence is plainly foretold by most of the prophets of the Old Testament, and by St. Paul in the New. Louth. (Marg. Ref.)—How far the more particular explications of the manner in which, and the powers by whom, these predictions will be accomplished, that have of late years been attempted, are well grounded, the events will show to posterity. I presume not to prophesy from the prophecies: but the literal restoration both of Israel and Judah is clearly predicted.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-5. The descent, from the summit of earthly grandeur to the abyss of misery, is not uncommon. But heavenly honour and prosperity advance gradually from small beginnings, and will increase for ever: (Notes, 9:6, 7, v. 7. Dan. 2:44, 45.) and the cause of God is not rendered triumphant by human power, but "by the Spirit of the LORD." (Note, Zech. 4:4-7.) Thus the great Head of the Church sprang up as a tender shoot; and was scarcely observed at first, or observed only to be disdained: but, through his external meanness, when "in the form of a servant," a divine glory shone forth. His holy life, his stupendous miracles, his boundless knowledge and heavenly wisdom, and all his words and works proclaimed, that "the Spirit of the LORD rested upon him," for all the purposes here predicted by his holy prophet. And now in human nature he reigns upon a glorious throne, the Lord and Judge of his church, and of the world; and all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, of grace and truth, of power and might, yea, "all the fulness of the Godhead dwell in him." (Notes, Col. 2:1-9.) Thus gloriously exalted, and qualified most completely to fill up the mediatorial throne, he is the Patron of the poor and oppressed; for the lowly and broken-hearted alone truly submit to him, and value his salvation: and, while he pleads their cause, he will execute his severest threatenings on all the workers of iniquity; yet with exact discrimination and strict justice: for "righteousness is the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins."—"From his fulness all his people receive, and grace for grace." (Note, John 1:16.) So that the same Spirit is communicated to each of them in their measure: and thus they too learn sound wisdom and discretion; they become acquainted with God and themselves, with his truths, and their own duty, interests, dangers, and security; they are rendered prudent to sin, or strong to resist the temptations of Satan; they learn to fear and love the Lord; and, with increasing experience and spirituality, they become "of quick understanding" in "discerning good and evil;" they are formed to the same judgment with him, whose Spirit they receive; they learn to follow his example of goodness, truth, and purity; and, in a subordinate sense, righteousness and faithfulness become their girdle also. (Notes, Rom. 8:28-31, 2 Cor. 6:3-10, Eph. 5:10-17.) Let us seek diligently for more and more of this heavenly wisdom and good understanding; and be contented to want that knowledge and discernment, which the world admires and idolizes.

V. 6-9. As far as we are taught by the Spirit of Christ, the predominant obliquities of our fallen nature will be corrected; and those hateful and mischievous vices, by which men resemble the most pernicious of the animals in their worst qualities, will be subdued and mortified; and we shall be rendered harmless, peaceable, sincere, kind, liberal, and ready to renounce our own interest or pleasure, in order to do good to others. For, the grace of Christ is a sovereign remedy for every one of our mental disorders; and though none of them are here perfectly healed; all of them are dethroned, hated, opposed and crucified, and no one habitually prevails; but the believer's desires, pleasures, and leading aims are totally changed; and thus they, who before conversion were of the most opposite characters, now assimilate to each other, and learn to concur in the same purposes and endeavours, and live in holy peace and love. Every one of them becomes teachable and forgiving; they no longer are disposed to hurt, or destroy, or deceive; but they learn to forbear and to forgive, their hearts are enlarged, and they become the friends of mankind, because they are the redeemed servants of Jesus Christ. But alas! how many professors of evangelical truth, by their avarice, contention, pride, and ferocity, evince, that they are strangers to this gracious change; and that they still continue wolves, tigers, or serpents; and have not been "transformed in the renewing of their minds" into lambs and doves! How many leave the matter doubtful both to themselves and others, and often disgrace that doctrine which they should adorn! How little has this tendency of the gospel yet appeared in the world! We cannot then entertain a doubt, that far more conspicuous and glorious effects are to be expected; when "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea;" when wars and furious contests shall cease, and all nations shall know the power of the gospel, to teach men to love God and one another. In the mean time let us aim to manifest this spirit and conduct in our narrow circle, as far as we are able; that our example and endeavours may in some feeble measure promote the honour of Christ, and stop the mouths of gainsayers. And, as few Christians are able to do much good by engaging the enemies of the gospel, in a way of disputatious reasoning; let us all aim to convince men by the powerful rhetoric of a holy, useful life, that ours is the true doctrine of the word of God.

V. 10-16. By embracing the Christian religion, we enlist under the standard of the cross of Christ; that by our profession of his truth, by our good works, and our fervent prayers, we may obtain peaceful conquests over our enemies, by winning them over to our side, and inducing them to have fellowship with us. (Note, 1 John 1:3, 4.) Of old "the banner" was displayed, and both Jews and Gentiles sought to it, and found a glorious rest to their souls, by trusting and obeying the King of saints. For us the same ensign is erected and exhibited: may we also thankfully flock to it, and share these blessings. And while we expect the Lord to set to his hand again, to gather his ancient people from their dispersions, and to bring them home to his church; and also to bring in the fulness of the Gentiles, when all parties will cease from envy and strife, and be united in holy love; let us trust in his glorious power to remove out of the way all the hindrances to our complete salvation; let us tread in the highway of holiness, which he has made for his redeemed; (Note, 35:9-10.) let us "wait for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life;" and let us expect that the Lord will prepare our way through death, that river which separates this from the eternal world, that we may "pass over dryshod;" even as he dried up the Red Sea and Jordan, when "he led forth his people with joy, and his chosen with gladness;" to give them the land of Canaan for their inheritance.

ever accommodations may be made of this sacred hymn; as it is immediately connected with the prophecy in the former chapter, it evidently predicts, that the converted nation of Israel, reflecting upon their past condition for so long a time, because of the anger of God against them for their obstinate rejection of their Messiah; and exulting in the glorious change which had taken place; shall break out in the language of the prophet, "O LORD, I will praise thee, &c." (Notes, 63:15-19, 64:1-12.)—"I will give thanks unto thee, O JEHOVAH, for though thou hast been angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou hast comforted me. . . . The Hebrew phrase . . . is exactly the same with that of St. Paul, Rom. 6:17. "Thanks be to God, that ye were the slaves of sin; but ye have obeyed from the heart, &c." Bp. Lowth. (Note, Rom. 6:16-19, v. 17.)—Thine anger is turned away.] 9:12, 21. 10:4. Note, 5:24, 25, v. 24.

V. 2. The deliverance of Israel from oppression and misery, was only a shadow of the redemption of the church from sin and Satan. This whole salvation results from the infinite love and mercy of God the Father: it was contrived by his infinite wisdom; and rests on his infinite power, and truth. It is altogether communicated through the person and mediation of Immanuel; and it is applied by the new-creating power of God the Spirit: so that in every sense, God is the Salvation of his church. Thus JAH-JEHOVAH, the eternal God, is become the Saviour of the world; and is, "in Christ," the Support, Protector, and Friend of the church, and of every believer; as he becomes his Salvation, from the moment, when he is enabled to receive and rely on him, as such. (Notes, 7:14, 9:6, 7, 45:15-17, 20-25. Ps. 27:1-3, 68:1. Luke 1:46-55, v. 47. Tit. 2:9-14, 3:4-7.)

V. 3. The purifying, fertilizing, and consolatory influences of the Holy Spirit are commonly denoted, under the emblem of springing water. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 49:9-13. Ex. 17:5, 6. John 4:10-15, 7:37-39.) This water flows through the mediatory work of Christ, and is conveyed to the souls of men by the ordinances of God's worship. When the gospel is preached in any place, "wells of salvation" are opened, which communicate with the Fountain of life in Christ; and in the predicted times, this Fountain of life and these "wells of salvation" though long hidden from Israel, will be discovered to them, and they will praise God with joyful hearts. (Note, Zech. 13:1.)—"The Jews themselves seem to have applied it to the times of the Messiah. On the last day of the feast of tabernacles, they fetched water in a golden pitcher, from the fountain of Siloah, springing at the foot of mount Zion, without the city: they brought it through the water-gate into the temple, and poured it, mixed with wine, on the sacrifice as it lay upon the altar, with great rejoicing. . . . Our Saviour applied the ceremony, and the intention of it, to himself, and to the effusion of the Holy Spirit, promised, and to be given, by him." Bp. Lowth.

V. 4-6. In the day, when the Lord shall do so great things for his church; his people shall excite each other to praise him for the past, and to call on him for all that yet remains to be done: or they will "proclaim his name" and perfections, as well as "declare his doings among the people," and expatiate on his wonders wrought in their behalf, that "his name may be exalted." (Note, Ex. 34:5-7.) Thus the excellent things done for the Jews and Israelites, being celebrated and made known to all the earth, will, probably, be one grand means of bringing in "the fulness of the Gentiles;" while the inhabitants of Zion, the church converted from that chosen race, will cry aloud and shout for joy, and all shall see the triumphant power of the Holy One of Israel, in the wonders wrought in their behalf. (Notes, 30:20-26. Zeph. 3:14-20. Zech. 2:10-13. Rom. 11:11-15, 22-35.) "When ye shall draw waters with joy from the fountains of salvation; in that day ye shall say: Give ye thanks to JEHOVAH; Call upon his name, make known among the peoples his mighty deeds." Bp. Lowth. "The peoples," plural; that is, the nations of the earth.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Every one of those, who now have peace with God, was once exposed to his righteous anger; and most of them experienced many painful effects from it, and dreaded others far more tremendous. But when the awakened and humbled sinners finds pardon and peace, through the atoning blood of Christ, he with thankful heart exclaims, "O LORD, I will praise thee: though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou hast comforted me."—Yet alas! we are prone to relapse into transgression: and then our heavenly Father is angry with us and frowns upon us; he bereaves us of our comforts, and inflicts sharp corrections. When these bring us to mourn for our sins, and to renew repentance and humble faith, his "anger will be turned away," our comforts will be restored, and our hearts again tuned to celebrate his praises. All these our hopes and comforts are vouchsafed to us sinful creatures, because "God is become our Salvation;" and when we rest all our hopes on this Foundation, "we may trust, and not be afraid." For as God was manifested in the flesh; and as Immanuel died for our sins, when we were enemies; he will doubtless be the Strength and complete Salvation of all, who believe in him, and love, and obey him, and whom he now numbers among his friends. Having JEHOVAH, the eternal God, for our "Strength and Song," we may bid defiance to all our enemies: and though we must encounter difficulties, endure hardships, and experience sharp conflicts; we have "wells of salvation" opened on every side; and, drawing from them the waters of life and consolation, by faith and prayer, we may rejoice in the midst of tribulation, and find some foretastes of heaven, in communion with the Lord in this outward sanctuary. (Notes, Rom. 5:1-11.) The more diligently we attend on the means of grace, and the larger supplies we derive from the Fountain of salvation; the more fervent will be our praises of God our Saviour. The glories of his character, and the excellency of all his wonderful works, especially that of our redemption, will be our favourite theme. We shall ardently desire that his name should be universally extolled; and that his inestimable salvation should be known to all the earth. Whilst our hearts rejoice, that the Holy God "dwelleth in Zion" upon a mercy-seat, the Friend of sinners who seek unto him, and the almighty Protector of his church; we shall be ready to shout for joy as victors, even when we are "fighting the good fight of faith." We shall not only anticipate our own complete salvation, and that of every believer, through him who loved us; but the prevalence also of his truth and cause over all opposition: whilst numerous accessions will be made continually to those, who celebrate his praises with joyful hearts; and every one will, with increasing alacrity, seek to recommend his salvation and service to all around him.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIII. V. 1. The word rendered "burden," (though some translate it "the oracle,") seems to denote the heavy vengeance predicted; which was seen in vision by the prophet, as if already falling upon Babylon. (Marg. Ref. a, Note, Jer. 23:33-40.) "These two chapters, (striking off the five last verses of the latter, which belong to a far different subject,) contain one entire prophecy, foretelling the destruction of Babylon by the Medes and Persians, delivered probably in the reign of Ahaz, . . . about two hundred years before the completion of it. The captivity itself of the Jews at Babylon, (which the prophet does not expressly foretell, but supposes, in the spirit of prophecy, as what was actually to be effected,) did not fully take place till about one hundred and thirty years after the delivery of this prophecy;" and the Medes, who are expressly mentioned, (17) as the principal agents in the overthrow of the Babylonian monarchy, by which the Jews were released from that captivity, were at this time an inconsiderable people; having been in a state of anarchy ever since the fall of the great Assyrian empire, of which they had made a part, under Sardanapalus; and did not become a kingdom under Deioces till about the seventeenth of Hezekiah. The former part of this prophecy is one of the most beautiful examples, that can be given, of elegance of composition, variety of imagery, 5 They come from a far country, from the end of heaven, even the LORD, and the weapons of his indignation, to destroy the whole land.

6 Howl ye; for the day of the LORD is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty.

7 Therefore shall all hands be faint, and every man's heart shall melt;

8 And they shall be afraid; pangs and sorrows shall take hold of them; they shall be in pain as a woman that travaileth: they shall be amazed one at another; their faces shall be flames.

9 Behold, the day of the LORD cometh, true both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate: and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it.

and sublimity of sentiment and diction, in the prophetic style; and the latter part consists of an ode of supreme and singular excellence. Bp. Louth.—The Jews had hitherto had little acquaintance with the Chaldeans: that empire was, at the time when this prophecy was uttered, inferior to that of the Assyrians, if it did not constitute a part of it; and it was several years after, that the kings of Babylon obtained the ascendancy, and their empire supplanted and swallowed up that of the Assyrians. (Notes, 23:13. 2 Kings 20:12, 13, 17, 18. 23:29, 30. 2 Chr. 33:1.) Some intimations, however, had been given the Jews of their danger from that quarter: and indeed all the predictions of the prophets, concerning foreign nations, were given with reference to the state of the Jews, and with an especial regard to their advantage.—"Babylon was a type or figure of Antichrist, the great oppressor of God's church in after times. Rev. 17:5. And whoever carefully considers several particulars in this and the next chapter, and compares them with the former part of the twenty-first chapter, with chapter forty-seven, and with the fiftieth and fifty-first chapters of Jeremiah, which treat of the same subject, will easily find that these prophecies have an aspect beyond the taking of Babylon by Cyrus; in as much as the prophets describe this judgment as a decisive stroke, that should thoroughly vindicate the cause of oppressed truth and innocence; and put a final period to idolatry, and to all the iniquities and oppressions of God's people." Louth. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2-5. The Lord, by his prophet, addressed himself to the rulers of the Medes and Persians, as if present, commanding them, by every means to collect forces, and to go and take possession of Babylon, and of the stately palaces of her nobles. He called them "his sanctified ones;" those whom I have appointed and set apart for that service.

Louth. (Notes, 44:25-28. 45:1-6.) He had selected them and endowed them with power to execute his indignation; and he knew, that they would rejoice in doing those things, by which his name would eventually be magnified. (Note, Ezra 1:4.) When the Lord should thus "muster the host for the battle," immense multitudes from nations remote from Babylon, and from each other, would speedily be collected, with tumultuous noise as "the weapons of his indignation" to destroy the whole kingdom of the Babylonians. (Notes, 10:5, 6, 15.)—This exactly accords to the account given by historians of the various nations, which constituted the army of Cyrus. (Note, Jer. 51:27.) "The expressions are noble, and contain a lively description of that terror, which the appearance of an hostile army strikes into beholders." Louth.

V. 6. (Marg. Ref. Note, Joel 1:4, 15. v. 15.—The Almighty.) "Whose power and purposes none is able to resist." Louth.

V. 7, 8. (Note, Jer. 30:5-9. v. 6.) After many defeats in the open field, the king of Babylon retired with his forces within the walls of his capital; and Cyrus formed the siege of that city; and beyond all expectation took it, by draining off the waters of the Euphrates, and marching his army into the city by the channel of that river: while the inhabitants were either rioting in intemperance, or oppressed with sleep. (Notes, 21:2-5. Jer. 51:30-32. Dan. 5:1-9, 30, 31. 1 Thea. 5:1-3.)

As flames. (8.) That is, pale and livid, as terror renders a man; for this is the colour of the flame: not red, as with anger, which is the colour of the fire, from which the flame proceeds.

V. 9, 10. (Marg. Ref. Note, 34:3-7.) The prophets, under various figures, taken from the sun, moon, and stars, describe the subversion of governments, when kings, nobles, and rulers are degraded or destroyed; and that confusion, horror, and dismay which attend these violent convulsions. (Notes, 4:19-27. Ez. 32:7, 8. Joel 3:9-17. Matt. 24:29-31. Rev. 6:12-17.) The grandeur of the images, and the 12 I will make a man more precious than fine gold; even a man than the golden wedge of Ophir.

13 Therefore I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place, and the wrath of the Lord of hosts, and in the day of his fierce anger.

14 And it shall be as the chased roe, and as a sheep that no man taketh up: they shall every man turn to his own people, and flee every one into his own land.

18 Their bows also shall dash the young men to pieces; and they shall have no pity on the fruit of the womb; their eyes shall not spare children.

19 And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah.

V. 13-15. The empire of Babylon, with all its rulers and nobles, would be as entirely subverted by the power and anger of JEHOVAH, as if the heavens and the earth were shaken out of their place; the vanquished armies of the Chaldees would be pursued as a hunted roe, and scattered like "sheep which have no shepherd;" (Note, 1 Kings 22:17.) their allies, if able, would flee in dismay to their several cities and countries; every one who was overtaken would be slain without mercy; and all who united to make a stand would be speedily cut to pieces: that is, all the associates of Babylon should share her fate. V. 17. Thirst of glory and dominion, and fierce revenge, would render the Medes regardless of riches; so that they would refuse to give quarter, or to spare the lives of the vanquished, for the sake of ransom. (Marg. Ref. Note 1.) Xenophon makes Cyrus open a speech to his army in this manner, 'Ye Medes, and others who now hear me, I well know, that ye have not accompanied me in this expedition, with a view of acquiring wealth.' (Marg. Ref. Note, Prov. 1:27-35.)

The Medes. 'A nation of no account when Isaiah uttered this prophecy: their country being a province under the king of Assyria, (2 Kings 17:6,) and not erected into a distinct kingdom, till . . . about the seventeenth year of Hezekiah. But afterwards they grew to be a very considerable people.' Louth.

V. 18. 'Xenophon . . . says, their bows were three cubits long. . . . If the Persian bows were of metal,' (Job 20:24. Ps. 18:34.) 'we may easily conceive that with a metalline bow of three cubits length, and proportionably strong, the soldiers might dash and slay the young men, the weaker and unresisting part of the inhabitants, (for they are joined with the fruit of the womb and the children,) in the general carnage on taking the city.' Bp. Louth.—This cruelty does not seem to have been exercised, when Cyrus took Babylon: but the prophecy then began to be fulfilled; and all the several particulars were accomplished in the subsequent desolations. the desolate buildings were long the resort of every species of wild beasts and venomous reptiles, so that it was dangerous for travellers to approach them: at length, it was so entirely wasted, that no remains of it could be found; and, strange to tell, it cannot at present be exactly ascertained where this once renowned city stood! As the walls and buildings were formed of brick, probably, not very skillfully prepared; this might conduce to the utter decay of its ruins: but when God is pleased to destroy, nothing can withstand his power. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The threatenings of Scripture press with incumbent weight upon the head of the wicked, and are a 'sore burden too heavy for them to bear;' and at the appointed time, they will sink the most flourishing cities and nations into ruin, as well as the souls of sinners into eternal misery. But the believer sees this tremendous vengeance ready to fall on those who are not aware of their own danger; and, whilst he would affectionately warn them to escape from it, he becomes the object of their derision or indignation.—The Lord selects and sets apart the weapons of his wrath, who are of themselves disposed to the work in which he purposes to employ them; and while they rejoice in gratifying their selfish passions, they unintentionally perform his righteous judgments. He invests them with power, affords them favorable opportunities, gives them helpers, and endues them with intrepidity; and thus "the LORD of hosts mustereth the hosts of the battle:" with furious tumult they march from the ends of the earth, to assault their enemies, and they are not aware that they are only "the weapons of his indignation." He also gives them success: and when his day of taking vengeance arrives, the most valiant warriors become feeble, numerous armies melt away, and all resistance is heartless and useless.—But the compass of nature cannot furnish images fully to illustrate the horror and dismay, the amazement and despair, which will come upon the wicked, when the day of the LORD, which is near at hand, "shall come, as a destruction from the Almighty." Then indeed "all hands shall be faint," and the hearts of sinners shall melt: they shall look with astonishment one at another, and their ghastly countenances shall correspond with their inward anguish. For that day will indeed be "terrible with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the earth desolate, and to destroy the sinners thereof out of it:" then "the stars shall not give their light, and the sun and the moon shall be extinguished: the LORD will then punish the world for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; and cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease;" nay, "the heavens and the earth shall pass away, and no place be found for them." (Notes, 2 Pet. 3:5-13. Rev. 20:11-15.) In that day all these emphatical expressions, which are here used as bold metaphors, shall be found too feeble to express the least part of the tremendous scene: nor will there be any place for the sinner to flee unto, or any method by which he may attempt an escape. Alas! few act, as if they believed these things; and numbers treat the plain declarations of Scripture to this effect, with at least as much neglect and contempt, or contradiction, as we can suppose the proud monarchs and nobles of Babylon did these predictions of poor Jewish prophets. But too late those monarchs and nobles found the truth of the despised oracles of God: then, neither their riches could bribe, nor the misery of the women and children soften, nor the beauty and glory of their city allure, nor its strength resist, "the weapons of the LORD's righteous indignation," and Babylon became, at length, entirely desolated, even as Sodom and Gomorrah. (Notes, Gen. 19:24, 25. Deut. 29:21-25.) Thus will the denunciations of God's word be executed on all impenitent sinners, in their full meaning; and, notwithstanding the clamours and blasphemies of his enemies, the Lord will appear glorious in justice, in their tremendous ruin; and too late they will know "whose words will stand, His, or theirs." The fate of this proud city is a demonstration of the truth of the Bible; an emblem of the approaching ruin of the New Testament-Babylon; a warning to sinners to flee from the wrath to come; and an encouragement to believers to expect victory over every enemy of their souls, and of the church of God.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIV. V. 1, 2. The ruin of Babylon was immediately connected with the mercy of God to the Jews; and the victories of Cyrus made way for their restoration from captivity. The terms, "Jacob and Israel," must imply, that mercy was intended to some at least of all the twelve tribes.—Probably, several proselytes were made to the Jewish religion, when they were restored to their own land: and by contributions, the inhabitants of the countries, in which they had been captives, aided their return, and so "brought them to their place." (Notes, Ezra 1:7-11-28.) But we do not read, that the Jews ever ruled over the Chaldeans, or had any number of them for servants. It may therefore be inferred, that still more important events were predicted: and, in general, all the prophecies, relating to the destruction of Babylon, have, no doubt, a typical reference to the destruction of Rome and the Papal domination, as foretold by St. John; which will be followed by the restoration of both Judah and Israel, in great honour and prosperity; and then this part of the prophecy will receive a far more signal accomplishment. (Notes, 11:11-16. 60:10-14. Zech. 8:20-23. Rev. 19:11-21.)

V. 3-6. The deliverance of Judah from captivity... introduces, with the greatest ease, ... the triumphant song on that subject. ... A chorus of Jews is introduced, expressing their ... astonishment at the sudden downfall of Babylon, and the great reverse of fortune which had befallen the tyrant, who ... had oppressed his own, and harassed the neighbouring kingdoms. Bp. Louth.—Babylon may be called "the golden city," with reference to her immense riches; or "the exactress of gold," (Marg.) from the rapacity of her kings. (*Marg. Ref. Notes, Jer. 51:7. Dan. 2:38. 8 Yea, the fir-trees rejoice at thee, and the cedars of Lebanon, saying, Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us.

9 Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming: it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth: it hath raised up all their thrones all the kings of the nations.

10 All they shall speak and say unto thee, Art thou also become weak as we? art thou become like unto us?

11 Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, and the noise of thy viols: the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee.

12 How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations!

13 For thou hast said in thy heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north:

14 I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High.

V. 7, 8. At the destruction of this victorious and oppressive monarchy, the whole earth seemed to experience a sudden and unexpected relief, as restored to serenity and security; and to express its joy by songs of triumph. The fir-trees and cedars mean the princes of the earth, who had seen many of their number levelled by the king of Babylon, and had trembled for themselves; but now rejoiced at his destruction, and at the peace and security thus afforded them. "These oppressed kingdoms, or their rulers, are represented under the image of the fir-trees and cedars of Libanus, frequently used to express any thing in the political or religious world, that is supereminently great and majestic: the whole earth shouteth for joy, the cedars of Libanus utter a severe taunt against the fallen tyrant; and boast their security, now he is no more." Bp. Louth. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 55:12, 13. Jer. 51:48, 49. Ez. 31:14-17. Zech. 11:1-3.)

V. 9-11. The scene here changes. The regions of the dead are laid open to the imagination, and their inhabitants are seen in commotion, at the approach of this proud monarch to join their company; and the mighty kings and captains, (especially they whom the kings of Babylon had destroyed,) are represented as leaving their several thrones in order to meet him: not to condole with him, or to welcome him; but to insult over him, as now become like one of them; and as bereft of all his pomp, luxury, music, and mirth; while his poor remains on earth are become company and food for the worms. "This is one of the boldest prosopopœias that ever was attempted in poetry; and is executed with astonishing brevity and perspicuity, and with that peculiar force, which in a great subject naturally results from both." Bp. Louth. (Notes, Ez. 32:18-32. Mark 9:43-50.) Doubtless this is a poetical description, and the imagery is taken from external objects; but we must remember, that it has truth for its basis; that the wicked remove at death to a place of misery; and that proud malignant spirits do insult and torment each other. (Note, and P. O. Luke 16:27-31.)—The Hebrew word sheol, which our translation renders "hell," or "the grave," signifies the state of the dead in general, Job. 3:14; and is indifferently applied to the good and bad. Here it is taken in the worst sense, and denotes the infernal mansions of deceased tyrants. Louth. (Notes, Ps. 16:3-11. Prov. 15:24.) The word (רפאים) rendered the dead, signifies giants; and Mr. Mede seems to think that the rebels of the old world, who perished in the deluge, were especially intended.

V. 12-15. The Jews seem here to resume the discourse, and address the king of Babylon, by the title of "Lucifer, son of the morning." He had been as "the morning star," the first in dignity among the princes of the earth; but he was now fallen from heaven and utterly debased. This language may refer to the fall of Satan and his angels, as the king of Babylon greatly resembled that arch-apostate in his character and fate. (Notes, Luke 10:17—20. Rev. 12:7—12.) The Jews, exulting in his astonishing fall, upbraided him with his vain ambition and enmity against God. He [†]had said in his heart, that he would ascend into heaven, and exalt his throne above the stars of God; [†]he would eclipse all earthly princes, and even rival the God of heaven: nay, he would fix his throne on mount Zion, where God had appointed to meet his worshippers, (Note, Ps. 48:3, 4.) and there receive the adoration of his subjects and vanquished foes: for he would aspire to divine honours, and [†]ascend above the heights of the clouds, and be like the Most High. (Notes, Gen. 3:4, 5. 2 Kings 19:25. Jer. 51:52, 53, v. 53. Ez. 29:2—19. 29:2—5. Dan. 8:9—12. Acts 12:20—23.) But in fact his soul was about to sink into hell, and his body to be thrown into the pit, without even the accustomed rites of burial.—The fall of the apostate angels is not directly recorded in the Old Testament: but it is implied in the distinction the holy writers make between good and evil spirits; and is sometimes alluded to by the prophets, when they threaten destruction to proud and insolent tyrants, who, in imitation of the pride of the devil, exalt themselves against God and his truth; and are the instruments of Satan in promoting idolatry and wickedness in the world. . . . These expressions, as they allude to the rebellion of Satan, who affected to be equal with God; so they contain an exact description of Antichrist, who is represented by St. Paul, as [†]“exalting himself above all that is called God,” . . . as [†]“sitting in the temple of God, and showing himself that he is God.” Louth. (Notes, Dan. 11:36. 2 Thes. 2:3, 4.)—Brought down to hell. (15) Matt. 11:20—24, v. 23.

V. 16—20. The subject is here diversified by another scene. The dead body of the king of Babylon is found, narrowly examined, and recognised, by some who had known him in his prosperity; and they express their surprise and contempt, by the subsequent interrogations. Among other cruelties they mention as a reason of the dire judgments inflicted on him, his severity to his captives, whom he kept in bondage and in prison without mercy. (Notes, 47:6. 49: 24—26. 51:21—23. Jer. 50:33.)—Belshazzar performed no exploits answerable to the lofty terms here used; and we may hence infer, that the race of kings, which terminated in him, is also meant; for this is common in prophecy. ‘Belshazzar . . . being slain in a sudden revolution, his body might probably be neglected for some time, and suffered to lie above ground; and afterwards be buried without any solemnity, but thrown into a pit in the very clothes in which he was slain, as common soldiers are buried in the field after an engagement.’ Louth.—Other kings had been buried according to their dignity, and lay quietly in their tombs: but he was deprived of burial, as an abominable branch from a detested stock; as the polluted raiment of those slain in battle, when, not being worth preserving, it is tumbled into the hole with their dead bodies; or as a carcass, that is trampled under foot in contempt. His cruelty to his people, beyond the example of his predecessors, merited this treatment: and 23 I will also [†]make it a possession for the bit-tern, and pools of water: and [†]I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the Lord of hosts.

[Practical Observations.]

24 [†]The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand:

25 That [†]I will break the Assyrian in my land, and upon my mountains tread him under foot: [†]then shall his yoke depart from off them, and his burden depart from off their shoulders.

26 This is [†]the purpose that is purposed upon the whole earth: and this is the hand that is stretched out upon all the nations.

neither such evil-doers, nor their posterity, would be exempted from infamy and misery. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 21—23. God himself here speaks, and commands the complete extirpation of the royal family of Babylon; that they might no more arise to possess the earth, and build cities to perpetuate their memory as they had done. For he would destroy both that family and their name, and Babylon also, from off the earth; yea, he would [†]“sweep it with the besom of destruction.” (Note, 2 Kings 21:13.) an expression incomparably emphatical; and yet it has been fulfilled in the most extraordinary manner!—The word rendered “nephew,” properly signifies grandson. Belshazzar was the grandson of Nebuchadnezzar: and after his death, it may well be supposed, that the posterity of that great conqueror was extirpated. And when Cyrus had taken Babylon, the waters of the Euphrates were not properly reduced to their channel; so that they gradually changed the adjacent country into a marsh, or fen, full of pools of water, and a habitation for bitterns or other creatures which choose such situations: the import of the original word is not certainly known. (Notes, 13:19—22. 34:9—15. Jer. 51:25, 61—64.)—“I believe it may with truth be affirmed, that there is no poem of its kind, extant in any language, in which the subject is so well laid out, and so happily conducted, with such a richness of invention, with such variety of images, persons, and distinct actions, with such rapidity and ease of transition, in so small a compass, as in this ode of Isaiah. For beauty of disposition, strength of colouring, greatness of sentiment, brevity, perspicuity, and force of expression, it stands among all the monuments of antiquity unrivalled.” Bp. Louth.

V. 24—27. These verses are by many considered as referring to the event of Sennacherib's invasion, (which might be considered as a pledge for the performance of the foregoing prophecy:) yet they are introduced, and concluded, in so energetic a manner, “The Lord of hosts hath sworn, &c.” “The Lord of hosts hath purposed, and who shall disannul it?” (Notes, 46:5—11. Ez. 17:15, 16. Eph. 1:9—12. 3:9—12.) that they seem rather to be the continuance and conclusion of “The Burden of Babylon.” Assyria was a part of the dominions governed by the king of Babylon: (Note, Ezra 6:22.) and the ruler of the same countries may be intended. But no king of Babylon was ever broken in the land of Israel. It is therefore highly probable, that some future events, respecting the New Testament-Babylon are intended, and the restoration of Israel as connected with it; (Note, 1:2.) when this conclusion of the prophecy shall receive a literal accomplishment. I do not profess to decide how far some modern conjectural expositions are, or are not, well grounded: (Note, 11:11—16.) but, while the interpretation concerning literal Babylon is adhered to, as of peculiar importance in demonstrating the divine inspiration of the prophet; future events may also be predicted, which will be still more conclusive to posterity. (Notes, Ez. 38:39. Dan. 11:40—45. Zech. 10:5—12. Rev. 18:19.)

V. 28—32. These verses form a distinct prophecy, which probably was delivered at another time.—Uzziah had vanquished the Philistines: (2 Chr. 26:6, 7.) but when he died, and the Jews were afterwards greatly enfeebled during the reign of Ahaz, and left in great difficulties at his death; the whole land of Philistia, and all connected with it, rejoiced. But it was predicted, that Hezekiah would be more terrible to them than Uzziah had been; as if a serpent of a less poisonous nature, and less formidable, should produce a cockatrice, or a fiery flying serpent. (Note, 2 Kings 18:8.) At the time predicted, the very poorest of the Jews would be sustained in plenty, and live in safety; whilst the Lord would destroy the root of the Philistines' prosperity by famine, and employ Hezekiah to slay their remnant. Instead of rejoicing therefore, howling would be more reasonable for Philistia; for the whole land would be ruined: a smoke, or cloud of dust, from the north would give notice of the approach of the army of Judah from the northeast to waste them; from which none would desert, when the appointed season arrived. And if any nation should send ambassadors to make peace with the Jews, or to inquire concerning their deliverances: (Notes, 2 Kings 20:12, 13, 2 Chr. 32:30—33, v. 31.) they might answer, that 'JEHOVAH himself had chosen and established Zion, as the place of his special presence and worship; in order that his people, when afflicted and distressed, might betake themselves thither for refuge; and be safe and secure under his protection, though poor and destitute in themselves. —'The first born of the poor' (30) 'denotes those who are remarkably such; as 'the first born of death' (Job 18:13.) signifies some unusual disease, and such as is distinguished from the common ways of dying; Bp. Lowth. 'The poor shall feed upon my choice first-fruits.' Bp. Lowth. The choice 'first-fruits,' however, were not allowed to be eaten by any except the priests. (Num. 18:8—13. Notes, Ex. 22:29—31, v. 29. Lev. 23:10—14, v. 10, 11.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—23. JEHOVAH's plan of governing the world is in all respects arranged for the good of his chosen people: so that even revolutions in kingdoms conduce to the true interests of his church. His judgments on some ungodly men are made instrumental to the conversion of others, who join themselves to his people, and cleave to them: and the consolations of his service abundantly compensate their losses and sufferings. Israel will certainly obtain a complete ascendancy over all opposers, with 'rest from sorrow, and fear, and hard bondage;' whilst all their oppressors will be reduced to the most abject slavery and contempt. The Lord now glorifies his patience in bearing with his rebellious creatures; but he will shortly glorify his power and justice in their punishment; and men shall behold with astonishment the sudden and tremendous ruin of oppressive rulers, and cities full of the gains of iniquity.—There always have been men, who gloried in using power to gratify their rage, ambition, and cruelty. But when they are crushed by others more powerful and successful than themselves, their ruin excites a general rejoicing. Speedily the most mighty and terrible of the scourgers of mankind will be broken; and having here resembled in disposition the inhabitants of hell, they will there be made like them in impotency and misery: and their only distinction will then be, a degree of wrath proportioned to their many and great, but abused talents, their enormous crimes, and extensive mischievousness; whilst their mutual revilings and taunts will enhance their misery. What then will all their present pomp and sensual mirth avail them?—The more boundless the ambition, and the higher the exaltation, of the wicked have been; the more tremendous will be their downfall. As our first parents ruined themselves by aspiring to be as gods: so the same propensity has infected their posterity; and many arrogant mortals have defied God, and claimed divine adoration: as if it were not sufficient to be exalted above all earthly potentates; and as if they really thought that they could 'ascend into heaven and be like the Most High.' But the more of this inebriating poison they gorge, the greater is their resemblance to Satan, and the more they fall into hell will accord to the fall of that 'Lucifer, the high places, to weep: 'Moab shall howl over 'Nebo, and over 'Medeba: on 'all their heads shall be baldness, and every beard cut off.

3 In 'their streets they shall gird themselves with sackcloth: 'on the tops of their houses, and in their streets, every one shall howl, 'weeping abundantly.

4 And 'Heshbon shall cry, and Elealeh; 'their voice shall be heard even unto 'Jahaz: therefore the armed soldiers of Moab shall cry out; 'his life shall be grievous unto him.

5 'My heart shall cry out for Moab; 'his fugitives shall flee unto 'Zoar, a heifer of 'three years son of the morning." For a while they weaken the nations, make the earth to tremble, shake kingdoms, and change the world into a wilderness, a slaughterhouse, or a dungeon for the few whom they suffer yet to live. But soon death weakens and removes them; and whilst their souls are in torment, perhaps great honour is rendered to their breathless remains. (Notes, Luke 16:13—26.) But sometimes the Lord disgraces the remains of such monsters of iniquity; and the contempt shown to those who once were renowned on earth, causes such "as narrowly observe them" to say, "Is this the man, who—" But whether honourably interred, or left as a carcass trodden under feet, such men are abominable and contemptible, and entail misery and disgrace on their posterity, for whom "slaughter is prepared for the iniquity of their fathers."—When God arises against the wicked, he will so crush them, that they shall rise up no more; and he will sweep them from the earth "with the besom of destruction," and deserts, seas, and pools of water, in the places where once proud cities stood, form affecting monuments of the power of his wrath, and demonstrations of the truth of his word.

V. 24—32. According to the thoughts and purposes of God every event must take place; for who can disannul his purpose, or turn back his out stretched arm? Wo then be to those, against whom "he swears in his wrath, that they shall not enter into his rest!" (Notes, Heb. 3:7—19, 4:1, 2.) When one instrument of his vengeance is removed, he soon raises up another more terrible: and he easily destroys the root, as well as lops off the branches, of his enemies, who have always cause to weep and howl, instead of rejoicing. (Notes, Luke 6:24—26. James 4:7—10, 5:1—6.) But the Lord has founded Zion, for a refuge to poor sinners, who "flee from the wrath to come," and trust in his mercy through Jesus Christ. None, that humbly by faith apply for admission into this "city of our God," are excluded. There they are protected and provided for, even the poorest and most guilty of them: and he has not only ensured their salvation, by his promise, but confirmed it with an oath: that they might enjoy "a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold on this hope set before them." (Note, Heb. 6:13—20.) Let us then glory in our privileges, and in our relation to the crucified Immanuel: let us always be ready to give "a reason of our hope" to every inquirer; and let us inform all around us of our comforts and security, and exhort them to seek the same Refuge and Salvation.

NOTES.—CHAP. XV. V. 1. (Notes, Jer. 48:) 'This and the following chapter, taken together, make one entire prophecy. . . . The time of the delivery, and consequently of the completion of it, which was to be in three years from that time, is uncertain; the former not being marked in the prophecy itself, nor the latter recorded in history. But the most probable account is, that it was delivered soon after the foregoing, in the first year of Hezekiah, and that it was accomplished in his fourth year, when Salmenezer invaded the kingdom of Israel.' Bp. Lowth.—'Surely Ar was destroyed and brought to silence in a night, &c.' Old Version. That is, suddenly, in a very short time and not after a long siege; and with every circumstance and aggravation of terror. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)—'Kir of Moab.' 'There are two cities called by the name of Kir in Scripture: this here mentioned belonged to Moab; the other a city in Media, 2 Kings 16:9. Am. 1:5.' Lowth.

V. 2. Either the king of Moab is here introduced, or the people are spoken of collectively, in the person of their progenitor, who is represented as mourning over his ruined posterity. "Bajith and Dibon" may perhaps mean an idol-temple at Dibon, to which the people resorted with their lamentations and devotions, in their terror and distress. (Josh. 13:17.) Little is known concerning the places here mentioned. (Marg. Ref.)—The speedy performance of the prediction would confirm the credit of Isaiah, as a prophet, and tend to excite the attention of his contemporaries to his prophecies concerning them.

V. 3, 4. (Marg. Ref.) When the Moabites went up to old: for by 'the mounting up of Luhith 'with weeping shall they go it up; for in the way of Horonaim they shall raise up a cry of 'destruction.

6 For the waters of 'Nimrim shall be 'desolate: for the hay is withered away, 'the grass faileth, there is no green thing.

7 Therefore 'the abundance they have gotten, and that which they have laid up, shall they carry away 'to the 'brook of the willows.

8 For 'the cry is gone round about the borders of Moab, the howling thereof unto 'Eglaim, and the howling thereof unto Beer-elim.

9 For the waters of Dimon shall be full of blood: for I will bring 'more upon Dimon, 'lions upon him that escapeth of Moab, and upon the remnant of the land.

V. 5. 'This seems to be spoken in the person of the Moabites. (16:7. 21:3. Jer. 48:31, 36.) ... If we understand the prophet, as speaking in his own person, it implies that the calamities of Moab are so great, as to extort pity even from an enemy! Louth. (Marg. Ref.)—Heifer. That is, the Moabites would resemble in their howlings the lowing of a full grown heifer, the voice of which is observed to be deeper than that of the bullock. V. 6, 7. Marg. Ref. Brook, &c. (7) Or, 'the valley of the Arabians.' Either the Moabites would intrust their property with the Arabians, or it would be plundered and carried away by them. Some, however, think that Babylon is meant, "by the valley of willows." (Note, Ps. 137:1-6, v. 2.)

V. 8, 9. (Marg. Ref.) "Dimon" is derived from the Hebrew word which signifies blood.—'I will bring more and more calamities: and they that fled to escape the present evils shall fall into worse disasters: as if a man that fled from his enemy should meet with a lion to devour him. (Jer. 48:44.)' Louth.—Perhaps lions and other beasts of prey infested the desolate countries, and devoured the remnant of the inhabitants.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilst wicked men are asleep, or drunken, in the night, their enemies are watchful and active; and death often breaks their pleasing or golden dreams, or silences their tumultuous revels. But let us "be sober and vigilant," lest "that day should come upon us unawares."—The ungodly when in danger or trouble, may well be alarmed and inconsolable; for they are destitute of a comforter, and of any adequate support. Yet, alas! they are but seldom induced to approach the mercy-seat of God, with penitent sorrow and believing prayer; and all other endeavours to extricate themselves eventually involve them the more.—Temporal sufferings may render life grievous to such as find the thoughts of death intolerable; but some, alas very many in these days, are left to seek escape from present anguish, by plunging themselves into eternal misery! How worthless then are men's idolized treasures! How soon will every possession be torn from them, or made a burden to them: and more and more anguish still remains for impenitent sinners, after all which they have suffered, till they fall into that place where is "weeping and gnashing of teeth" for ever. Yet our hearts should be pained for the sufferings even of wicked men: for they are our brethren in Adam, however inimical to us: and they may yet, for what we can know, be made our brethren in Christ. Whilst therefore we warn them to escape from impending ruin, let us continue to pray for them; that they may seek and find forgiveness of sins, and an inheritance with the redeemed of the Lord, in that kingdom which cannot be moved.

2 For it shall be, that, 'as a wandering bird 'cas' out of the nest, so the daughters of Moab shall be at 'the fords of Arnon.

3 'Take counsel, 'execute judgment; 'make thy shadow as the night in the midst of the noon-day; 'hide the outcasts; bewray not him that wandereth.

4 Let 'mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab; be thou a covert to them from the face of the spoiler: 'for the 'extortioner is at an end, the spoiler ceaseth, the 'oppressors are consumed out of the land.

5 And 'in mercy shall the throne be 'established: and he shall sit upon it in truth, 'in the tabernacle of David, 'judging and seeking judgment, and 'hasting righteousness.

6 ¶ We 'have heard of the pride of Moab; he is 'very proud: even of his haughtiness, and his pride, and his wrath: 'but his lies shall not be so.

7 Therefore 'shall Moab howl for Moab, every one shall howl: for the foundations of 'Kir-hare sath shall ye 'mourn; surely they are stricken.

NOTES.—CHAP. XVI. V. 1, 2. The Moabites had paid tribute to the kings of David's race out of their flocks: but when Judah was reduced, they revolted: (2 Kings 3:4. 1 Chr. 18:2. Note, 2 Kings 1:1.) and the prophet seems here to call on them to send again the tributary lamb, to Hezekiah, from one end of the land to the other, and "to the daughter of Zion," the place of God's worship; as a token of their submission to him, and their desire of deprecating his indignation, by furnishing sacrifices at the Temple. For otherwise the invaders would desolate the land, and drive the daughters of Moab before them, destitute and defenceless, to pass the fords of Arnon, like birds that wander from their nest. (Marg. Ref. Note, Prov. 27:8.)

V. 3-5. The Moabites were exhorted, as they were in interest concerned, to take counsel how to escape the judgments which impended over them: and if they would be advised by the prophet, let them begin by doing justice, and protecting the oppressed. Many of the Jews had been driven from their habitations, during the distractions of the preceding years: let Moab shelter those of them who came into their country, as the people of God, and conceal them from their spoilers. For, though Israel had been grievously wasted, they would not always continue in that distressed condition. Their ravages were about to be cut off: God would in mercy establish Hezekiah on the throne, and in the tabernacle of David, as one who would tread in the steps of his pious progenitor; maintaining the truth and worship of God, impartially executing justice, seeking diligently to find out the right in every cause, and making haste to reform the nation, and promote righteousness:—and then they would again prosper. (Notes, Am. 1:1, 12. Ob. 10-14.)—Bishop Louth applies the counsel of the prophet to the Jews, and supposes that he exhorted them to entertain the Moabitish outcasts. But though this doubtless was a proper conduct for them; yet it is far more likely, that the exhortations were addressed to the same persons, against whom the predictions were uttered.—Some think that the counsel given to Moab was ironical.—In the days of Ahaz, and especially after the victory of Pekah over Judah, the Jews, in great distress, perhaps sought shelter among the Moabites: but the Moabites are supposed to have repelled and betrayed them. (Notes, 2 Chr. 28:5-11.) Had they at that time acted according to the reasonable advice here given, they might have escaped the ruin which now awaited them; but, by their cruelty to the people of God, they had provoked his vengeance: Pekah, Remaliah, and other oppressors had been cut off: (Notes, 7:1-9, 16.) Ahaz, the wicked king of Judah, was dead: and Judah no longer needed the assistance of Moab; for Hezekiah's throne was established in mercy.—He shall govern his people with an equal mixture of justice and mercy; and therein prefigure the Messias, in whom all the promises made to the house of David shall be finally accomplished. "The Tabernacle of David," may allude to his having been a shepherd, and dwelling in tents, before he was advanced to the kingdom; but both here, and in Amos 9:11. (the only places where the phrase is used,) it mystically denotes the church. ... (Comp. Lev. 26:11. with Rev. 21:3.) Louth. (Notes, Am. 9:11, 12. Am. 15:13-18.)

V. 6. The excessive pride of the Moabites, and their indignation against God's people, were generally reported, and well known: but their deceitful designs would not prosper.—

8 For 'the fields of Heshbon languish, and 'the vine of Sibmah: 'the lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants thereof, they are come even unto 'Jazer, they wandered through the wilderness: her branches are 'stretched out, they are gone over the sea.

9 ¶ Therefore 'I will bewail with the weeping of Jazer the vine of Sibmah: 'I will water thee with my tears, 'O Heshbon, and Elealeh: 'for 'the shouting for thy summer fruits and for thy harvest is fallen.

10 And 'gladness is taken away, and joy out of the plentiful field; and in the vineyards there shall be no singing, neither shall there be shouting: the treaders shall tread out no wine in 'their presses; 'I have made 'thy vintage-shouting to cease.

11 Wherefore 'my bowels shall sound like a harp for Moab, and mine inward parts for 'Kir-haresh.

12 And it shall come to pass, 'when it is seen that Moab is weary on the high place, that 'he shall come to the sanctuary to pray; 'but he shall not prevail.

13 This is the word that the Lord hath spoken concerning Moab 'since that time.

14 But now the Lord hath spoken, saying, Within 'three years, as the years of a hireling, and 'the glory of Moab shall be contemned, with all that great multitude; 'and the remnant shall be very small and feeble.

5 And it shall be 'as when the harvest-man gathereth the corn, and reapeth the ears with his arm; and it shall be as he that gathereth ears in 'the valley of Rephaim.

6 ¶ Yet 'gleaning grapes shall be left in it, as the shaking of an olive-tree, two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough, four or five in the outmost fruitful branches thereof, saith the Lord God of Israel.

7 At that day 'shall a man look to his Maker, of faith. And many, especially the powerful, affluent, wise, and learned of the world, are very proud, and prone to be exasperated by the counsel of Christ by his faithful ministers (Notes, Prov. 1:24-31. Rev. 3:17-19.) and to prefer to it their own lying, unprofitable devices. If the Lord have taught us to value what such men despise, let us be thankful: and let us not envy or covet their transient enjoyments; for we may foresee a season when they will terminate in weeping and howling. If "that mind be in us, which was in Christ," our bowels of compassion will be moved for them; we shall weep in the prospect of those miseries, which are coming upon our most indignant enemies; and we shall persist in our endeavours to do them good, "if peradventure God may give them repentance." (Notes, Luke 19:41-44. 2 Tim. 2:23-26.) But numbers when driven by distress to their devotions, weary themselves to no purpose; whilst every one goes to his sanctuary to pray; but neglects the mercy-seat, and the great High-Priest of Israel, or only pays a hypocritical regard to them. When the Lord has spoken, and his appointed time arrives; all the glory and prosperity and multitude of the wicked shall be contemned and perish: for "who can stay his hand, or say unto him, what doest thou?" (Notes, 14:24-27. Dan. 4: 34-37.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XVII. V. 1. This prophecy must have been delivered at the time when the kings of Syria and Israel confederated against Judah. (Notes, 7:1-9, 16.) It is called "the burden of Damascus," as foretelling the desolations of that city; but it was at least equally directed against the kingdom of Israel. 'It was delivered probably soon after the prophecies of the seventh and eighth chapters, in the beginning of the reign of Ahaz; and was fulfilled by Tiglath-pileser's taking Damascus, and carrying the people captives to Kir, (2 Kings 16:9.) and overrunning great part of the kingdom of Israel, and carrying a great number of the Israelites also captives to Assyria: and still more fully in regard to Israel, by the conquest of the kingdom, and the captivity of the people, effected a few years after by Shalmaneser.' Bp. Louth.—Damascus was afterwards rebuilt; and, after many changes, continues to this day. It was for a season "taken away from being a city, and made a ruinous heap;" but it was not "swept with the besom of destruction." (14:23. Notes, Jer. 49:23-27. Am. 1:3-5. Zech. 9:1.)

V. 2. Arer.] Arer was a city on the river Arnon, formerly belonging to Moab: (Marg. Ref. e. Note, Jer. 48:19-25.) but it might at this time be in the hands of the Syrians. It is, however, far more probable, that there was a district of Syria of the same name, in which several cities were placed. Such coincidences in names are common in all parts of the world.

V. 3. As Syria and Israel had combined, in attempting the ruin of Judah, and of the house of David, they should be visited with similar judgments. (Note, 1.)—Samaria, the fortress of Israel, would be destroyed, and the kingdom cease from Damascus: nor would the remnant of Syria, which survived the taking of Damascus, any more be established as a

Some explain the last clause thus: "His wrath is greater than his strength." His power is not equal to his vain boasts. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Jer. 48:29, 30. Zeph. 2:8-10.)

V. 7-11. (Marg. Ref. Note, 15:2.) The vines of Sibmah seem to have been had in great repute, and to have been extensively propagated in very distant regions: but the lords, or conquerors, of the nations would soon destroy them, with all other productions of the land; and then their shouting and singing, for the vintage or harvest, would utterly cease. The prospect of these calamities greatly affected the prophet; he could not refrain from weeping, and his inward commotion was such, that he compared it to the tremulous sound of a harp. (Marg. Ref. Jer. 48:31-33. Note, 15:5.) "Whose generous shoots overpowered the mighty lords of the nations,"

(Notes, 2 Kings 3:26, 27.)

V. 13, 14. The Lord had made the approaching ruin of Moab known to his prophets, in former times; (Notes, 25:10-12. Num. 24:17. Ez. 25:8-11. Am. 2:1-3.) but now he fixed the precise date of it; namely, after three exact years, such as hirelings serve. (Note, Deut. 15:18.) 'The remnant shall be few, small, and without strength.' Bp. Louth.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The most awful denunciations of divine wrath are connected with the discovery of a way of escape, to those who take warning.—Submission and tribute are due to such as God has 'made rulers of the land; and it is a valuable privilege to obey those who govern according to his word.—From one end of the earth to the other, there is no salvation for sinners, but by submitting to "the Son of David," and devoting themselves and their substance to him; and they who refuse this, will be reduced to extreme misery, without regard to rank or sex. It behoves all therefore to "take counsel;" to renounce their sins, to "do justice, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God;" these are the genuine fruits of "faith which worketh by love;" and all who love Christ will be kind to his poor people, and use their influence to provide for them and protect them in distress. Extortioners and oppressors may for a time be permitted to afflict them, but they will witness the destruction of every enemy: and such, as will not countenance them in their suffering, shall not share their felicity.—The Redeemer's throne is established in mercy and in righteousness; his subjects, who share his mercy, rely on his truth, and obey his just commands, are "a holy nation;" and those rulers, who copy his example may expect to prosper.—The pride and enmity of men's hearts commonly render them deaf to the most pressing exhortations to repentance, submission, and the obedience and his eyes have respect to the Holy One of Israel.

8 And he shall not look to the altars, the work of his hands, neither shall respect that which his fingers have made, either the groves or the images.

9 ¶ In that day shall his strong cities be as a forsaken bough, and an uppermost branch, which they left because of the children of Israel: and there shall be desolation.

10 Because thou hast forgotten the God of thy salvation, and hast not been mindful of the Rock of thy strength, therefore shalt thou plant pleasant plants, and shall set it with strange slips:

kingdom: but, losing all their glory, they would decline like the Israelites, as mingled among other nations, and subject to foreign princes. Accordingly, Syria was first subject to the Assyrians; and successively to the Chaldeans, the Persians, the Macedonians, the Romans, and others, even to this day, when it belongs to the Ottoman empire:—so exactly has this prophecy been accomplished!

V. 4-8. The glory and prosperity of the kingdom of Israel would more and more decline, like a man in a consumption; and their enemies would waste them, as the husbandman reaps the harvest, and as the gleaner after him collects the scattered ears. Yet a few individuals would be preserved: as a few grapes or olive-berries are, when the rest are gathered: being situated out of the gatherer's reach. (Rev. 19:9, 10. Dent. 24:19-21.) These would renounce idolatry, and return to the worship and service of the Lord, looking to him for help, and having respect to his commandments, as the Holy One of Israel; and not to the altars erected to their idols, the work of their own hands. (Marg. Ref.—Note, 2:6-9.)—After the ravages of Tiglath-pilezer, several of the Israelites joined themselves to the Jews in celebrating the passover, and in destroying idolatry. (Notes, 2 Chr. 30:31.) Afterwards many were incorporated with the Jews, (especially after the Babylonish captivity,) and finally renounced all gross idolatry. "The altars dedicated to the work of his hands?... that is, the altars of their idols." Bp. Louth.

V. 9. This obscure verse probably means, that the cities of Israel would be as entirely desolated, as those of the Canaanites had been in the conquest of the land by Joshua. The Septuagint render it, 'Thy cities shall be forsaken; as when the Hivites and Amorites forsook,' (that is, their cities,) 'because of the children of Israel; and they shall be desert.' Either this is a mere paraphrase and exposition, or the text from which it was translated differed from that of the present Hebrew Bible.

V. 10, 11. 'The pleasant plants and shoots, from a foreign soil, are allegorical expressions for strange and idolatrous worship; vicious and abominable practices connected with it; reliance on human aid, and on alliances entered into with the neighbouring nations, ... to all which the Israelites were greatly addicted, and their expectations from which should be grievously disappointed.' Bp. Louth.—The Israelites bestowed indeed much pains about such plants; but when they expected a harvest from them, it proved a ruinous heap; and instead of rejoicing, in possessing the prosperity which they were thus seeking, they had intense grief and desperate sorrow as their reward. 'Because thou hast forsaken the true God, to follow idols, nothing shall thrive with thee; although, like an industrious gardener, thou procurest the choicest plants, and takest the greatest care to make them grow; ... yet, when thou expectest to reap the fruit of thy labours, (so our margin very fully translates Jom nachalah 'the day of inheritance,') ... thou shalt find nothing but loss and disappointment.' Bp. Louth.—'In the morning, when thou shalt have made thy shoots to spring forth, even in the day of possession, shall the harvest be taken away, and there shall be sorrow without hope.' Bp. Louth. Bp. Horsley and Mr. Faber think, that the prophet was here led forward to foretell the state of Jacob, or the whole house of Israel, in their present dispersions; in which they do not in general worship idols: yet they have "not respect to the God of Salvation," and are remarkably depressed and disappointed in all their endeavours. (Note, Hos. 3:4, 5.)

V. 12-14. These verses seem to form a detached subject, and describe with great energy the march and ruin of and to the rushing of nations, that make a rushing like the rushing of mighty waters!

13 The nations shall rush like the rushing of many waters: but God shall rebuke them, and they shall flee far off, and shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like a rolling thing before the whirlwind.

14 And behold at evening-time trouble; and before the morning he is not. This is the portion of them that spoil us, and the lot of them that rob us.

Sennacherib's army. A wo is denounced against his numerous forces collected from many nations; or a summons is given to them. Their noise, and blasphemous rage, and impetuous force, resembled the mighty waters of the sea: but when He, (that is "the God of Israel,") should rebuke them, they would flee like the chaff, or thistle-down, before the whirlwind. (Marg.) In the evening, Jerusalem would be in consternation and distress, because of the powerful invader; but before morning almost his whole army would be cut off, and he would flee with the remnant as fast as possible. (Notes, 10:28-34. 2 Kings 19:1)—Bishop Horsley and Mr. Faber suppose, that a future vehement, but unsuccessful, assault of Antichrist against the Jews and Israelites, when converted to Christ, and restored to their own land, is here predicted. (Note, Dan. 11:44, 45.) The event must determine how far this opinion is well grounded.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

"Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished:" and if the people of God associate with his avowed enemies, they must expect to share in their heavy judgments. His powerful wrath speedily desolates flourishing cities, and wastes all human glory, as a man's vigour, comeliness, and cheerfulness decline by an incurable disease: and when sinners are ripe for destruction, the Lord will employ some of his instruments to reap and glean them, till he make a full end of them. But though no impenitent sinner can escape the wrath of God; yet in the worst state of the visible Church, or any part of it, he has always reserved to himself a few humble believers: these he will place out of the reach of the instruments of his vengeance. (Note, Rom. 11:1-6.) Public calamities likewise are often the means of bringing men to renounce their idols and iniquities, to look to the Lord for help, and to have respect to his promises and precepts.—If professed Israelites "forget the God of their salvation, and are not mindful of the Rock of their strength," they will seek help, peace, and prosperity in vain from every quarter; their labour will be lost, and their "harvest a heap in the day of grief and desperate sorrow." But happy are they who remember God as their Salvation, and rely on his power and grace: their enemies may rage, and rush upon them with dreadful force and fury; but God shall rebuke them, and they shall flee away, "as a rolling thing before the whirlwind." Their trouble, and the prosperity of their enemies, will be equally transient; and their joy will endure for ever, like the destruction of those who hate and spoil them.

NOTES.—CHAP. XVIII. V. 1. This is generally allowed to be to us one of the most obscure prophecies in Scripture; though perhaps well understood by those to whom it was delivered. "The land shadowing with wings," seems to mark out Egypt as connected with Ethiopia; and it may be so called on account of the ridges of mountains which shadowed it on each side: or rather because the Egyptians pretended to shadow the Jews under their protection, as "with wings," against the incursions of the Assyrians. 'Ho! to the land of the winged cymbal.' The Egyptian sistrum is expressed by a periphrasis; the Hebrews had no name for it in their language. ... The cymbal they had; an instrument in its use and sound not much unlike the sistrum; and to distinguish from it the sistrum, they called it the cymbal with wings. ... If these words are rightly interpreted, ... Egypt must be the country to which the prophecy is addressed: Bp. Louth. The shape of the Egyptian cymbal is alluded to, which had projections not unlike wings. The land was "beyond," which borders on, "the rivers of Cush." The river Nile, flowing through Ethiopia and ning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden down, whose land the rivers have spoiled!

3 All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye.

4 For so the LORD said unto me, I will take my rest, and I will consider in my dwelling-place like a clear heat upon herbs, and like a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest.

5 For afore the harvest, when the bud is perfect, and the sour grape is ripening in the flower, he shall both cut off the sprigs with pruning hooks, and take away and cut down the branches.

6 They shall be left together unto the fowls of the mountains, and to the beasts of the earth: and the fowls shall summer upon them, and all the beasts of the earth shall winter upon them.

7 In that time shall the present be brought unto the LORD of hosts of a people scattered and peeled, and from a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden under foot, whose land the rivers have spoiled, to the place of the name of the LORD of hosts, the mount Zion.

CHAPTER XIX.

Predictions of terrible judgments, which God was about to inflict on Egypt, 1-17: and that the Egyptians would at length join in the worship of the Lord, and share the blessings of his salvation, 18-25.

THE burden of Egypt. Behold, the LORD brideth upon a swift cloud, and shall come into Egypt: and the idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence, and the heart of Egypt shall melt in the midst of it.

3 And the spirit of Egypt shall fail in the midst thereof: and I will destroy the counsel thereof: and they shall seek to the idols, and to the charmers, and to them that have familiar spirits, and to the wizards.

Egypt, is—divided into seven streams, or rivers, before it reaches the sea.—The word translated "Wo," may be merely a call on them to attend to the message of JEHOVAH.

V. 2. The land intended was remarkable for sending ambassadors, or messengers, upon the seas and rivers, in vessels of bulrushes, or formed of the papyrus; and this was peculiar to the Egyptians, who made vessels of that plant for this purpose. Ex ipso quidem papyro navigia texunt. Pliny. To this country "swift messengers" were ordered to be sent: that is, the message of the Lord ought assiduously to be conveyed into every part of it; for to them it appertained. The nation is described as "scattered and peeled;" or, as it may be rendered, "stretched out and smoothed;" and this may refer to the length of the land of Egypt from north to south, being a vale on each side of the Nile above seven hundred miles long; Ethiopia extends to a considerable length on the south of it; and the whole was smoothed, or made level by the constant inundations of the Nile. It was also "a nation terrible from their beginning hitherto," which is characteristic of Egypt: "a nation meted out, and trodden down;" alluding to the frequent admeasurement of their lands, which was rendered necessary by the inundations of the river, by which their landmarks were destroyed; and to their method of throwing the seed upon the mud, when the waters subsided, and treading it in, by turning their cattle into the fields. "Whose land the rivers have spoiled," or nourished, as some think the original word may mean; and indeed it is so anomalous, that we can only conjecture from what root it is derived.

V. 3. It is here supposed, that this prophecy was published before, but related to, that time, when Sennacherib had routed the army of Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia, and was preparing to besiege Jerusalem; (Note, 2 Kings 19:9.) intending afterwards to prosecute his advantage against Egypt and Ethiopia. But the Lord seems to have called on them, and all the inhabitants of the earth to attend; and when they saw this proud victor lift up his ensign on the mountains, and heard him blow the trumpet for the assault of Jerusalem, to expect the extraordinary interposition of God in behalf of his people. "I... suppose, that the prophecy was delivered before Sennacherib's return from his Egyptian expedition, ... and that it was designed to give to the Jews, and perhaps likewise to the Egyptians, an intimation of God's counsels in regard to the destruction of their great and powerful enemy. ... I take God to be the Agent in this verse; and that by the Standard and the Trumpet, are meant the meteors, the thunder, the lightning, the storm, earthquake, and tempest, by which Sennacherib's army should be destroyed, or by which at least the destruction shall be accompanied. ... 29:6. 30:30, 31. 40:16, 17. Bp. Lenth.

V. 4-6. God had assured his prophet, that he would rest securely in Zion, contemplating the assault of the invaders; and he would show his regard to his dwelling place and worshippers, "like a clear heat after rain, or like a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest;" that is, as their protection and consolation in their extreme distress. For whilst the enemy deemed his schemes maturing, as the harvest or vintage; and before the perfect bud and opening flower were ripened into the sour grape, before the critical season of executing his design was arrived; the Lord would cut off all the branches of his vineyard; and his army, and the carcasses of his numerous host would be a plentiful provision for the wild beasts and birds of prey, during a very long time. V. 7. (Note, 2.) The nation before described, hearing of this surprising catastrophe, would send oblations to be offered at the temple of the Lord of hosts upon mount Zion, giving glory to his name. (2 Chr. 32:23.) This and similar passages were doubtless intimations, at least, of the conversion of the nations to the God of Israel. The Egyptians would be delivered from the Assyrians, by the power of the God of the Jews; and not the Jews by their assistance: and the doom of the proud tyrant Sennacherib, was intended as a warning to them, to renounce their idols and iniquities.—An entirely new interpretation has been given to this obscure chapter, by Bp. Horsley and Mr. Faber; who suppose future events to be intended, concerning the destruction of Antichrist, and the restoration of the Jews, as converted to Christ, to their own land, by some protestant Christian nation, of great maritime power and influence, meaning Great Britain.—I must refer the reader to "Bp. Horsley's Letters on Prophecy," and "Mr. Faber's View of the Prophecies concerning Judah and Israel;" being by no means satisfied with the interpretation; and yet wholly averse and incompetent to decide against it. (Note, 11:11-16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We should endeavour to call the attention of mankind to the works of God for his people: for wherever they live, or however they are distinguished, whether they have been prosperous and terrible, or obscure and trampled upon, they are greatly concerned in them: and the warnings of his providence, as well as the oracles of his word, are intended for their conviction.—When the arrogant opposers of the truths and servants of Christ lift up the standard and blow the trumpet of war, and openly assault the church, with full confidence of success; let the inhabitants of the earth attend, and wait for the event. The Lord, undisturbed by their puny efforts, will still delight in Zion, and protect his dwelling-place; nor shall the policy or power of hell prevail against his church, as built on this Rock, that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God." (Note, Matt. 16:18.) He will protect and comfort his people, in all their persecutions and tribulations, and render their souls most flourishing in holiness, when their afflictions most abound. But he will blast the ripening schemes of his presumptuous foes, when they deem their success certain; and their subsequent contempt and misery will be proportioned to their present haughtiness and arrogance. Thus shall the nations of the earth be convinced that JEHOVAH is God, and Israel his people, and shall concur in presenting their spiritual sacrifices to his glory. And happy are they, who take warning by his judgments on others, and make haste to join themselves to him and to his people.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIX. V. 1. This chapter seems to contain a general prediction of the several calamities, which would come upon Egypt from the invasion of that country by Sennacherib, to the times of its subjugation by the Macedonian kings, the successors of Alexander the Great; terminating with prophecies of spiritual blessings at length to be conferred on many of the inhabitants.—When the Lord by "the weapons of his indignation," should come into Egypt with terrible majesty, as "riding on a swift cloud," (Marg. Ref. b. Note, Deut. 33:26.) their idols would not be able to afford them any protection; nay, they would become the derision and contempt of the victors: and even the evil spirits which were worshipped through the lifeless images, would be filled with consternation; while the courage of their worshippers would melt, as wax before the fire. (Marg. Ref. Ez. 12:12. Notes, Jer. 43:8-13. 44:29, 30. 46: Ez. 29-42. Zech. 14:16-19.)

4 And the Egyptians will I^a give over into the hand of a cruel lord; and a fierce king shall rule over them, saith the Lord, the Lord of hosts.

5 And the waters shall fail from the sea, and the river shall be wasted and dried up.

6 And they shall turn the rivers far away; and the brooks of defence shall be emptied and dried up: the reeds and flags shall wither.

7 The paper-reeds by the brooks, by the mouth of the brooks, and every thing sown by the brooks, shall wither, be driven away, and be no more.

8 The fishers shall also mourn, and all they that cast angle into the brooks shall lament, and they that spread nets upon the waters shall languish.

9 Moreover they that work in fine flax, and they that weave networks, shall be confounded.

10 And they shall be broken in the purposes thereof, all that make sluices and ponds for fish.

12 Where are they? where are thy wise men? and let them tell thee now, and let them know what the Lord of hosts hath purposed upon Egypt.

13 The princes of Zoan are become fools, the princes of Noph are deceived; they have also seduced Egypt, even they that are the stay of the tribes thereof.

14 The Lord hath mingled a perverse spirit in the midst thereof: and they have caused Egypt to err in every work thereof, as a drunken man staggereth in his vomit.

15 Neither shall there be any work for Egypt, which the head or tail, branch or rush, may do.

16 In that day shall Egypt be like unto women: and it shall be afraid and fear, because of the shaking of the hand of the Lord of hosts, which he shaketh over it.

V. 2, 3. Not many years after the destruction of Sennacherib's army, the affairs of Egypt were reduced to the utmost confusion and anarchy, by fierce and bloody intestine contentions and civil wars in every part of the land: these ended, after some time, in the tyranny of twelve princes, who divided the country among them; till at length Psammetichus overcame all the rest, and possessed the sole dominion for fifty-four years. Some other dreadful civil contests, which took place in Egypt, and conducted to its subjection under foreign conquerors, may also be predicted: but in all these difficulties, both the courage and conduct of the people failed; and their magicians could afford them no more help than their idols did. (Notes, 11-14. 47:12-15. Ez. 7:11,12.)—That have familiar spirits. (3) רַחֲמַיִם. Note, Num. 21:10.

V. 4. Not long after the death of Psammetichus, Nebuchadnezzar conquered Egypt; and he and his successors, and afterwards the Persian kings, ruled over that country, with despotic sway and most grievous and cruel oppression, till the days of Alexander the Great. The word rendered a lord, may more properly be translated lords: and be interpreted of all the usurpers, conquerors, and oppressors, who successively tyrannised over Egypt. But some consider Cambyases, the son of Cyrus, and Ochus, or Darius Nothus, as the cruel lord and fierce king, particularly intended, who are both branded in history, for cruel tyrants and monsters of men. Bp. Newton. The old translation renders it, "a mighty king." Indeed the word admits of that meaning; and then Alexander, the powerful deliverer of Egypt from the oppression of the Persian kings, under whom and his successors, the Egyptians were greatly favoured, may be pointed out, "I will shut up the Egyptians in the hands of severe lords: and a mighty king shall rule over them." (Note, Ez. 29:14,15.)—Will I give over, &c.] "I will give up Egypt bound into the hands of cruel lords, and a fierce king shall rule over them." Bp. Louth.—"Shut up." Marg. (Notes, Ps. 31:78. Rom. 11:25-32, v. 32. Gal. 3:19-22, v. 22. 23-25, v. 23.)

V. 5-10. (Marg. Ref.) The inundations of the Nile failing, the communication of the interior parts of the country with other nations, by the sea, would be cut off: the remaining waters would become putrid; the brooks, which were the fences of the fields, or of the cities, would dry up: even the papyrus, and other aquatic plants which were a considerable article in the commerce of the Egyptians, would wither; the corn sown by the brooks, as well as the productions of the higher grounds, would be destroyed; and their gainful fisheries and manufactures would be ruined, for want of materials or purchasers. (15. Notes, Ez. 7:21. Ez. 30:12.) This may be understood literally of a dreadful famine; or figuratively, of the decay of their prosperity, and the drying up of all the sources of their wealth, through their civil distractions. The Septuagint render the last clause, "All they who make barley-wine shall mourn and be grieved in soul." (10) The Egyptians had few vines; and the use of fermented liquor from barley, or other grain, was very general among them.

V. 11-14. The Egyptians pretended to an antiquity far beyond any of the neighbouring nations; and their kings (of whom Pharaoh was the common name) were descended, as they boasted, from a royal race which had continued for some thousands of years. This was altogether fabulous; but doubtless Egypt was renowned for wisdom and science, before any other nation, at least in the countries of which the records are much known. (Note, Ps. 105:22.) Yet now their princes and counsellors, who should have been the stay, or "pillars," of the land, and of all its tribes, were become foolish and brutish: and whilst they flattered their king, as the son of wise, as well as ancient kings; they seduced him into very foolish measures: or, while they boasted of the wisdom and dignity of their own ancestors, they could neither foresee nor prevent the calamities, which God had purposed to bring upon them. If there were any possessed of this wisdom, where were they to be found?—Indeed the Lord would give them up to their own perverse schemes, and to quarrel with each other, as their private interests or humours led them; till the land would be reduced, by their fierce and bloody contests, to the condition of a drunken man, who can scarcely stagger along, and is equally the object of contempt and pity. (Marg. Ref. b, c. Notes, 1-3. 28:7,8. 29:9-12. Jer. 25:15-17.)—Zoan was also called Tanais, and Noph, Memphis. The latter is called Moph, in the original of Hos. 9:6.—The stay. (13) "The corner." Marg. and Marg. Ref.

V. 15. "All orders and degrees of men shall fail in the discharge of their duty, from the highest to the lowest." Louth. The want of employment, however, through the failure of commerce, and manufactures of every kind, and the suspension through drought even of the usual occupations of agriculture; (Note, 5-10.) together with the effects of this failure of work, in deeply distressing scarcity, and that exasperation of men's spirits which is commonly excited in such circumstances, and in the time which had nothing to occupy it; as concurring in fomenting their intestine dissensions and jars, (Note, 2,3.) seems rather to be meant.

V. 16. "When God intends the destruction of any people, he commonly takes from them their strength and courage: so that "a thousand shall flee at the rebuke of one."... (30:17. Deut. 28:25. Jer. 50:37. Nah. 3:13.) This is what the heathen expressed by a panic terror: but Isaiah more properly calls it here, "the shaking of the hand of the Lord of hosts:" God's holding his rod over a people, and still threatening them with severe judgments." Louth. (Marg. Ref.—Notes, 10:28-34. 30:15-17,29-33.)

V. 17. "Considering, through their occasion, the Jews made not God their defence, but put their trust in them, and were therefore now punished; they (the Egyptians), shall fear lest the like lot should be to them."—The first invasion of Judah by Sennacherib, when "he took all its fenced cities," preceded his march into Egypt: and it is probable, that the rumour of the ravages and cruelties, committed in Judah, excited great consternation among the Egyptians. (Notes, 20:1. 2 Kings 18:13. 19:9-13.) In like manner the destruction of Jerusalem, and the captivity of the surviving Jews, preceded the conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar; and would be heard of with very great alarm by the distressed inhabitants. (Notes, Jer. 43:8-13. Ez. 29:17-20.)

V. 18. The preceding prophecy includes a series of years, reaching at least to the time of Alexander the Great, and the favour shown to the Egyptians by him and his successors to the LORD of hosts; one shall be called, The city of destruction.

19 In that day shall there be an altar to the LORD in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the LORD.

20 And it shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the LORD of hosts in the land of Egypt: for they shall cry unto the LORD because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a Saviour and a great One, and he shall deliver them.

21 And the LORD shall be known to Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know the LORD in that day, and shall do sacrifice and oblation; yea, they shall vow a vow unto the LORD, and perform it.

22 And the LORD shall smite Egypt: "he shall smite and heal it: and they shall return even to the LORD, and he shall be entreated of them, and shall heal them.

23 ¶ In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians.

24 In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land:

25 Whom the LORD of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance.

(Note, 1.) and some think, that their subsequent servitude to the Romans, Saracens, and Turks, to this present day, is also predicted. But, in the mean time, some of them would become acquainted with the true God, learn the language of Canaan, and "swear to the LORD of hosts:" i. e. they would learn to speak of God and his word and worship, as the Jews did, and to vow obedience to him: or to use his name, and to call him to witness in their solemn oaths, as his worshippers. (Notes, 45:23—25. Jer. 12:14—17, v. 16.) It is not known what five cities were intended; and especially, there is considerable uncertainty respecting that, which would be "called the city of destruction," though it is commonly supposed to mean Heliopolis, or "the city of the sun;" and it is thought that it should be thus read. (Marg.) Several cities, however, would be thus favoured, especially one, which had been notorious for idolatry, or was apparently ripe for destruction.—Under the Macedonian kings, who succeeded Alexander and reigned in Egypt, peculiar privileges were granted to the Jews, and numbers of them settled in that country; where they professed their religion, and worshipped God in the synagogues which they built. In process of time the Scriptures were translated into Greek, which was then understood by numbers in Egypt; and this translation is now called the Septuagint. Thus the natives gradually became acquainted with God, and his truth and will; and probably many were proselyted to the Jewish religion. A temple was also built by Onias, at Heliopolis, where a worship was performed, similar to that at the temple in Jerusalem: and though this was irregular, and could by no means be justified, yet it might be overruled to draw the attention of the Egyptians to the true religion. (Notes, Acts 1:4—8. 8:5—8.) But though these events might be, in some degree, an accomplishment of the prophecy before us; yet it seems more immediately to relate to the planting and flourishing of Christianity in Egypt, in the primitive ages.—Learned men observe from this place, where the Jews' language is called the language of Canaan, that the Hebrew is the same with the old Phœnician language. Louth. (Note, Gen. 11:8—9.)

V. 19—22. "It is a judicious observation of Calvin upon 56:7. . . The prophets, when they speak of the Gentiles coming into the church, express their serving the true God, by such acts of devotion as were most in use in their own time, and therefore could be best understood by those to whom they directed their discourses. . . Onias indeed in after times built an altar and temple in Egypt for the use of the Jews, thinking to fulfil this prophecy literally; but it was against the general sense of his own nation, who thought that according to their laws no temple ought to be built but in Jerusalem. . . From whence it appears, that they thought this prophecy was to have a mystical, and not a literal completion." Louth. (Note, Ex. 40:2.)—These verses seem typically to describe the effects which followed when the Egyptians were converted to Christianity; and not merely the proselyting of some of them previously to the worship of the true God. The altar may denote the atonement of Christ, and access to God through him; (Notes, Heb. 13:9—16,) and the pillar, either their avowal of the Lord, as the Object of their worship, or his acknowledging of them as his people; and his ordinances, among them, would be a sign and a witness of their relation to him. (Marg. Ref. o.) Their crying unto the Lord, and his sending them a Saviour and a great One, to deliver them from their oppressors, can be interpreted of their deliverance by Alexander the Great from the Persian yoke, only in a very subordinate sense, if at all: indeed, there is little reason to conclude, that in his days there were many Egyptians, who sought deliverance from God by earnest prayers. Christ himself and his spiritual redemption no doubt were principally intended: and probably some future grand deliverance from oppressors, to whom the Egyptians are or shall be exposed, is specially predicted. (Notes, 11:1—16. Dan. 11:40—45. Zech. 10:5—12.) The Lord, however, promised to make himself known unto them, and that they should acknowledge him, and worship him and pay their vows to him: for his smiting of them would make way for their conversion, prayers, and healing in answer to them. (Note, Hos. 6:1—3.)

V. 23—25. For many ages, the Assyrians, (or the Chaldeans, Persians, and Macedonians, who successively had dominion in the same regions,) were engaged in hostilities with the Egyptians; and they strongly fortified their countries against each other. (Notes, 2 Chr. 35:20—24. Dan. 11:1—30. Zech. 9:8.) but it is here predicted, that there would be an unobstructed and well prepared way, or road, made between the two countries, to favour the intercourse of the inhabitants with each other, and with Israel, as situated directly in this frequented road: that they would also unite together, and with Israel, in serving and worshipping the LORD; and that Israel would prove a blessing between the two nations, by communicating to them the knowledge of God, and his salvation. (Notes, Gen. 12:1—3. Zech. 8:20—23.) Nay, the Lord himself would pronounce them blessed, and show favour to them, as his people and the work of his hands, new created unto holiness, even as he had been used to do to Israel his inheritance. "The work of my hands," . . . is always used in this prophet, of those who are in covenant with God, and members of his church. Louth. (Notes, 29:22—24. 45:11. 60:15—22. Ps. 100:3. 149:2. Eph. 2:19—22. 1 Pet. 2:9, 10.)—I apprehend that the grand accomplishment of these verses, and of the latter part of this extraordinary prophecy, is still to be expected. At the same time I would observe, that to explain the whole chapter, as predicting one grand event, supposed to be foretold in very many scriptures; so as to exclude the evident literal accomplishment of the former part of the chapter; is calculated to weaken the evidence, from prophecies already fulfilled, to the divine inspiration of the Scripture, to confound the minds of plain readers, and to furnish cavils to those, who say, there is no certainty in prophecy.—It is of immense importance to draw the line as exactly as possible, between what has been fulfilled, and what has not.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—17. When ungodly men escape one threatening danger, they think themselves secure: but "evil pursueth sinners," and will speedily overtake them: and when the Lord comes to execute judgment, every false confidence will fail, and every sinner's heart will melt within him. To punish a guilty nation, the inhabitants need only to be left to themselves, and they will soon be set against one another, "every one against his brother, or his neighbour; city against city," and province against province. Thus the righteous Lord weakens offending nations, and destroys their counsel; and their foolish expedients for deliverance, involve them in still deeper guilt and misery. When collective bodies are thus divided among themselves, and either struggling to acquire or retain dominion, or aiming to preserve or recover their liberties, without regard to God, he often gives them into the hands of some foreign power, which rules over them "as a cruel lord, and a fierce king;" so that the true friends of civil liberty, and all who would be considered as reformers, should begin by seeking the favour of God, and liberty from the bondage of sin. He can soon cut off those sources of national wealth, which are looked upon as most certain; and whilst kings and nobles are forming and executing their insatuated projects, to aggrandize themselves; the poor are often deprived of employment and subsistence, and so hurried on by designing men into turbulent and ruinous measures. Indeed, the comfort of the lower orders in society is seldom, if ever, duly regarded by ambitious men: yet, where this is neglected, the counsel of the wisest is brutish, and tends to deceive, whilst it flatters, those who depend upon it: and thus they become the ruin, who should be the stay, of the tribes of the land. But he leaves rulers to be actuated by a perverse spirit, and to bring public affairs to the utmost confusion and contempt, in order to punish the lower orders also for their transgressions: and every view of this subject proves, that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but that sin is the reproach of any people." (Note, Prov. 14:34.) and that invasions, civil wars, and the decay of trade, and the want of employment or even food for the poor, are calls from God to national repentance and reformation. When he "shaketh his hand," and shows tokens of indignation; the most courageous become as women; and he renders sinners afraid of those, whom before they despised or oppressed. "The counsel of the LORD of hosts, which he hath determined" against all the workers of iniquity, will make them a terror to themselves and to each other; and every surrounding object a terror to them.

V. 18—23. The severest temporal judgments of God combine with his designs of mercy: and revolutions in mighty kingdoms make way for the success of his gospel. Already numbers have learned to "speak the language of Canaan, and to swear to the LORD of hosts" to erect altars to his name, and to offer him spiritual sacrifices, in those places which were the most addicted to idolatry: and every event of this kind is a proof of the divine original of that blessed book, in which so many prophecies to this effect are contained, which are fulfilling from age to age in the view of the whole world.—The Lord has indeed sent a Saviour and a great one, to deliver those, who were oppressed by Satan; all that cry unto him for that redemption are made partakers of it; and ere long he will open a way for his gospel into the remotest nations of the earth. Then hostile nations shall amicably accord in serving him; and commerce shall become, in a most eminent degree, the means of religious intercourse, and "the communion of saints," in regions most remote from each other. For they shall then alike know, trust, and worship "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ;" he will acknowledge them as "his people, the work of his hands," and "his chosen inheritance;" and it shall then be known that Israel, which has been so despised and hated on earth, was indeed blessed of God, and a blessing in the midst of every land.—But, what a change does the grace of God effect upon men's dispositions, conversation, and behaviour! Believing his truth and attending on his ordinances, they learn to speak a new language, sincere, pure, pious, heavenly, and instructive: (Note, Zeph. 3:9, 10.) they become just, harmless, kind, and peaceable; and they live in harmony and do good, and aim to be a blessing to their neighbours, and even to their enemies. (Note, 11:6—9. P. O. 1—9.)—Finally, let the broken-hearted and afflicted, who call on God for his mercy, take courage; for he will be entreated, and heal their souls, and turn their sorrowing supplications into joyful praises.

NOTES.—CHAP. XX. V. 1. Tartan was one of Sennacherib's captains, who seems here to be called Sargon. (2 Kings 18:17.) Tartan was sent by him to form the siege of Ashdod, a very strong city in Philistia, (Marg. Ref. b.) which is recorded to have afterwards held out against a king of Egypt for twenty-nine years. Tirhakah, against whom Sennacherib marched, was king of Cush: whether Cush meant Ethiopia south of Egypt in Africa, or a part of Arabia in Asia. (2 Kings 19:9.) The inhabitants of Ashdod expected help from the Egyptians and Ethiopians; and many of the Jews did the same; but the prophet was ordered to predict Sennacherib's victory over those confederated nations.—Some think that Ashdod was at this time in the hands of Hezekiah.

V. 2—4. Multitudes of prisoners, taken by the Assyrians, and reserved for sale as slaves, would be driven before them bare foot and uncovered, save with a short garment, which scarcely sufficed to hide their nakedness; the prophet, therefore, was ordered to walk abroad in the same manner. As a mourner for the sins and miseries of his people, and as denouncing judgments on them, and as mortified to the world, he was used, it seems, to wear sackcloth constantly: (Notes, 2 Kings 1:8. Zech. 13:3. Matt. 3:4. Rev. 11:3—6.) But on this occasion, he was to lay even that aside, and to appear exactly as the captives were exposed. This would subject him to ridicule and reproach, and be uneasy both to his body and mind; yet he promptly obeyed. It is not probable that he continued to appear in this manner for three years; but rather it was a sign of what would take place after three years; and the wonder excited by seeing the prophet walking publicly in this manner, would render his prediction the more noticed. If he once walked out thus, it might answer this end; but it is most likely he continued to do so for three days. (Notes, Jer. 13:1—11. Ez. 4:)—Sennacherib is computed to have been absent above three years, from the time that he first laid Hezekiah under contributions, till he came back with the design of besieging Jerusalem. During this time he gained many advantages over the Egyptians; and just before his return he obtained a complete victory over Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia, when, it is probable, this prediction was literally fulfilled. (Notes, 2 Kings 18:13. 19:9—13.)

V. 5. The Ashdodites, who had hitherto held out against the Assyrians, expecting help from the Ethiopians, and glorying in their Alliance with Egypt, would, on this event, despair of help, and surrender to the besiegers.

V. 6. This isle. Or "country." Marg.—The Jews also, hearing of the successes of Sennacherib against their allies, would despair of help from that quarter, and be ready to give up all for lost. God, however, purposed to deliver them by his own power, and not by heathen succours. (Notes, 30:1—7. 31:1—5.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We should by no means habituate ourselves to indolence, sloth, or delicacy: for we know not how soon we may be called to endure hardship, reproach, and contempt, for the Lord's sake. We ought not indeed to do any thing of our own minds, which may appear absurd or ridiculous: but the world will often deem us foolish or mad, when we are singular in obedience to God: (Note, 2 Kings 9:11.) and we must at all times refuse conformity to its vain fashions, and be mortified to its pleasures.—The attire and demeanour of ministers should be such as may best give emphasis to their message, and call men's attention to them as the servants of God: and in order to be a sign and an example to others, we must be such men as the world wonders at.—True faith will produce implicit obedience: and the minister cannot reasonably expect that his hearers should regard his doctrine, unless he demonstrate his own belief of it by his practice.—The Lord will effectually support his servants under the most painful and mortifying effects of their obedience: and what we are called to suffer for his sake, is commonly very trivial or transient, compared with what numbers groan under from year to year, through the cruelty of conquerors, or lordly oppressors, who hold them in bondage.—All men's expectations from creatures, and glorying in them, will end in terror and shame: those who flee for succour to such deceitful refuges, will often be reduced to despair; and if the people of God have recourse to these carnal confidences, they will infallibly tend to discourage their hope and comfort: but they who trust in the Lord, shall never finally be confounded.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXI. V. 1. 'The ten first verses of this chapter contain a prediction of the taking of Babylon by the Medes and Persians. It is a passage singular in its kind, for its brevity and force; for the rapidity and variety of the movements; and for the strength and energy of colouring, with which the action and event is painted. It opens by the prophet seeing at a distance the dreadful storm that is gathering, and ready to burst upon Babylon.' Bp. Louth.—Babylon and the adjacent country is here called "the desert of the sea;" (9) because it was shortly to become desert, and a marsh full of pools of water; as if converted into a lake, or inland sea; (Note, 14:21—23.) or because it stood in a large plain, which was often overflowed by the Euphrates and the Tigris; and had been drained by great labour and expense. 'The country about Babylon, and especially below it toward the sea, was a great flat morass, often overflowed by the Euphrates and Tigris. It became habitable by being drained by the many canals that were made in it.' Bp. Louth.—The whirlwinds in the south of Arabia often come with destructive fury: (Marg. Ref. Zech. 9:14. Note, Jer. 4:11-13.) thus ruin would irresistibly come upon Babylon from Media and Persia, the armies of which were very terrible; and through the deserts, which intervened between those countries and Babylon.—The prophet renews his threatenings against Babylon, as he does afterwards, (47:) to convince the Jews, by this repetition, of the certainty of the event; ... and thereby support them under their captivity, when that should come.' Louth.

V. 2. The grievous calamities coming on Babylon, were revealed in vision to the prophet. 'The words may be thus translated: ... "A grievous vision: there is made known to me an oppressor of the oppressor, and spoiler for the spoiler;" that is, It is now come to the king of Babylon's turn, to feel that oppression and ravage himself, which he had before brought on others.' Louth.—"The plunderer is plundered, and the destroyer is destroyed." Bp. Louth. No change of the text is needful, for this rendering; but merely a trifling one of the vowel points. (Notes, 14:1-6. 33:1. Jer. 25:8-26. 51:20-25.) For the Lord had called Elam, or Persia, and Media, to go up and besiege Babylon; and thus to terminate the sighing of the captive Jews; and many others, who had been grievously oppressed by Babylon.

V. 3-5. Almost two hundred years before the time, the prophet here seems to personate Belshazzar, on the night when Babylon was taken, and he was slain. (Notes, Dan. 5.) We are introduced, as it were, into the banquetting room of that prince, and witness his astonishment: he declares to us his dismay and anguish, when he saw the hand which wrote and the writing on the wall; and how he was bowed down, when Daniel read and explained it to him; how "his heart panted, and fearfulness affrighted him;" and the night, which he had set apart for peculiar pleasure, was thus turned into terror and dismay. For whilst he had given orders to prepare the feast and to set the watch, and whilst he and his princes ate and drank; Cyrus had commanded his captains, to burnish their arms, and prepare for the assault: or, Belshazzar's princes were loudly called to arms, from their riotous feasting.

V. 6-9. The prophet here speaks in his own person. The Lord commanded him to set a watchman, who was required to make observations, and give notice of them; and he informed the prophet, that "he saw a chariot, with a couple of horsemen, &c." This may mean the chariots of war, and the united cavalry of the Medes and Persians; and the chariot of asses, and that of camels, may mean the carriages loaded with their baggage, drawn by these animals. If, however, described the march of Cyrus's army, furnished with every thing requisite for forming the siege of Babylon. Having "hearkened diligently with much heed," he further cried, "a lion," that is, the destroyers of Babylon march forward with boldness and fury, as a lion in quest of his prey: according to the margin, "He cried as a lion," that is, very vehemently. (Marg.)—"The particle as is frequently understood." Louth. Though the watchman had been used to watch whole days and nights, he had never before observed such things: for the chariots and horsemen arrived at once; and instantaneously it was proclaimed, with energetic repetition, that Babylon, with all her graven images, was destroyed, and thrown to the ground. All this seems to have passed before the prophet's mind in vision: and was descriptive of his own office and duty, as a prophet and watchman to the house of Israel. (Marg. Ref. o. Notes, 56:9-12. Ez. 3:17-19, 33:2-9.) This rapid succession of events does not accord to the warning given by the king of Babylon's watchmen, nor indeed to any thing which could really exist; for it comprises the transactions of many years: nay, it is probable that the ruin of the New Testament-Babylon was also intended to be predicted. (Notes, 13:19-22. Jer. 50:2, 3, 51:7-9, 61-64. Rev. 14:8, 18:1-3, 21-24.)

V. 10. 'O my people, whom for your punishment I shall make subject to the Babylonians, to try and to prove you, and to separate the chaff from the corn, the bad from the good among you; hear this for your consolation: your punishment, your slavery and oppression, will have an end in the destruction of your oppressors.' Bp. Louth. Marg. Ref. y. Notes, 28:23-29. Matt. 3:11, 12.

V. 11, 12. This is a distinct, brief, obscure, and almost enigmatical, prophecy. Dumah is Idumea, or the land of the Edomites, mount Seir. (Marg. Ref. a, b.) Some one of that nation called to the prophet, in vision, as the watchman who waked when others slept, to inquire, what time of the night it was, or what was the news of the night. This may either mean an earnest inquiry of the Edomites concerning the fate of their own country; or perhaps an insulting inquiry, concerning the duration of the afflictions of the Jews, in the Babylonish captivity. (Notes, Ps. 137:7-9. Ez. 25:8-14. 35: Joel 3:18-21. Am. 1:6-8, 1, 12. Ob. 10-19.) To this the watchman answered, "The morning cometh, and also the night:" which may signify, that the deliverance of the Jews would come in its appointed time; but after a short continuance of approaching prosperity to the Edomites, a dreadful ruin would come on them, of which the prophet saw no end.

'The Edomites, as well as the Jews, were subdued by the Babylonians. They inquire of the prophet, how long their subjection is to last: he intimates, that the Jews should be delivered from their captivity; not so the Edomites.' Bp. Louth. (Notes, 34: 63:1-6. Jer. 49:7-22. Mal. 1:2-5.) But 'if ye will inquire indeed, and ask questions in earnest; inquire of God first, ask his mercy, and afterward come again, and ye shall have a more favourable answer.' Louth.

V. 13-17. (Notes, Jer. 49:28-33.) This is a short prophecy concerning calamities, which were coming on the Arabians. (Marg. Ref. f, g, h.) The travelling companies of the Dedanim, a tribe of the Arabians, would shelter themselves in the forests from their hostile invaders: and let other tribes, who were not molested, meet them with provisions, that they might not perish; (it may be translated as a command Marg.) for indeed they fled from the most imminent danger of death. These desolations were to take place in an exact year from the publishing of this prophecy; and probably it

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The history of mankind is little more than a detail of the treachery, rapine, and cruelty, which they have committed, and of the miseries which they have endured: and an insight into futurity would be attended with many grievous discoveries, respecting ourselves, our families, and those with whom we should sympathize. But, "sufficient for the day is the evil thereof."—What anguish and horror must seize the enemies of God, when he shall arise to execute vengeance upon them; and when all which they see, hear, remember, or expect, shall combine to increase their terror! This some perceive to be their wretched case, at the approach of death; and all the ungodly will know it in another world. But words can never express, nor can imagination reach to an adequate conception of their dismay or despair. And what numbers will then dolefully exclaim, "The night of my pleasure hath been turned into fear unto me!"—While sinners are saying, "Let us eat, drink, and be merry;" and let others watch for our souls, if they see good; perhaps the Lord is about to say, "Thou fool, this night is thy soul required of thee."—He has set ministers, as watchmen, to declare what they see: let every one, therefore, to whom this office is committed, "hearken diligently, with much heed," to his instructions, and continue day and night upon his watchtower; and give sinners warning of their approaching danger; that at least he may deliver his own soul. (P. O. Ez. 33:1-9.) Let him "declare the whole counsel of God," as far as he can learn it, whether it relate to mercies, or judgments; and let all, who love their souls, attend to the warnings of such ministers, as may truly say, "that which I have heard of the LORD, ... have I declared unto you." (Notes, Acts 20:18-31. 1 Cor. 15:1,2.) For all the enemies of God will as surely be destroyed, as Babylon and her graven images are fallen; but every trial conduces to purify believers, that they may be gathered as wheat into the garner.—There are many who make curious inquiries of the watchmen; they would willingly have many difficult questions resolved, unrevealed mysteries explained, and abstruse prophecies interpreted; and they want to know exactly where we now are in the series of predicted events: but they do not inquire into the state of their own souls; or about the way of salvation, or the path of duty, or how to grow in grace. These are mere Edomish inquirers: and though we should be ready, as far as we can, to answer any proper question; yet we ought to warn such men "to look to themselves," and to repent, and return to God by faith and prayer, and not amuse themselves with these discussions. Whilst they forget their time of life, and are growing old in their sins; it little concerns them to inquire, what time of the night it is with the church: for though the morning of her deliverance comes, yet the midnight of their final misery approaches with equal speed.—Calamities still go round, in this sinful world; and it behooves us to relieve the distressed of our brethren, knowing that our turn may come shortly. But happy are they, and they only, whose riches and glory are placed out of the reach of hostile invaders: for all other prosperity will speedily pass away; "for the LORD God of Israel hath spoken it."

NOTES.—CHAP. XXII. V. 1. Jerusalem, as situated in the midst of surrounding hills, and favoured with the revealed truth and will of God, is here called "The valley of vision."—The prophet saw, in vision, all the inhabitants of that city gone up to the roofs of their houses, on a sudden

6 And Elam bare the quiver with chariots of men and horsemen, and Kir uncovered the shield.

7 And it shall come to pass, that thy choicest valleys shall be full of chariots, and the horsemen shall set themselves in array at the gate.

9 Ye have seen also the breaches of the city of David, that they are many: and ye gathered together the waters of the lower pool.

10 And ye have numbered the houses of Jerusalem, and the houses have ye broken down to fortify the wall.

11 Ye made also a ditch between the two walls for the water of the old pool; but ye have not looked unto him that fashioned it long ago.

12 And in that day did the Lord God of hosts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth:

alarm, and to make observations; and he inquired what was the matter. Their houses in general were without windows towards the street, and the tops flat, and much used, on various occasions. (Notes, Deut. 22:8. Matt. 10:27,28.) "The houses in the east were in ancient times, as they are still generally, built in one and the same uniform manner. ... The house is built with a court within, into which chiefly the windows open: those that open to the street are so obstructed with lattice work, that no one either without or within can see through them.—Whenever therefore any thing is to be seen or heard in the streets, any public spectacle, any alarm of a public nature; every one immediately goes up to the house-top to satisfy his curiosity. ... The people running all to the tops of their houses gives a lively image of a sudden general alarm." Bp. Louth.

V. 2, 3. Jerusalem had been full of the hurry and tumult of business and pleasure, and at certain seasons, of the multitudes who attended the sacred feasts: but now the stir and tumult was of another nature. Being invested by their invaders, numbers died, not by the sword of war, but by famine and pestilence, or even terror: their rulers attempted to flee; but they were overtaken and bound as prisoners by the archers: and even those who had fled from far out of the open country, to take shelter within the walls of the city, were bound together with the rest of the inhabitants. (Notes, 2 Kings 25:1-7. Ez. 12:1-16.)

V. 4. "He sheweth what is the duty of the godly, and especially of the ministers, when God's plagues hang over the church." (Marg. Ref. Notes, Jer. 6:24-26. 9:1,2. 13:15-17. Luke 19:41-44.)

V. 5. Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Kings 19:3. 25:8-10.—Of crying, &c. One crying to another to flee to the adjacent mountains, in order to escape destruction.

V. 6, 7. Elam and Kir, (Marg. Ref. p-r.) or the Persians and Medes, might serve in Sennacherib's army as subjects to Assyria. Yet the former part of the prophecy seems to accord best to the demolition of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. For it does not appear, that, any destructive pestilence or famine raged in the city, when Sennacherib invaded the land; or that the rulers fled, or were taken and bound; or that the walls were broken down. (Notes, 2,3,5.)—By "chariots of men" we may understand those in which men rode and fought; for the word, translated chariots, sometimes means carriages employed in other uses.

V. 8-14. The preceding verses chiefly relate to subsequent events, yet they might have also some reference to previous calamities: but these seem to predict Sennacherib's invasion, and the behaviour of the Jews on that occasion. He dismantled many of their fortified cities, which had been the covering or protection of Judah; and he threatened the siege of Jerusalem. This put Hezekiah and his princes upon examining the state of their armories and fortifications; and upon making various preparations for defending the city. (Note, 2 Chr. 32:3-8.) But numbers of the people had no proper regard to the Lord, who had constituted Jerusalem to be the place of his own worship, and had long before fashioned every thing respecting it, in subserviency to that end. Notwithstanding the pious labours of Hezekiah and others, most of the people were destitute of faith and piety; and instead of uniting in fasting and prayer, with every token of godly sorrow and humiliation, to which the Lord evidently called them in his providence, if not explicitly by his prophets, they were generally indulging themselves in riot and feasting, and that from the most atheistical principles: as if the apparently near approach of death urged them to seize the present fleeting moment for sensual gratification. (Notes, 6:11-17. 56:9-12. Nch. 8:9-12. Am. 6:3-8. Matt. 24:36-44. 1 Cor. 15:31-34. p. 32.) The Lord was so provoked by this profane contempt of his uplifted scourge, that he determined to accept of no expiatory sacrifices for it; but to punish it by the death of the criminals: though for his own sake he would, for that time, spare the city. The same part was doubtless, for substance, acted over again, at the time when Nebuchadnezzar besieged, took, and destroyed Jerusalem.—There were two pools in or near Jerusalem, supplied by springs: the upper pool, or the old pool, supplied by the spring called Gihon, 2 Chr. 32:30. towards the higher part of the city, near Zion, or the city of David; and the lower pool, probably supplied by Siloam. ^{Bp. Louth.}—The ditch was a channel to carry off the waters from the upper to the lower pool. ^{Louth.}—House of the forest. (8) Notes, 1 Kings 7:2. 14:25-28.—Revealed, &c. (14) Marg. Ref. d.

V. 15. This prophecy concerning Shebna seems to have been delivered about the same time with the preceding: and perhaps he was one of the ringleaders in the unseasonable and profane riot, above severely reprobated. Some think that he had been preferred by Ahaz to be treasurer and steward of the household; and that he outwardly complied with Hezekiah's reformation, to keep his place, though a proud and wicked man. (Marg. Ref. g.) If this were the Shebna, of whom we read in the history of Sennacherib's invasion: the prophecy had not its full accomplishment, till some years after. Some think he was deprived of his office as treasurer, but still continued scribe, or secretary. (Note, 2 Kings 19:2.) But perhaps another person of the same name is meant.

V. 16. It is thought that Shebna was a foreigner; that instead of being treasurer to Hezekiah, he had no right to associate with the Jews at all; and that his connexions and inclinations led him to favour their enemies. He, however, deemed himself established in authority till death; and had prepared himself a magnificent sepulchre in a lofty and conspicuous situation, according to the custom of monarchs; and durable, as if graven out of a rock, to perpetuate his memory and grandeur after his decease. (Marg. Ref. Note, 14:16-20.)—O thou, that hewest out thy sepulchre on high, that gravest in the rock an habitation for thyself! ^{Bp. Louth.}

V. 17-19. Notwithstanding Shebna's ostentatious confidence, his ruin was at hand. He would be degraded from his dignity; violently forced into captivity; covered with infamy, as the condemned criminal's face was covered for execution; (Marg. Note, Esth. 7:8.) driven from place to place, in a strange and wide country, like a ball, when driven with great force in an open field, where no wall or fence obstructs its course; and at length he would die in misery and disgrace; whilst the remains of his magnificence would shame that family, which had preferred so ostentatious and wicked a man. Doubtless this sentence was speedily and exactly executed, though nothing is recorded concerning him. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20-25. God himself appointed Eliakim, his servant, to succeed Shebna; (Marg. Ref. o.) he knew that Hezekiah would be obedient to his word sent by his prophet Isaiah; and this probably occasioned Shebna's disgrace. Eliakim would succeed to the robe and girdle, which were worn by those in office: and he would fill his high station, with the prudence and affection of a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the Jews in general. The key also was a token of authority in those days, as the seals are now; being an emblem, that great and important matters were intrusted to a man's care, and at his disposal; and that he could admit to manifold privileges or advantages, or exclude from them. Probably, either a real key, or the figure of one, was worn upon the shoulder. Christ applies this part of the emblem to himself: we may therefore look upon Eliakim as, in some respects, a type of him. (Notes, Matt. 16:19. Rev. 1:12-20. v. 18. 3:7.)—As nails also are fixed in the walls, on which to hang such things as may be wanted; thus Eliakim would be established in authority, and act so honourably, that his advancement would be like raising his "father's house to a glorious throne;" and all the reputation and interest of every branch of the family would be secure in his hands; for he would be able and willing to take care of them, whether more or less considerable, whilst all those who had depended on wicked Shebna, would be ruined by his fall. (Marg. Ref. x.) ^a A key is an emblem of trust: and the expression alludes to the fashion of keys in old time, which were long, and made like a hook, and then laid upon the shoulder, and worn there as the badge of an office. ^{Louth.}—They, (the Asiatics,) 'fix them' (the nails), 'in the brick-work, when they are building. They are large nails, with square heads like dice, well made; their ends being bent so as to make them cramp irons.' Chardin in Bp. Louth.—These nails were of necessary and common use, and of no small importance, in all their apartments. ^{Bp. Louth.} (Ezra 9:8. Ec. 12:11. Zech. 10:4.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-14. No burden will be more heavy, than that which falls on "the valley of vision," and weighs down those who lived wickedly amidst "the means of grace."—They who have been most secure and prosperous, and those cities which have been most full of the tumultuous hurry of business, pleasure, and ambitious contests, are liable above others to be surprised with unexpected calamities, and left without redress under them.—The Lord has many ways of destroying his enemies; so that it is as vain to attempt to escape, as to withstand "the power of his wrath."—The servants of God, who clearly foresee, and awfully warn sinners of their approaching miseries, are most affected by the prospect. They sometimes "weep bitterly and refuse to be comforted," because of the trouble, perplexity, and ruin, which are coming on their beloved neighbours, relatives, and countrymen: yet, whilst their hearts thus melt with tender compassion, they are counted cruel and morose; because they insist upon it, that God will execute this threatened vengeance on all the impenitent, unbelieving, and ungodly, without exception.—But all the horrors of a city taken by storm, and given up to indiscriminate rapes, murder, and plunder, are scarcely a shadow of the terrors of "the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God." And yet the invasion of a fertile country, when the choicest valleys are full of hostile armies, and the gates of populous cities beset with merciless besiegers, must be inexpressibly distressing to the inhabitants.—Often the approach of danger discovers that weakness which before was unnoticed; yea, and detects that hypocrisy, which had not been suspected; and then the further and the more carefully men examine, the more they discover their exposed and perilous situation. But too generally they look only to externals, and rest in superficial amendment; without duly respecting the Creator of the world, and the Head of the church, who "fashioned" both "long ago," for his own glory, and the good of his people: nor can the most pious rulers or teachers remove the infidelity, impiety, or hypocrisy of the people; except as the Lord works by them.—It is no new thing, even in Israel, for men not to "know the signs of the times;" and when the Lord calls to repentance, fasting, and prayer; nay, when kings, as well as ministers of religion, obey the call, and warn others to do so; numbers continue to indulge their lusts, and add to their sins, and increase the fierce wrath of God against them; as if "let us eat, and drink, for to-morrow we die," were indeed a sentiment worthy of a rational creature! And whether this infidelity work by presumption or desperation, it produces the same contempt and defiance of God; and is a lamentable token, that a man is given up to judicial hardness of heart, and will perish in his impetuosity.

V. 15-25. The impiety and profligacy of the lower orders in society is often a vain and absurd imitation of their superiors. Too often those, who ought not to find admission into the visible church, (having "nothing there,") are at the head of her affairs: and though no human wisdom and piety can uniformly prevent this; yet generally the ostentation, ambition, and avarice of such men, are an indelible scandal to those who prefer them, and to all concerned in their advancement.—But what a vanity is all earthly grandeur, which death will so soon terminate! And what will it avail, whether we be laid in a magnificent monument, or covered with a sod! Surely the foppies of death are the vainest of all vanities: yet those who most value them, are often deprived of them. No stability can ensure the continuance of prosperity. When the Lord is displeased, he soon drives men with violence from their places, and hurries them from one vexation, or place of banishment, to another, till they die in disgrace and misery.—But it is happy for nations, when the removal of wicked men opens the way for the true servants of God into authority. They will act as his stewards, and as the deputies of the Son of David: and in the insignia of their dignities, they will read their duties, and thence learn righteousness, faithfulness, and goodness; and will study to be fathers to the people, especially to the remnant of true Christians in the land. When extensive authority is lodged in such hands, it will be used for the benefit of mankind: and rulers of this character are indeed a credit to their families, and will promote their interests in subserviency to the public good: but all dependence placed on the ungodly, will soon be thrown down with them into perdition. Indeed no expectations can properly be formed of advantage, even from pious men, except as the instruments of God for our good. (Notes, Ps. 146: 3-5.)—But the Father has lodged all authority in heaven and earth in the hands of his beloved Son, who for our sakes became also his "righteous Servant." To him he has intrusted the infinite concerns of his own glory and the honour of his law, to all eternity: and if we submit to his authority, we may confidently hang all our hopes and interests, and those of our families even to remote posterity, upon him; and in every thing rely on his wisdom, power, truth and love. Such are great concerns to us; but they are perfectly safe in his hands. He has opened our way of access into the presence of our reconciled Father; he will set before us an open door, which no man can shut, both whilst we live, and when we die; and bring both soul and body to his eternal glory. But they, who "neglect so great salvation," will find, that when "he shutteth, none can open;" and his hands will shut them out of heaven, and shut them up in hell for ever.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIII. V. 1. (Notes, Jer. 47: Ez. 26: 27: 28; Joel 3: 8. Am. 1: 9, 10.) It is generally agreed, that this prophecy foretells the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar. The ships and mariners, by whom the commerce of Asia, Africa, and Europe in general, or of Carthage and Spain in particular, with Tyre was carried on, are called on 'o mourn and howl at her ruin.—As Tyre was one of the most famous marts in the world in those times; so the destruction of it must be a great loss to all merchant-adventurers. . . . Every house or warehouse in Tyre is shut up and all trade ceased.' Louth.—The Tyrians, when they saw no other means of escaping, fled in their ships, and took refuge in Carthage, and in the islands of the Ionian and

4 Be thou ashamed, O Zidon: for the sea hath spoken, even the strength of the sea, saying, 'I travail not, nor bring forth children, neither do I nourish up young men; nor bring up virgins.

Egean sea; from whence the news would soon spread, and reach Tarshish.' Bp. Louth and Jerom as quoted by him. Thus the ruin of Tyre was revealed to them, i. e. the inhabitants of Tarshish, from the isles of Chittim, or the countries bordering on the Mediterranean. (Marg. Ref. e.)

V. 2. Silence is a mark of grief and consternation. And that entire failure of commerce, which a close and long-continued siege would produce, effectually silenced the noise of the busy multitudes, which before was heard in this merchant-city.—There were two distinct cities, called old and new Tyre, the former a seaport on the continent, the latter on an island at a small distance, and dependent upon the other. "Be silent, O ye inhabitants of the seacoast." Bp. Louth. The Zidonians built Tyre, which is therefore called "the daughter of Zidon;" (12) and it was replenished with all its riches by the trade, which it originally derived from the mother-city: but it soon acquired a high pre-eminence above it.—Nebuchadnezzar took old Tyre after a siege of thirteen years: but the inhabitants had previously removed their most valuable effects, either to new Tyre on the island, or to places beyond sea. (Note, Ez. 29: 17-20.) After a time, new Tyre became a very flourishing city; but it was besieged and taken by Alexander the Great. (Notes, Ez. 27: 26-36. Zech. 9: 1-4.)

V. 3. Sihor means the river Nile. (Marg. Ref. h.) 'It had this name from the blackness of its waters charged with the mud, which it brings down from Ethiopia, when it overflows. Et viridem Egyptum nigra fecundat arena.' (The black sand fructifies verdant Egypt.) Bp. Louth. (שָׁמַר, to become black.) The Tyrians traded largely with the Egyptians for the corn, which their lands, watered by the Nile, yielded in great abundance: and thus, the harvest of the river, springing from the seed sown when its great waters subsided, yielded an immense revenue to Tyre. That river also opened a communication to the Tyrians, with the interior parts of Egypt; and the rich commodities there purchased tended greatly to enrich that merchant-city.

V. 4. The Zidonians, when their city was taken by the king of Assalon, betook themselves to their ships, and landed, and built Tyre.' Justin, quoted by Bp. Louth. (Note, Josh. 19: 24-31.) Zidon therefore gloried in being the founder of Tyre, that "strength of the sea," and, as it were, sole proprietor of it: but she might now be ashamed; for her daughter complained that she was depopulated, and, instead of sending colonies to other cities, she had now no children brought forth, or growing up, to replenish herself. New Tyre, indeed, continued for many ages a flourishing city: but from the time that Alexandria in Egypt was built, her trade began to decrease, and at length Tyre was utterly desolated: and there are, at this day, no remains of that renowned city, except a few huts for fishermen.—Let us not forget that these are standing miracles to demonstrate the divine original of the sacred Scriptures. (Notes, Ez. 26: 14, 21.)

V. 5. As the nations were alarmed at the desolations of Egypt, by the power of God, in the days of Moses; (Note, Ez. 15: 14-16.) so the report of the ruin of Tyre would fill them with consternation. Or, "As soon as the report of Tyre shall come to," or "be heard in Egypt, they shall be in great pain for it," viz. because they exported their corn to Tyre and made a gainful trade of it. (3) And this sense the Septuagint follows. Louth.

V. 6, 7. The Tyrians gloried in the great antiquity of their city: and indeed it seems to have been a fortified city in the time of Joshua. (Josh. 19: 29. Note, 4.) Through its extraordinary wealth, it was replete with every thing conducive to festive indulgence; and the inhabitants were very jovial and luxurious. (Notes, 22: 3, 8-14.) But now they would leave home with howlings and anguish of spirit; and numbers of them would be forced to seek a habitation in distant countries, either as captives or refugees.—The Septuagint, instead of "Tarshish," read Carthage, which was a colony from Tyre.—The prophet speaks of Tyre, as of a tender and delicate woman, not used to hardships, who yet should be forced to travel on foot tedious journeys into foreign countries, being driven from her own habitation. Louth. (Note, 47: 1-3.)

V. 8, 9. The Tyrians boasted of being able to dispose of crowns and kingdoms as they pleased: and therefore the Lord had counselled to tarnish the pride of all human glory of ancient days? her own feet shall carry her afar off to sojourn.

8 Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth?

9 The Lord of hosts hath purposed it, to stain the pride of all glory, and to bring into contempt all the honourable of the earth.

10 Pass through thy land as a river, O daughter of Tarshish: there is no more strength.

11 He stretched out his hand over the sea, he shook the kingdoms: the Lord hath given a commandment against the merchant-city, to destroy the strong-holds thereof.

12 And he said, Thou shalt no more rejoice, O thou oppressed virgin, daughter of Zidon: arise, pass over to Chittim; there also shalt thou have no rest.

13 Behold the land of the Chaldeans: this people was not, till the Assyrian founded it for them that dwell in the wilderness: they set up the towers thereof, they raised up the palaces thereof, and he brought it to ruin.

14 Howl, ye ships of Tarshish: for your strength is laid waste.

15 And it shall come to pass in that day, that Tyre shall be forgotten seventy years, according to the days of one king: after the end of seventy years shall Tyre sing as a harlot.

16 Take a harp, go about the city, thou harlot that hast been forgotten; make sweet melody, sing many songs, that thou mayest be remembered.

17 And it shall come to pass after the end of seventy years, that the Lord will visit Tyre, and she shall turn to her hire, and shall commit fornication with all the kingdoms of the world, upon the face of the earth.

18 And her merchandise and her hire shall be holiness to the Lord: it shall not be treasured nor laid up, for her merchandise shall be for them that dwell before the Lord, to eat sufficiently, and for durable clothing.

by ruining that renowned and haughty city, whose "merchants were princes, whose traffickers were the honourable of the earth." (Notes, 2:10-18.) The question proposed, as if by some observer who was filled with amazement at the surprising change, and the answer of the prophet to the question, have a peculiar energy and animation: and the attentive reader seems almost to witness, what is thus brought immediately under his notice.

V. 10. The inhabitants of Tyre, when the city was likely to be closely pressed by the Chaldeans, are counselled silently and speedily to leave the country, which had no longer any strength or defence; as a river swiftly, yet almost imperceptibly, glides through a land.—Tyre might be called "the daughter of Tarshish;" because her grandeur was greatly the effect of her trade with that city; and because of the close connexion which subsisted between the two cities, and the dependence of the Tyrians on Tarshish, after Tyre was taken.—"Pass through thy land like a flood to the daughter of Tarshish." Old Version. The expression may, however, relate to the ships of Tarshish, with which Tyre carried on her commerce and acquired her greatness. (14. Note, 1 Kings 10:22.)—"Work thine own land, for indeed the ships come no more to thee from Carthage." Sept. That is, 'employ thyself in agriculture, for trade is ruined.'

V. 11. Either Nebuchadnezzar, or Alexander the Great, may here be intended; or God himself, as employing them. Both of these mighty conquerors, "stretched their hand over the sea, and shook the kingdoms;" and each of them besieged and took Tyre. But they had their commission from God, to destroy the strong-holds of that merchant-city, or "of Canaan." (Marg.) Tyre was the principal strong-hold in the land of Canaan: the word, however, signifies a merchant. (Note, Zech. 14:20, 21.)

V. 12. Zidon seems to have been one of the oldest cities in the world: (Marg. Ref. Note, Gen. 49:13.) it is mentioned by Homer, but Tyre is not. Tyre was called "the daughter of Zidon," as built by the Zidonians. "The prophet calls Tyre an oppressed virgin, because she was conquered, and as it were ravished, by her enemies. Whereas those cities, which never came into a conqueror's hands, are styled virgins." Louth. The Assyrians besieged Tyre, but could not take it: Nebuchadnezzar was its first conqueror; and the inhabitants, no longer able to resist, passed over in great numbers, to the countries bordering on the Mediterranean: but the colonies of Tyrians, in Greece, Sicily, Spain, or Africa, had no rest. Carthage was a colony from Tyre, and her unsuccessful and ruinous contest with the Romans is well known; and the others were greatly disquieted, and at length reduced by the same power.

V. 13. (Marg. Ref.) 'The Chaldeans, Chasdim, are supposed to have had their origin and to have taken their name from Ched, the son of Nachor, the brother of Abraham.' (Gen. 22:22.) 'They were known by that name in the time of Moses; who calls Ur in Mesopotamia, from whence Abraham came, to distinguish it from other places of the same name, Ur of the Chaldeans. And Jeremiah calls them an ancient nation. . . . "This people was not," that is, they were of no account, (Deut. 32:21.) they were not reckoned among the great and potent nations of the world till of later times; they were a rude, uncivilized, barbarous people, without laws, without settled habitations; wandering in a wide desert country, (עַרְבִּים), and addicted to rapine, like the wild Arabians.

Such they are represented to have been in the time of Job; Job 1:17. and such they continued to be till Assur, some powerful king of Assyria, gathered them together, and settled them in Babylon and the neighbouring country.' Ep. Louth. 'The Assyrians were at that time,' (when this prophecy was delivered,) 'the great monarchs of the East; the Chaldeans were their slaves and subjects: and therefore it is the more extraordinary that the prophet should foresee the . . . conquest of the Chaldeans.' Ep. Newton. This obscure people were appointed by the Lord to destroy renowned and haughty Tyre, with all its strong towers, and magnificent palaces.

V. 14. Notes, 1. Ez. 26:15-18. Rev. 18:9-20.

V. 15-18. From the first year of Nebuchadnezzar, who in some respects was the founder of the Babylonian monarchy to the ruin of that monarchy by Cyrus, were exactly seventy years. And for a term equal to the days of this one king, or kingdom, Tyre continued in obscurity and neglect. (Notes, Jer. 25:8-27. 27:2-11.) Yet Tyre was not taken by Nebuchadnezzar till nearly the middle of that period. But learned men have also shown, that it was just seventy years from the taking of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, to the time when Darius Hystaspis, by granting some immunities to that city, made way for the recovery of its trade and prosperity.—As covetousness is idolatry, and idolatry is spiritual whoredom; the arts of this commercial city to re-establish her trade are represented by those, which harlots in those days used to draw the attention of their lovers.—For seventy years Tyre had been as a neglected harlot: yet she again employed her former arts, to regain her traffic; and was rendered prosperous by divine Providence. But, in consequence, she corrupted all the kingdoms with her pride, avarice, and luxury.—In due time, however, the Lord intended to plant the gospel there: then numbers of the Tyrians, being converted to Christ, would use that wealth, which had been acquired by commerce, and about which men generally commit wickedness, to maintain the ministry of the gospel, to feed the poor, and to spread the Christian religion: being able, through their affluence, to provide sufficiently for these expenses, which poorer churches could scarcely defray: and then the wealth of Tyre, which had been as "the hire of a harlot," would become "holiness to the Lord." (Marg. Ref. y. Note, Ps. 45:12.)—A church was founded early in Tyre, which became a kind of mother-church to several others, which were connected with it: (Note, Acts 21:1-6.) so that Christianity was established at Tyre for some ages, till the Saracens took the city; and from that time it gradually decayed, till it was at length almost entirely desolated. (Notes, Ez. 26:27, 28.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Every advantage, of whatever kind, may become an occasion of mischief to us, through the depravity of our hearts and the temptations of Satan: and therefore commerce, which might be, and sometimes has been, subservient to the noblest purposes, too commonly proves a source of luxury, pride, ostentation, and impiety; and is connected with avarice, fraud, oppression, and cruelty. As those cities, which have successively tyrannised over the nations of the earth, have successively been made monuments of the divine vengeance; so have those likewise which have been the marts of nations. It behooves the inhabitants of the great commercial capital of Britain to be still for a short space, and to contemplate the fate of Tyre. Like that ancient centre of commerce, this city and nation are overwhelmed by the trade

Terrible judgments denounced against the whole land, 1-12. A remnant of Israel would escape and join with Gentiles in glorifying God, 13-15. His vengeance would overtake the rest, even the mightiest of them, 16-21. A day of visitation in mercy, and a glorious event to the church and to Israel, 22, 23.

BEHOLD, the LORD maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and turneth it upside down, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof.

2 And it shall be, as with the people, so with the priest; as with the servant, so with his master; as with the maid, so with her mistress; as with the buyer, so with the seller; as with the lender, so with the borrower; as with the taker of usury, so with the giver of usury to him.

3 The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled: for the LORD hath spoken this word.

4 The earth mourneth and fadeth away, the world languisheth and fadeth away, the haughty people of the earth do languish.

5 The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant.

6 Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, of the whole earth; claim the sovereignty of the ocean; and receive revenues from distant seas and rivers, not less abundant than the harvest of our fertile plains; and London is at least as "joyous a city," as ever Tyre was; though it does not boast of so great an antiquity. But Tyre is now laid waste, and there is no house, nor entering in; silence and solitude have erected their empire, where this busy merchant city stood; and her inhabitants are all either extinct, or removed to other lands! Yet when this prediction was delivered, probably, its wealthy inhabitants could not have believed it possible, that such a change should ensue.—This report may well cause our wealthy, but ungodly citizens, (of whom there are not a few,) to be sorely pained and alarmed: her merchants were, and ours are, "princes and the honourable of the earth." But they gloried and trusted in their prosperity, and abused it; and the Lord took his counsel against them on purpose "to stain the pride of all glory, and to bring into contempt all the honourable of the earth;" that they, who had forgotten him, should feel his superiority and sovereignty; that the vanity of all earthly prosperity might be manifested; and to show, how soon infamy must overwhelm all those who do not seek "the honour which cometh from God."—He is able to raise up enemies against us also, from the most obscure nations, and to bring them from the remotest corners of the earth; and at his commandment some savage conqueror may arise to execute his righteous purposes: can any distant country give rest to those, of whom God hath said, "there is no rest for them." (Notes, 48:20—22, v. 22, 57:20, 21.)—The accomplishment of the prophecies, through successive ages to the present day, evinces, that every promise and threatening in the sacred volume, will surely take place on those nations, or individuals, to which they belong.—It cannot be calculated how much iniquity is committed by such as are greedy of gain: nor can the manifold artifices be developed, by which crafty traffickers supplant, overreach, and cheat each other; and seduce the ignorant and unwary.—Numbers regard not what crimes they commit, or tempt others to commit, or what miseries they occasion; provided they do but get their hire, which is often more infamous than that of the vilest prostitute.—But, while men of this character are treasuring up wrath, with their accumulating wealth, and corrupting whole kingdoms by such traffic as tends to disseminate intemperance or murder; there are some even in our land, who conduct their commercial concerns with far other views, and on very different principles. By honourable gains they possess affluence; and they neither treasure it up in avarice, nor spend it in profligacy or luxury: but consecrate it to the Lord, and employ it to diffuse the knowledge of his truth to distant regions; to provide sufficient and suitable food and raiment for his indigent servants; and to relieve the wants of multitudes, of whom they know no more, than that they are human beings in distress. Now this is noble; and riches thus obtained and expended, are a privilege and a blessing. Thus should Christians conduct business, as the servants of God, and use riches as his stewards. As vital godliness shall abound, such characters will become more numerous; and then commerce will be rendered a blessing, not only to the cities where it is conducted, but to the human species at large.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIV. V. 1-12. Various opinions have prevailed concerning the events predicted in this chapter, which begins a new subject, continued to the end of the twenty-seventh chapter. Some think, that it is a general denunciation of vengeance from God on sinful nations, and on the whole earth; and, like many other prophecies, it is couched in such terms, as may apply to many similar events, and can scarcely have its full accomplishment, except in the consummation of all things. But it seems more immediately to contain a series of prophecy, relating to the nation of Israel, and to the church, which is yet fulfilling, but not accomplished. After having foretold the destruction of the foreign nations, enemies of Judah, the prophet declares the judgments impending on the people of God themselves, for their wickedness and apostasy; and the desolation that shall be brought on their whole country. Bp. Louth.—The desolation of the kingdom of Israel by the Assyrians, and that of Judah by the Chaldeans; and the ravages afterwards committed by Antiochus Epiphanes, may be adverted to; but the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the dispersion of the Jews into all nations, with those events connected with that awful dispensation, and resulting from it, seem principally intended; till at the close of the chapter, a transition appears to be made to other important events.—The same original word is rendered "the earth" and "the land;" and generally means the land of Israel. When the Chaldeans, and afterwards the Romans, took Jerusalem; then "the LORD emptied and wasted that land, and turned it upside down," that none of its inhabitants might continue in it; and in the latter dispensation, instead of sending them to some specified place, for a limited term of years, as before, he scattered them abroad over the face of the earth, and their dispersion continues to the present day. The distinction between priests and people was soon lost, along with their genealogies; and all ranks and orders of men were involved in indiscriminate ruin. Thus the land, being emptied and plundered, as it were, "mourneth and fadeth away," and is become at this day as barren, as it formerly was fruitful.—By "the world," may be meant, the whole of the Jewish economy; the Mosaic dispensation, and the civil establishment of Israel as a nation, which waxed old, languished, and expired, together with the destruction of all the haughty despisers of their lowly Messiah. For the land had long been polluted by the crimes; (Notes, Lev. 18:24—30, Num. 35:31—34,) especially by the profaneness and hypocrisy of the people, who not only transgressed the laws of God, but "made them of none effect by their traditions;" they not only changed his ordinances, but they expressly brake the national covenant, which had endured for ages, by rejecting the promised Messiah, and through whom it had been ratified; and thus they were deprived of all their covenantal privileges. Then, the curse of God devoured and desolated the land; his wrath, like fire, burned up the inhabitants, till very few in comparison were left of that devoted nation. Thou 15 Wherefore glorify ye the Lord in the fires, even the name of the Lord God of Israel in the isles of the sea.

16 ¶ From the uttermost part of the earth have we heard songs, even glory to the righteous. But I said, My leanness, my leanness, you unto me! the treacherous dealers have dealt treacherously; yea, the treacherous dealers have dealt very treacherously.

17 ¶ Fear, and the pit, and the snare are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth.

18 And it shall come to pass, that the who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for the windows from on high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake.

19 The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly.

20 The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall, and not rise again.

21 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth.

22 And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited.

23 Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously.

abused plenty and sensual mirth ceased; and the temple-music, and sacred psalmody, and solemn feasts, were put an end to; or rather were turned into lamentations, howlings, and bitterness of soul. The city, having become a scene of confusion, by the intestine discords of its inhabitants; and having experienced all the horrors of famine and pestilence in the extreme, was broken down by the Romans, and the Jews were excluded from all access to it. In vain did they then cry out for some cordial to support them under their overwhelming distress: "all joy was darkened, and the mirth of the land was gone. The city was left desolate, the gate was smitten with destruction." (Notes, Matt. 24:29-31. Mark 13:24-31. Luke 21:20-28.)

V. 13-15. The great distresses, brought upon Israel and Judah, drove the people away and dispersed them all over the neighbouring countries. They fled to Egypt, to Asia Minor, to the islands, and the coast of Greece. They were to be found in great numbers in most of the principal cities of those countries. Alexandria was in a great measure peopled by them. They had synagogues for their worship, in many places; and were greatly instrumental in propagating the knowledge of the true God among these heathen nations, and preparing them for the reception of Christianity. Bp. Lowth.—The word rendered "the sea," is sometimes translated, the west: because the Mediterranean sea was the western border of Canaan. (Notes, 49:9-13. Hos. 11:8-11.)—The chief accomplishment of this prophecy, however, seems to have been after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. At that season, there was a small company, like the gleanings of the vine or the olive, which had embraced Christianity: (Note, 17:4-8.) and wherever they were dispersed among the nations, and in the isles of the sea, they lifted up their voice in songs of praise, whilst they beheld the majesty of God displayed in accomplishing these predictions; and mingled thanksgivings with their fervent prayers: nay, they excited one another to glorify God, in the fiery trial of persecution, and though banished to the remotest regions. (Marg. Ref. a, b.) The destruction of Jerusalem was exceedingly conducive to the establishment of the Christian church; and in this respect was the subject of joy and praise to the primitive Christians, especially to the Gentile churches.

V. 16. This verse seems to intimate the calling of the Gentiles, as the consequence of the rejection of the Jews. While the converts to Christianity, from the uttermost parts of the earth, were ascribing glory to the righteous Lord: the prophet, personating the Jewish nation, lamented his leanness; that is, the small number of believers found in Israel, the corrupted state of the church, and the miseries which had come upon the nation. The Jews continued to be most cruelly treated by their treacherous and violent enemies; but, their own hypocrisy, and enormous wickedness; their avarice and deceit; and their most virulent persecutions of those who embraced the gospel, seem to be more especially the subject of the prophetic lamentation. As, however, the words rendered "the uttermost part of the earth," or "the wing of the earth," (marg.) are supposed to mean the extremities of the land of Judah, it is by some interpreted in a more restricted sense. "The prophet speaks in the person of the inhabitants of the land still remaining there; who should be pursued by divine vengeance, and suffer repeated distresses from the inroads and depredations of their powerful enemies. . . 6:13." Bp. Lowth. Yet there is little proof that the Jews, dispersed in the land after the taking of Jerusalem, in any sense used songs giving "glory to the righteous." "From the uttermost part of the earth," means the same as "from the isles of the sea," in the foregoing verses. Lowth.

V. 17-20. In taking wild beasts, the hunters used to terrify them, that in their fright they might run into their pits, or be taken in their snares. Thus terror would drive the Jews into those very places, in which destruction was prepared for them, and every thing would concur in preventing their escape. (Note, Am. 5:18-20.) For the floodgates of divine vengeance being opened from above, the foundations of the world would shake, as if the end of the world were come.—God's wrath and vengeance should be over and under them, so that they should not any more escape than at Noah's flood. (Notes, Gen. 7:10-12, 20-23. 19:24, 25.) There were many great earthquakes about the time of the siege of Jerusalem: and Christ predicted the destruction of that city in terms very similar, and which may also be interpreted of the consummation of all things. (Notes, Matt. 24:29-41. Rev. 20:11-15.) Indeed the transgression of that land, especially in "crucifying the Lord of glory," was heavy upon it; and thus it fell and has never risen again to this day, as it did in comparatively a very short time after the Babylonish captivity. "The three Hebrew words, Pachad, Pachath, and Pach . . . have an affinity of sound with each other, which cannot be translated into another language." Lowth. The form of expression seems to have been proverbial. (Jer. 48:43, 44.)

V. 21, 22. Here a transition appears to be made, from the ruin of the Jewish nation for opposing the gospel, to that of the antichristian powers, which will introduce a general prevalence of true religion: and such transitions are common in the prophets. But the subversion of the idolatrous Roman empire, (after it had executed God's judgments on Jerusalem,) to make way for the firmer establishment of Christianity in the primitive ages, may also be intended, as a shadow of the other still more decisive events. However that may be, all the host of the high ones and the kings of the earth, who oppose the gospel, will be gathered as prisoners into a dungeon, deprived of power to do further mischief; and at last produced to take their trial and receive their sentence. (Notes, Josh. 10:16-18, 24-27.) "Some commentators understand, by 'the host of the high ones which are on high,' the devil and his angels, who are described by St. Paul by the names of principalities and powers, dwelling in high or heavenly places, and having power in the air, or lower region of the world; (Eph. 2:2. 6:12.) and then by 'the kings of the earth,' must be meant those earthly princes, who are influenced by them, and are their instruments in abetting idolatry, or persecuting God's truth. . . The verse alludes to the custom of kings who used to confine the chief commanders of their enemies, whom they took prisoners, and reserve them in some extraordinary day of triumph, and then bring them out to public punishment. . . I cannot find any explanation of this verse so agreeable to the natural sense of the words, as that of a late learned writer upon the Revelation, 19:6, who explains it of the kings of the earth, who made war with Christ and his saints, at Armageddon, Rev. 16:16. 19: 19. and being there discomfited, lay languishing under the sentence of condemnation, till after the battle of Gog and Magog, 20:8-10. when they were, together with Satan their leader, punished with everlasting destruction." Lowth. (Notes, Eze. 38:39. Dan. 11:40-45. Rev. 16:12-16. v. 16. 19:11-21. 20:7-10.) Events, yet in futurity, are doubtless predicted: but, probably, no man will distinctly know what events, till the prophecy has received its accomplishment. Nothing is spoken expressly concerning the restoration of Israel; yet it seems implied.

V. 23. When this victory has been won, the Millennium will be introduced: the Lord will set up his kingdom in its fullest glory on earth; and its splendour shall eclipse and

CHAPTER XXV.

Theophorus raises God, for abating his haughty foes, and protecting his afflicted people, 1-6. He predicts the salvation of Christ, the success of the gospel, and the triumph of the church over all opposers, 6-12.

O LORD, thou art my God; I will exalt thee, I will praise thy name: for thou hast done wonderful things; thy counsels of old are faithfulness and truth.

2 For thou hast made of a city a heap; of a defenced city a ruin: a palace of strangers to be no city; it shall never be built.

3 Therefore shall the strong people glorify thee, the city of the terrible nations shall fear thee.

4 For thou hast been a Strength to the poor, a Strength to the needy in his distress, a Refuge from the storm, a Shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall.

put to shame, not only the borrowed light of the moon, but the light of the sun also; that is, all the majesty of the mightiest kingdoms, as well as that of the subordinate ones. He will then reign, as "LORD of hosts" upon his mercy-seat, and among his ancient people, or the elders or ministers of his church, in unrivalled and unclouded glory and majesty. (Notes, 60:15-22. Rev. 19:1-8. 20:4-6. 21:22-27. 22:1-5.) The millennium seems especially predicted, but in language which also suits the heavenly state.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. They, whose treasures and felicity are laid up on earth, will soon be reduced to indigence and misery; for the Lord will make the whole of it "waste and empty;" nay, he will "turn it upside down, and shake all its inhabitants out of it." Even in great national convulsions, the superior orders are often first exposed to peril, alarm, and ruin: and in the great day of God, the ungodly priest, or prince, or wealthy man, will have more to answer for, and will receive deeper condemnation, than his inferiors: and this will be his only distinction. But the Lord has spoken the word, and the earth, which has been defiled by man's sin, must wax old and vanish away; and all the proud and haughty inhabitants of it must perish. All the miseries, which in every age have been experienced, are the effect of that curse, which is incurred by transgressing the law of God, and violating his righteous covenants. His wrath, like fire, consumes all before it: it will burn up the earth; (Notes, 2 Pet. 3:5-13.) and it forms a hell for the everlasting punishment of the wicked. There all mirth will cease; no joy can enter; even hope expires at the portal: all is destruction and despair, "weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth" for ever. Let then the merry-hearted, who now drink wine with festive songs, and add every incentive to sensual indulgence, pause, and reflect, and ask themselves, what they will do to eternity, when all such expedients fail. Even in this world an hour may come, in which "strong drink may be bitter to them that drink it," and every enjoyment become irksome; and indeed such hours often occur in almost every man's experience: but at length carnal mirth must be turned into mourning and anguish of spirit; and how much better is it now to mourn with penitent sorrow, which makes way for holy hope and endless joy, than to spend eternity in hopeless lamentations!—No nation has ever been visited as the Jews were, after they had broken their covenant, and "crucified the Lord of glory." Thus, in this world communities, and hereafter individuals, will be punished with a severity proportioned, not only to the crimes which they have perpetrated, but to the advantages which they have abused: and those who change the truths and ordinances of God, for their own conjectures and inventions, or human traditions, will be condemned as the most heinous of those, who have "broken his everlasting covenant," or refuse to accede to it.

V. 13-23. There has in every age been a remnant, which have escaped the contagion of impiety and wickedness, and have been preserved from general destruction; but alas! they have hitherto been only as a gleaming. They, however, can sing the praises of God and glorify his name, in the hottest fires of persecution, and in all places whither they can be driven. They see and adore his majesty, in those dispensations which overwhelm the wicked; and they should excite each other to abound more and more in his pleasant service.—Let us bless God, that "we have heard songs," ascribing glory "to the LORD our Righteousness," in this isle of the seas, this uttermost part of the earth: but we have also reason humbly to lament, that the number of true Christians among us is so small; and that our own graces and holy duties are so feeble and defective. The difference, however, between the weakest believer and every unbeliever is essential: the former shall surely be preserved, the latter cannot possibly escape "the perdition of ungodly men," when the windows of heaven shall be opened to pour down vengeance, and the foundations of the earth shall shake, and it shall sink under the weight of man's transgressions, to rise no more.—Happy then are they, who take warning by the sentences denounced against others, or executed on them! for as surely as the predictions against the unbelieving Jews took effect, and were exactly fulfilled; so will every impenitent sinner sink under the weight of his transgression, and rise no more. But the mystery of Providence is not yet finished: many kings with their armies must fall before the power of the divine Redeemer: the ruin of his enemies must make way for the universal establishment of his kingdom. Then the sun of Righteousness will appear in his meridian glory; all other real or pretended luminaries will be eclipsed and confounded, and "all kings shall bow down before him, all nations shall do him service." (Notes, Ps. 72:17-19. 86:9, 10. Rev. 11:15-18.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XXV. V. 1. The prophet here praises God, not so much for mercies personal or national, already received, but in the prospect of the accomplishment of the prophecies, which he had just delivered: for even the vengeance to be executed first on the Jews, and then on other opposers of true religion, was intended for the benefit of the church, and its final complete triumph: to which every believer is more nearly related, than to any man, or body of men after the flesh.—Rejoicing in JEHOVAH, as his Portion, as well as his Governor, and penetrating into the remotest futurity; the holy prophet conceived the most exalted ideas of the divine perfections, and determined to extol them in the loftiest strains of praise. His wonderful works to Israel in former times, and those far more glorious works which Isaiah viewed as already performed, accorded to the divine counsels of old, which had been revealed in prophecies and promises, and were essentially "faithfulness and truth." (Notes, 11:11-16. 12:1)—Thou hast done wonderful things; thy ancient faithful counsel. So let it be. Sept.

V. 2. Egypt had been desolated in order to Israel's deliverance; the cities of Canaan had been destroyed, that the Israelites might possess their inheritance; Babylon and Tyre, those defended cities, full of palaces, inhabited by strangers to God and his worship, would be made a desolation, and never be rebuilt; and even Jerusalem would cease to be the holy city, and become "a palace of strangers," after the Jews had rejected Christ, and soon after it would be made a "ruinous heap." Rome also is doomed to be destroyed, to make way for the universal success of Christianity. (Notes, 13:18-22. 14:21-27. Rev. 18:1.) These, and other similar events, especially relating to the ruin of all Antichristian opposers of the gospel, in the latter days, seem to have been present to the prophet's mind, when he wrote these words.—By "strangers," are meant, heathens, "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel," as St. Paul calls them, and enemies to it. Louth.

V. 3-5. These wonderful displays of divine power and justice, will induce many potent, or fierce and terrible nations, to stand in awe of God, and render glory to him. The accomplishment of some of the prophecies against Babylon had this effect on the Persian kings: (Ezra 1:6-7) and this was a shadow of the future conversion of the nations unto Christ. It will then appear most evident, that the Lord has, from age to age, protected his Church of humble, poor, and despised believers, in all their distresses, and against every persecutor. When the fury of their enemies menaced their destruction, as the violent hailstorm drives against the wall; his power preserved them, as in a strong tower, both safe and undismayed, till the tumult of their foes was silenced in their destruction. And when temptations resembled the sultry heat of the sun, in the sandy desert; he interposed his protection, as "the shadow of a cloud," till the heat was abated: and the flourishing prosperity of their most terrible assailants was at length brought low. * The verse... more fully expressed would run thus: "As a thick cloud interposing tempers the heat of the sun on the burnt soil; so shall thou, by the interposition of thy power, bring low and abate the tumult of the proud, and the triumph of the formidable." Bp. Louth. (Notes, 4:5, 6. 26:1-6, 20, 21, 32:1, 2, 16-20. Ez. 3:10-16. Matt. 7:24-27. Rev. 19:1-6.)

V. 6-8. These verses evidently contain a prophecy of the "sufferings of Christ, and the glory which should follow," (Note, 1 Pet. 1:10-12.) from the coming of Christ to the end of the world. The Lord of hosts would make a feast in "the mountain of the Lord's house," (2-2-5) on mount Zion, the type of the true church. (Notes, Heb. 12:18-21. Rev. 14:1-5.) This feast would be provided for all people, or peoples, (plur.) Gentiles as well as Jews, and would consist of the choicest viands, in great variety and plenty, and of the richest wines well refined by continuing long upon the lees. (Marg. Ref. Note, Jer. 48:11.) Under these emblems all spiritual blessings, as conferred through his atonement and mediation, are shadowed forth. (Notes, Prov. 9:1-6. Matt. 22:1-14. P. O. 1-15. Note, Luke 14:15-24.)—At Jerusalem, the partition-wall between Jews and Gentiles was broken down by the crucifixion of Christ; and thence the gospel was diffused through the nations of the earth. Thus the ignorance, delusion, and idolatry, which, like a veil, or covering, were spread over all the nations, would be removed, torn, and at length destroyed. (Notes, 29:9-12. 2 Cor. 3:7-18.) This was begun by the conversion of the Gentiles in the days of the apostles, and has been in some degree carried on, by the propagation of the gospel dispelling heathen darkness, to this present day; and at length "the knowledge of the glory of God shall cover the earth, as the waters cover the sea." This will continue almost to the day of judgment; when, by the glorious resurrection of all believers to eternal life, and the final confinement of sin and misery to hell, "death will be swallowed up in victory." (Notes, 1 Cor. 15:50-54. Rev. 20:11-15, v. 14.) Then all tears will be wiped away, by the Lord himself, from the faces of all his people: every reproach will be removed from their character; an end will be put to all correction and rebuke; and from the whole earth they shall be gathered into his kingdom. (Notes, 35:8-10, 54:15-17. Rev. 7:13-17, 21:1-4.) Israel is not here mentioned; but the reproach, under which that people has so long lain, and which will be turned into honour, by their conversion and restoration, is supposed by some to be specially intended.

V. 9. When Immanuel appeared on earth, those who waited for him, welcomed him as their God and Saviour: and as others became acquainted with him, they were ready, with Thomas, to confess to him, "My Lord, and my God." (Note, John 20:24-29, v. 28.) and to rejoice in his salvation. The church yet waits for him to come and set up his kingdom, and to turn all her mourning into joy; being prepared to welcome that event with triumphant praise, "honouring him, even as the Father that sent him." Every believer expects his final appearance, as "the great God and our Saviour." (Notes, Tit. 2:11-14.) And when he shall come, and "all the nations of the earth shall wait because of him," (Note, Rev. 1:7.) these words will express the very heart of every one of his redeemed people; as about to receive the completion of his salvation, and the fruition in body and soul of his expected felicity.—"In that day shall they say: Behold, this is our God; we have trusted in him, and he hath saved us. This is JEHOVAH; we have trusted in him: we will rejoice and triumph in his salvation." Bp. Louth.

V. 10-12. (Notes, 11:11-16. Num. 22:4, 24:16, 17. Deut. 23:3-6. Jer. 9:25, 26. Zeph. 2:8-10.) Every enemy of the church, like Moab, shall be trodden down, as when the sheaves have been thrashed the straw is trodden down upon the dunghill: a most energetic similitude to show the contempt which will be poured upon them. (Marg. Ref. c.) The Lord shall also extend his powerful hands, on every side, to crush his obstinate foes; as the swimmer stretches forth his hands to their utmost extent, to support himself on the water. Thus he will abase their pride, and spoil them of their prosperity; and reduce to the dust all their strong-holds, and their most determined opposition. "God shall bring down their pride, with the sudden grip of his hands. Bp. Louth. This seems the more accurate translation: the strong and powerful stroke of the hands and arms, used in swimming, is supposed, by some, to be alluded to. (Notes, 13:19-22. 26:5, 6. 32:16-20.)—Perhaps an allusion to Christ, as lifted up on the cross, with his hands extended and nailed to it, might be intended, under the figure of the Lord's stretching forth his hands in the midst of his enemies. Then and there he spoiled and triumphed over the powers of darkness, and ensured the victory over every enemy for himself and his church. (Note, Col. 2:13-15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

True faith simply credits "the sure testimonies of God," as "a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance," and relies on his immutable truth to perform his promises; and thus the believer anticipates, and praises the Lord for future blessings, as if already in possession. This faith influences every possessor, to holy obedience and spiritual worship: and if we can on this ground be confident that the Lord is our God and Portion for ever; this will animate us with the desire of exalting and praising him among our fellow-Christians, and fellow sinners, here on earth.—All his wonderful works, of creation, providence, and redemption, accord to his eternal counsels and decrees. He has already proved many of these counsels, which he revealed to his servants the prophets, to be "faithfulness and truth;" and in due time all the rest will be evidently accomplished.—Frequently he reduced powerful cities and splendid palaces into ruinous heaps, never to be rebuilt: because of the oppression of his people Israel. But since that nation crucified their Messiah, these interpositions in their favour have ceased; for ages they have been oppressed with apparent impunity; Jerusalem itself has been made a heap; and the Lord's care has been transferred from them to the Christian church: yet at the predicted time, he will again make of "the defended city a ruin;" that "the strong people may glorify him," and reverence his holy name.—The Lord ever was, and ever will be, the Refuge of poor and distressed believers; and, having provided them a shelter from the storm of his righteous judgments, and taught them to flee to it, all the powers of earth and hell may in vain unite their force and fury: their tumult shall be silenced, their fury disappointed, and their pride and terrible power shall be brought low; whilst the poor servants of God shall enjoy inward consolation in the midst of trouble, and at length a triumphant deliverance.—When the Father "loved us, and gave his Son to be a propitiation for our sins," he prepared a feast for our souls: the believer finds that "the flesh of Christ is meat indeed, and his blood drink indeed;" (Notes, John 6:47-58. P. O. 47-59.) and deriving from him pardon, peace, and a joyful hope, his "soul is satisfied as with marrow and fatness," and exhilarated as with the richest wines. (Notes, Ps. 63:5-8.) Yet this is only an antepast of that eternal feast which is intended for him; and there is no sinner of any nation, who should not be invited to this feast, and assured of a hearty welcome, if he come for it in the appointed way.—Blessed be God, the gospel has already rent in many places the thick covering which was spread over the nations, and our land is favoured with a glorious light: may all the inhabitants of it "walk in the light, and be the children of light!" and may the Lord destroy entirely the remains of this veil from every part of the Christian church, from the hearts of unbelieving Jews, and from the Mohammedan and Pagan nations! This will in due time be effected, and the Sun of Righteousness shall illuminate every corner of the earth.—At length the Lord will come to judgment, the dead shall be raised, the books shall be opened, believers shall be welcomed, as the children of God, to their eternal inheritance, "death will be swallowed up in victory," "God shall wipe away all their tears" and rebukes, and they shall "shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." In the day when they shall arise from the grave, and see their divine Redeemer come to perfect their felicity; with what energy of gratitude, love, joy, and triumphant exultation will they exclaim, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he hath saved us: this is JEHOVAH, we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation!"—But the same almighty arm, which is engaged to save his Church, is stretched forth to destroy all despisers. He will then tread them under foot, with the utmost disdain and abhorrence. Those hands, which once were extended on the cross, to make way for our salvation, will be extended to destroy all impenitent sinners. Then his victory over the devil, and all his proud and potent servants, will be completed; every strong hold will be levelled; and the last enemy put under the Redeemer's feet. "Therefore, my beloved

CHAPTER XXVI.

A song of praise, with animating exhortations to trust in God, who gives his people peace, and victory over their most heinous foes, 1-48. The conduct of the righteous and the wicked, when under divine judgments, 7-11. Recollections of past mercies to Israel, for an encouragement under present trials, 12-18. A call to the people of God, to wait in faith and hope for his salvation, and for the punishment of the wicked, 18-21.

IN that day shall ¹this song be sung ²in the land of Judah; ³We have a strong city; ⁴salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks.

⁵Open ye the gates, that the ⁶righteous nation which keepeth the ⁷truth may enter in.

⁸Thou wilt keep ⁹him in perfect peace ¹⁰whose mind is ¹¹anxious on thee: ¹²because he trusteth in thee.

¹³Trust ye in the Lord for ever: for in the Lord JEHOVAH is everlasting Strength:

¹⁴For he bringeth down them that dwell on high; ¹⁵the lofty city, he layeth it low; he layeth it low, ¹⁶even to the ground; he bringeth it ¹⁷even to the dust.

¹⁸The foot shall tread it down, ¹⁹and the feet of the poor, ²⁰and the steps of the needy.

²¹The way of the just is uprightness; thou, ²²most upright, dost weigh the path of the just.

²⁶With my soul have I desired thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me will I seek thee early: ²⁷for when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness.

brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord: forasmuch, as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord." (Notes, 1 Cor. 15: 54-58.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVI. V. 1. The prophet seems still to keep in view the whole series of predicted events, which has been considered. The preservation of Jerusalem from the Assyrians, the return of the Jews from Babylon, and their deliverance from the persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes, if at all meant, could only be regarded as types, or earnest, of more spiritual and glorious events. For the day here especially intended, seems to be that future season, when the New Testament-Babylon shall be laid low and levelled with the ground. (25: 12.) Then "this song shall be sung in the land of Judah," in the church of God: "We have a strong city," the "Jerusalem from above," which is far stronger than Babylon or Rome. (Notes, 24: 23, 60: 15-22, v. 18. Zech. 2: 1-5, v. 5. Gal. 4: 21-31, v. 26. Heb. 12: 22-25.) For "salvation hath God appointed for walls and bulwarks," the power, truth, and love of God, in Jesus Christ, render his church an impregnable fortress. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 5: 6, 12: 4-6, 25: 9-12.) It is highly probable, likewise, that this prophecy will be literally accomplished, in the conversion of Israel, and their re-establishment in the promised land.

V. 2. The decisive victory, obtained over antichristian powers, will prepare the way for the immense enlargement of the church. Those who embrace and hold fast the truth as it is in Jesus Christ, become "a righteous nation," incorporated under his government, united among themselves, obedient to his laws, and safe under his protection. (Notes, 1: 25-27, 60: 10-14, Ps. 101: 5, 1 Pet. 2: 9, 10.) Every new convert is enrolled as a citizen of this strong city: and ministers and Christians should unite by every effort to open the gates; that new converts from every part of the earth may be admitted to dwell in it and share its franchises.—The calling of the Gentiles, in the primitive times, was a partial accomplishment of this prediction: but it will be more fully performed, when Judah and Israel shall be converted to the Saviour, and "the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in." (Notes, Luke 21: 20-24, v. 24. Rom. 11: 16-32.)

V. 3, 4. "Thou preservest continued peace to the mind that leaneth on thee, &c." "This is to be taken for a man, who with his whole thought and soul confidently leans on God, through Jesus Christ, as it is explained at the end of the verse."—The man, of whom this may be said, stays and rests his hope on the wisdom, power, truth, and mercy of God, in all his undertakings, difficulties, and perils; and refers his concerns to him, expecting direction, assistance, success, and comfort from him. And thus the Lord keeps him in perfect peace, or "in peace, peace," in every kind of peace, peace of conscience, tranquillity, resignation, confidence and cheerful expectation, proportioned to the degree in which the heart is thus stayed on God. Therefore an exhortation is annexed: "Trust in the Lord for ever," or perpetually and for eternity: for in JAH JEHOVAH, the self-existent and unchangeable God, "is everlasting Strength;" He is "the Rock of ages," or of eternity. (Notes, Deut. 32: 3-4, 2 Sam. 22: 3, Ps. 62: 1-8, 10: 68, 112: 7, John 14: 17, 28, 1 Pet. 1: 17-21.)—This seems addressed to the church, to encourage her to wait patiently under her persecutions, in full expectation of the glorious times predicted; and thus to every true believer as a part of the church.

V. 5, 6. As the fall of Babylon was connected with the restoration of the Jews; so the total ruin of all antichristian powers, and of Rome, will make way for the established peace and prosperity of the church, and the restoration of Israel. This the Lord will speedily accomplish: the poor and needy will soon trample on the ruins of the strong-holds of every Antichrist: and the most despised instruments, the witnesses who prophesy in sackcloth, and their despised followers, shall be able to execute the Lord's purposes. (Notes, 25: 10-12, Ez. 39: 21-29, Dan. 12: 1, Zech. 10: 5-12, 1 Cor. 1: 26-31, Rev. 11: 3-4.)

V. 7. Whilst the ungodly "know not at what they stumble," the righteous Lord makes the way of his upright servants plain and level: he removes obstructions and stumblingblocks; he proportions their strength to their trials; he watches over their steps, and guides them in the way of uprightness. (Marg. Ref.) "Thou wilt make equal the path of the righteous." (Notes, 1 Sam. 2: 3, Ps. 1: 4-6, 25: 8-10, 37: 23, 24, Prov. 4: 18, 19, 26.)

V. 8, 9. The prophet here declares how the servants of God behaved under their difficulties. They waited the performance of his promises, in the way of his commandments, or while enduring his chastisements. Their chief desire was to know and glorify his name, and to see him glorified, to keep his perfections and wonderful works in remembrance, and to act as in his immediate presence. Each of them could say before God, that, in their retirements, and in the darkest seasons of adversity, they had sought him and his favour, with their inmost souls, and as their great concern: and they had witnessed or expected the desolating judgments, which had wasted, or would waste the nations, in hope that the inhabitants would learn righteousness by means of them. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 63: 6, Cant. 3: 1-5, Matt. 6: 33, 34.) "Even in the night-season, when others sleep, hath my soul been taken up with thee." Bp. Hall. "I will seek thee at the dawn of day."—"With my soul have I desired thee in the night; yea with my inmost spirit in the morn have I sought thee." Bp. Louth. (Note, 8: 20.)

V. 10, 11. Impenitent sinners "despise the riches of the Lord's goodness and long-suffering;" (Note, Rom. 2: 4-6.) and prosperity renders them less disposed than before, to receive the instructions of righteousness: so that in Israel, "the land of uprightness," where the means of grace were afforded, and good examples set, men generally continued unjust and profane, and shut their eyes to all the discoveries of the glorious power and holiness of God! (Note, 5: 1-7, 9: 13-17, Mic. 6: 9.) Even his hand, when lifted up to inflict gentle punishments, or to threaten more terrible vengeance, was wilfully disregarded, and his judgments were ascribed to other causes. But the Lord would constrain them to see his hand, and be ashamed of their envy, and enmity to his people, by causing the fire prepared against his enemies to devour them: or, "They shall see with shame the zeal of thy people: yea, the fire shall burn up thy adversaries," or "thy zeal for thy people." Bp. Louth. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.) This may be considered as the language of believers, acknowledging the justice of God, in giving up the Jews into the hands of the Chaldeans. It accords also to the conduct of that nation, previous to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans: and it will be verified in a still more stupendous manner, in those great events which seem to be more immediately predicted. (Notes, 1: 1-6.)

V. 12-18. The church, or Israel, here addresses the Lord. Whatever desolations he brought on hypocritical nations, he would certainly "ordain peace" for his true people: he had wrought "all their works in them;" they were of that kind which his grace produces: (Note, John 3: 19-21.) or "for them," he had often formerly made them to triumph over their enemies, and rendered their endeavours successful. (Marg. Ref. t.) They had indeed often been subjected to other lords, who not only enslaved their bodies, but usurped authority over their consciences, and harassed them with persecutions. (Notes, 51:17—23.) but now by the grace of God, they were determined to make mention, as his worshippers and servants, of him alone; to renounce all idols, superstitions, and iniquities; and to expect from him only complete deliverance from all oppressors. (Note, Hos. 14:1—3, v. 3.) 'It is by thee only that we have been delivered out of their hands; and therefore upon thee alone will we call as our God and Saviour.' Louth. We may suppose this intended as the language of the church, in that crisis when the New Testament-Babylon shall be destroyed, and the complete victory over all remaining antichristian powers confidently expected. (Rev. 18:18.) Their chief seducers and oppressing tyrants were now dead, and they would no more arise to usurp authority over them, for the Lord had visited and destroyed them with infamy. (Notes, 19. Dan. 12:3, 3. Rev. 20:1—6.) The righteous nation, before mentioned, (2) was indeed greatly increased, and God was glorified; and, instead of being confined to Judea, it was extended to all the ends of the earth. This was done in answer to the prayers of his people in former times: when troubled by their persecutors and chastened for their sins, they waited on him, and poured out fervent supplications before him for deliverance. For a long time the church had been like a travelling woman, who endures all the pangs and anguish of child-birth, without obtaining the expected deliverance. Thus, under long delays, the pious remnant had been in great distress, and waited, with wailing prayers and anxious expectation, for the predicted deliverance: till they were ready to conclude, that those glorious times would never arrive; that they had misunderstood the prophecies; and had conceived false hopes, which would produce nothing but painful exertions and distressing disappointments. For they had not been able to effect any important deliverances from their enemies, neither had the inhabitants of the world fallen, either into willing subjection to Christ, or as crushed by his power. The dispersion of Israel may be meant, by the clause, "Thou hast removed it to the ends of the earth," (15) but several things in the concluding verses of the chapter seem wholly inapplicable to them, in their unconverted state.

They are deceased, &c. (14) "They are deceased tyrants, they shall not rise." By. Louth. (רָמָה). Notes, 19. Prov. 2:18.

V. 19. (Notes, Ez. 37:1—14.) The conversion of the Jews: the spiritual resurrection elsewhere predicted; (Rev. 20:4.) and the flourishing of the church, which had seemed dead, through the corruptions of popery, the prevalence of infidelity and various kinds of antichristianity, seem here especially foretold. We may consider Christ himself as the Speaker, and addressing the church; his resurrection from the dead was the earnest of all the future deliverances which were predicted; and they are the continuations of that power which was then exerted. (Note, Eph. 1:15—23.) Or the church may be considered as addressing God. Her cause is also: those who have been put to death for his sake, and for righteousness' sake, are "his dead men," and shall live: he will recover her, as a dead body laid in the grave is miraculously raised to life again, by fully restoring her prosperity. (Notes, Hos. 6:1—3, 13:14, 14:4—8.) For the power of his grace, (like the dew, or rain, that causes the herbs which seem dead to revive,) would be effectual to raise her from the lowest state of depression. (Note, 66:10—14, v. 14.)—'The Hebrew runs thus, "My dead body . . . shall arise." The noun is in the singular number, and the verb in the plural, for the singular is taken distributively for every dead body. . . (Ps. 127.) . . . The two sentences "Thy dead men shall live," and "My dead bodies shall arise," are equivalent; they are called the church's dead, as members of that mystical body, and God's or Christ's dead, . . . from the interest he hath in them, and because he hath promised to raise them up at the last day. (John 6:39.)' Louth.—In this figurative resurrection the deceased saints arise, but not the deceased persecutors. (14. Notes, Rev. 11:7—12, 20:4—6.)—The last clause may be rendered, "the land of tyrants shalt thou cause to fall," or, "shall she cause to fall;" that is, the church shall prevail against all oppressors, and cast them down.—The original word is often translated giants. (Note, 12—18, v. 14.) "But the earth shall cast forth, as an abortion, the deceased tyrants." The deliverance of the people of God from a state of the lowest depression is explained by images plainly taken from the resurrection of the dead. . . This deliverance is expressed with a manifest opposition to what is here said above (14) of the great lords and tyrants under whom they had groaned. "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased tyrants, they shall not rise;" that they should be destroyed utterly, and should never be restored to their former power and glory. It appears from hence, that the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead was at that time a popular and common doctrine: for an image which is assumed, to express or represent any thing, in the way of allegory or metaphor, whether poetical or prophetic, must be an image commonly known and understood; otherwise it will not answer the purpose for which it is assumed." By. Louth.

V. 20, 21. The Lord, by his prophet, here exhorts his people, through successive ages, when under persecutions and oppressions, to wait with cheerful expectation for these glorious events. Let them retire from the world, and, by faith and prayer, take refuge in him, and patiently wait the event. Thus, as Noah in the ark, as the Israelites in Egypt eating the passover, while the blood of the sacrifice was sprinkled on the lintel and door-posts (Note, Ez. 12:22, 23.) or as one sheltered in a secret chamber, they would be safe and uninterrupted amid the heaviest storms; and in a very little time, the vindictive wrath of their enemies, and the corrections of their Father, would terminate. For the Lord was about to remove from his mercy-seat, (his place in Israel,) to the tribunal of justice, in order to pass sentence, and inflict punishment, on the wicked; (Note, Hos. 5:15.) but especially upon the murderers of his people: and then the immense quantities of blood, which had been shed in wars, persecutions, and oppressions, would be disclosed in the open view of the world, and all the murderers without exception receive condign punishment. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11. The citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, whose "names are written in the book of life," are "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation." The immutable promise and oath of the Lord, securing the everlasting covenant, and all his infinite perfections engaged for its accomplishment, are the impregnable walls and bulwarks of this strong city, which will still stand secure, when the earth and all its works shall be burnt up. (Notes, Rev. 21:1.) He himself has given orders, that the gates of this city should be "open to every one that keepeth the truth," to every one who, by repentance and faith, becomes one of that righteous and holy nation, which is governed by our incarnate Immanuel; and his ministers should take care that every hindrance to the establishment of the humble believer, may be removed, and that sinners may be encouraged to join themselves to the Lord.—Blessed indeed are they who trust in God! Proportioned to our holy confidence in him, shall be our unspeakable peace: and he deems himself bound in honour to answer the expectations of all, who renounce every other dependence, to rely on his faithful word. Let us then "acknowledge him in all our ways," rely on him in all our difficulties, and fear no enemies: for if "the LORD JEHOVAH, in whom is everlasting Strength," be for us, "who can be against us?" By him, the poor of his people shall set their feet upon the necks of their most insulting enemies: and, in prospect of that victory, should triumph in his praises during their sharpest conflicts. But he, to whom these privileges belong, walks in the even path of uprightness. Our righteous God abhors hypocrisy; and, as in perfect faithfulness, he directs the path of the just, so he weighs and detects that of the deceiver, and appoints him his portion with the unbelievers. (P. O. Dan. 5:18-31.)—Those who trust in the Lord, must also wait on him in his ordinances, expecting his promised blessings at the appointed time; and if his favour, and the discoveries of his glory, are desired as our felicity, they will solace us in solitude and affliction; nay, we shall then especially seek the Lord with earnestness, and with our whole heart. The believer knows in his own case, that corrections are a salutary means of producing a teachable disposition, and submission to the will of God: and this encourages his hope and prayer, that the miseries, which he witnesses on every side, may be sanctified to "the inhabitants of the world, that they may learn righteousness." Yet he cannot but observe, that neither prosperity nor adversity alone will produce this happy effect: for numbers, who hear and profess the gospel, and are conversant with the most honourable Christians, continue to do wickedly; nay, to envy the people, and hate the holiness of God. On such, alas! mercies and corrections are alike unavailing; and they close their eyes and hearts against conviction, till his wrath destroy them; and then they see, and are confounded on account of their wickedness and madness. Let us then most earnestly beg of God to sanctify all our trials and comforts, "to prepare our hearts unto himself," and to number us among his chosen people. (Notes, 63:15-19. 64:1 Chr. 29:10-19. Ps. 10:17, 18. v. 17.)

V. 12-21. If the Lord produce in us a penitent, teachable, believing, obedient disposition; he "will ordain peace for us," and cause all to work together for our final good. We all, indeed, have been under the dominion of other lords, and have willingly served them: but the true Christian relies on grace alone, renounces all his former masters, and purposes henceforth to serve the Lord and him only. And he will as surely be made victorious over every one of those evil propensities and habits, which once had dominion over him: and still harass, distress, and alarm him; as the church will triumph over every usurping tyrant, and at length triumphantly rejoice, that they are all extirpated, never more to revive,

3 ¶ The LORD do keep it, I will water it every moment: lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day.

4 ¶ Fury is not in me: who would set the briers and thorns against me in battle? I would go through them, I would burn them together.

5 Or let him take hold of my strength, that he may make peace with me, and he shall make peace with me.

6 He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root: Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit.

or give him any further disturbance. But, in this life the believer has much trouble from the remaining power of sin, and is often exposed to painful corrections; yet this puts vigour into his prayers, and keeps him a constant supplicant at the throne of grace. Sometimes, however, he is ready to conclude, that all his efforts are vain, and that no deliverance has been, or can be, effected. But let him persevere in watching, prayer, and steady resistance to temptation, though again and again foiled. The power of God will revive his drooping graces, and destroy his strongest enemies: soon death will terminate the conflict, the soul will then join the assembly of just-amen made perfect; the body shall at length be raised from the dust, no longer corruptible, subject to disease, or contaminated by sin; but spiritual, holy, and glorious, and bearing the image of "the second Adam, the Lord from heaven." (Notes, 1 Cor. 15:50-58. Phil. 3:20, 21.)—Thus the church also shall at length be victorious, in her long-continued conflict with successive generations of implacable foes; and they will all be overwhelmed with infamy, or sink into oblivion. The prayers of ancient believers have been answered, the church has been very greatly increased, and God has been glorified in enlarging her boundaries to the ends of the earth. Yet even they were sometimes apt to conclude, that their hopes and exertions and prayers were vain. At present the church continues in troubles, through the prevalence of impiety and iniquity: but numbers are pouring out their prayers, under divine rebukes, for more complete deliverance. Let us never fear, lest these travelling pains should produce nothing but wind and confusion, though "the kingdoms of the earth are" not yet "become the kingdoms of Christ." The hopes of the disciples of old seemed to be buried in the Redeemer's grave: but beyond expectation, he revived, and their hopes revived with him. The same power will perform every remaining promise and prophecy, till death be swallowed up in victory. The grace of our God can soon render this barren wilderness like the garden of Eden; his providence can readily remove every obstruction; and nothing can be impossible to him, whose voice shall at length be heard by all that are in the graves, and they shall come forth to everlasting life, or everlasting damnation. (Note, John 5:28, 29.) Let us then keep close to him, and separate from the world: let us give ourselves unto prayer, and seek our comfort in secret devotion: (Note, Matt. 6:6.) thus we shall be safe from indignant foes, and may cheerfully expect the blessings promised in the word of God. Thus, even the grave will form a chamber to hide us from the power of the enemy, until the indignation is overpast, and our full redemption come.—But let the ungodly tremble at these words: the Lord is at hand "to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity;" he will then detect every secret wickedness; and no heart can conceive the discoveries which shall be made, "when the earth shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain." Let then sinners flee from the wrath to come, whilst the Judge is upon the mercy-seat, dispensing pardons: speedily he will remove to his awful judgment-seat, from which he will denounce and execute deserved punishment upon all unbelievers; but especially on those who have shed the blood of his saints and martyrs, from enmity to his holy image and holy religion.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVII. V. 1. (Note, 26:20, 21.) ' This chapter treats of the same subject with the two former, and describes that happy state of the church, when Satan and his agents shall be subdued, the church shall be enlarged and purged from idolatry, and the Jews shall be restored; all which are circumstances attending those glorious days, which the prophets often foretell shall come to pass at or near the end of the world. Louth.—In the day, when God shall "come forth from his place, to punish the wicked," and especially the persecutors of his church: he will also inflict vengeance on leviathan. (Notes, Rev. 19:17-21. 20:1-3.) Persecuting tyrants, ambitious conquerors and oppressors, and idolatrous empires, are often represented in Scripture, under the emblem of destructive animals, especially leviathans and dragons; and preceding deliverances of the church by the destruction of her oppressors may be alluded to. (Notes, 51:9-11. Ps. 74:13-17. Jer. 51:34-37. Ez. 29:2-5.) Yet the punishment.

7 ¶ Hath 'he smitten him, 'as he smote those that smote him? or is he slain according to the slaughter of them that are slain by him?

8 In 'measure, when 'it shooteth forth, 'thou wilt debate with it: 'the stayeth 'his rough wind at the day of the east wind.

9 By 'this therefore shall 'the iniquity of Jacob be purged; and this 'is all the fruit to take away his sin; 'when he maketh all the stones of the altar as chalk-stones that are beaten in sunder, 'the groves and 'images shall not stand up.

10 Yet 'the defenced city shall be desolate, and the habitation forsaken, and left like a wilderness: 'there shall the calf feed, and there shall he lie down, and consume the branches thereof.

11 When 'the bows thereof are withered, they shall be broken off: 'the women come and set them on fire: 'for it is a people of no understanding: 'therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will show them no favour.

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, 'that the LORD shall 'beat off from the channel of the river unto the stream of Egypt, and 'eye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel.

13 And it shall come to pass in that day, 'that 'the great trumpet shall be blown, 'and they shall come which were ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and 'the outcasts in the land of Egypt, 'and shall worship the LORD in the holy mount at Jerusalem.

of Satan, rather than that of any of his agents, at the crisis before mentioned, seems more immediately predicted. From the repetition of the word "leviathan," it is probable, that more than one terrible animal was called by that name; (Notes, Job 41:1-11. Ps. 104:25, 26.) and the word (מִיָּם) rendered "dragon" is translated elsewhere "sea monster," (Lam. 4:3.)—Many people and nations are meant by "the sea," and Satan the old dragon gave his power to the beast which the apostle saw rise out of the sea. (Notes, Rev. 12:3-6, 7-12, v. 9, 13:1, 4, 17:15-18, v. 15.) This great enemy of God and his church is the most terrible and destructive of creatures. Immense subtlety, malignity, ambition, and power unite in him. He has long fatally deceived all the nations of the earth, except the remnant, "whose names are written in the book of life, of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." (Rev. 12:9. Notes, 13:8-10, v. 8, 13-17, v. 14.) so that he has dwelt among them and reigned over them as their god and prince: and his chief seat, as spoken of in these prophecies, has long been fixed in that great city, which, one way or other, has always affected to rule over the nations. (Rev. 17:18.)—He prophesies here of the destruction of Satan and his kingdom, under the name of leviathan.—God will however at length make the sword of his almighty vengeance, which is exceedingly sharp, and great, and strong, to reach unto him. Then the old serpent will be bound and cast into the bottomless pit, his power will cease, all his obstinate servants and adherents will be cut off, and the earth be overspread with truth and righteousness.

Piercing.] "Crossing like a bar." Marg. Probably the word means nimbly penetrating; as the other word crooked, means winding this or that way. (Job 5:13. Notes, Gen. 3:1. Ps. 125:4, 5. Prov. 2:15.)

2:3-6. (Notes, 5:1. Ps. 80:3-13. Jer. 2:20, 21. Matt. 21:39-39. John 15:1-8. When these events begin to take place, let believers "sing unto, or concerning, the church," "A vineyard of red wine;" that is, of the most valued vine. (Prov. 23:31.) The visible church will not then bear wild grapes, but excellent fruit in abundance. (Notes, 6:2-7.) The Lord will guard it night and day from harm, and "water it every moment," with the influences of his Spirit. He never was angry with his church, in the same way that he is with his enemies, and at that period his anger will be turned away from her. (Notes, 11:11-16, 12:1-3.) His severest judgments are not intended against the vines, but against thorns and briers; the hypocrites within, and the enemies around the visible church, who set themselves in battle against him. These are fuel for the fire of his vengeance, and he will go through and burn them up together, with the utmost ease. (Marg. Ref. n, n.) But if any one fears this destruction, let him, by faith and prayer, arrest, as it were, the uplifted arm of God; let him "take hold of his Strength" of Christ, "the Arm of the Lord," or, the gospel, "the power of God unto salvation;" let him seek forgiveness, reconciliation, and protection; let him thus engage the power of God on his side; and he shall not seek in vain. (Notes, Jer. 29:11-14. Ez. 36:37, 38. Zech. 12:9-14.)—But, whatever may become of individuals, the nation of "Israel" will certainly take root, and blossom, and bud, and cover the face of the world with fruit." Probably, the fall of the papal antichrist, forming a remarkable fulfilment of the prophecies, will be the means of the conversion of Israel; and this event will prepare the way for the universal promulgation of the gospel. Then all nations will be grafted into that olive-tree, of which Abraham, or Israel, was the root, and thus this prophecy will have its exact accomplishment. (Marg. Ref.)—These . . . words are a description of the flourishing state of the Jews after their conversion, which shall be as new "life from the dead," as St. Paul expresses it, Rom. 11:15, and shall occasion the fullness of the gentiles coming into the church." Louth. (Notes Rom. 11:11-36.)

—What event has yet occurred, which can be in the least thought a fulfilment of this prophecy, in its plain and full meaning?—Bishop Lowth forms these verses into a dialogue, between JEHOVAH and the church; in which he is followed by Mr. Faber; but no less than six alterations of the letters in the text, as it stands in our present Hebrew Bibles, are required by it. I am not competent to say, whether these are made on adequate authority or not; but they are not at all needless.

V. 7-11. The punishments inflicted on Israel, though dreadful, had not been, nor would be, like those with which their oppressors had been visited. Amalek has been utterly destroyed. The Egyptian, Assyrian, Babylonian, Macedonian, and Roman empires, which successively harassed and oppressed Israel, have been subverted, and the conquered people lost among the conquerors. But the Jews still continue a distinct and numerous nation; an unparalleled instance of a people surviving so many ages after their conquerors. (Notes, Num. 23:9. Deut. 32:26, 27. Jer. 30:10, 11.) They are evidently preserved as monuments of the truth of their own scriptures; as well as of the New Testament; and in order to the performance of the ancient prophecies concerning them. So that, after all the massacres which have been made of them, they have not been "slain according to the slaughter of them that slew them." When the Lord sent forth the afflicting stroke on Israel, he did it "in measure," and debated with them under their sufferings: when he caused the rough and chilling east wind to blow, he stayed or moderated it; that is, he would not suffer any national judgment to exterminate them. Nay, their calamities were intended for their reformation: these national punishments in some sense expiated their guilt as a collective body, and they would be made effectual to purge away the pollution of their sins. Thus when the Chaldeans took away the brass of their altar, and burnt the stones, with the temple and city, as it were, to lime; their groves and images were also destroyed, and their idolatry finally abolished. This was the effect of their calamities as graciously overruled for the good of survivors; and not the condition of their pardon, as some explain it.—The Lord, however, had determined that Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, should be desolated, and the land be left altogether uncultivated. (Notes, 6:11, 12. 7:17-25.) This dispensation would resemble the pruning of a vine; when the worthless branches are either devoured green by the cattle, or gathered up for burning after they are withered. (Notes, 6:13. Ez. 15: John 15:1-8.) The wicked Jews would, in immense numbers, be devoured by their enemies, and consumed by the fiery indignation of God. For, being wilfully destitute of understanding, (Notes, 6:9, 10. John 3:19-21.) and refusing to profit, either by the warnings, judgments, or mercies of God, they would be exposed to the utmost severity of his justice, without any compassion being shown them, on account of their relation to him, either as his creatures, or as his professed worshippers.—This has been far more awfully verified, in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and in its long continued consequences, than it was by the Babylonish captivity. (Notes, Gen. 49:10. Deut. 4:25-28. 28:49-67. 32:19, 20. Hos. 3:4, 5.)

Debate with it, &c. (8) "In just measure, when thou inflictest the stroke, wilt thou debate with her: with due deliberation, even in the rough tempests, in the day of the east wind." Bp. Lowth.

V. 12, 13. These verses predict the restoration of the Jews after the captivity; and under that typical event, the recovery of Israel from their present dispersions. At Cyrus's proclamation, they, "whose hearts the LORD stirred up," (Note, Ezra 1:4.) "from the channel of the river Euphrates, to the river of Egypt," (Note, Gen. 31:8-21) that is, from all the different places in which they were scattered were

V. 9—11. The pious king of Judah, and Isaiah with other prophets were very desirous of instructing the people: but they were so hardened in vice, and so early initiated into it, that there were scarcely any who would give them a hearing; except they could teach the infants, that were hanging upon their mother's breasts, or newly weaned from them. Or, the people were so intent upon their pleasures, that they must be torn from them to receive instruction, as the infant is from the breast. It was necessary in all cases, to use much repetition, to dwell long upon every topic, and to teach the people a little on one occasion, and a little on another, as they were able to bear it; because of their ignorance and unteachableness. But this disgusted many of them, who seem to have turned the instructions of the prophets into ridicule; and, having caught up some detached expressions, such as these here used, and which have a remarkable alliteration in the original; they contemptuously mimicked their language and manner, and entertained one another by taking them off.—Therefore the Lord determined to teach them by the Assyrians and Chaldeans, who might indeed stammer out insults and menaces in the Hebrew tongue, but would in other things speak a language which they could not understand: for he would use these strangers to scourge such as refused to hear his word. (Notes, Deut. 28:49—57. Jer. 5:15—18, v. 15. 1 Cor. 14:20—25.) ‘The scoffers mentioned below (14) are here introduced as uttering their sententious speeches; they treat God's method of dealing with them, and warning them by his prophets, with contempt and derision. What say they, doth he treat us as mere infants just weaned? doth he teach us as little children, perpetually inculcating the same elementary lessons, the mere rudiments of knowledge; precept after precept, line after line, here and there, by little and little? imitating at the same time, and ridiculing (10) the concise prophetic manner. God . . . retorts upon them with great severity their own contemptuous mockery; turning it to a sense quite different from what they intended. Yes, saith he, it shall be in fact as ye say: ye shall be taught by a strange tongue, and a stammering lip, in a strange country, ye shall be carried into captivity by a people whose language shall be unintelligible to you, and which ye shall be forced to learn like children: and my dealing with you shall be according to your own words: it shall be command upon command, for your punishment: it shall be line upon line stretched over you to mark out your destruction. (Comp. 2 Kings 21:13.) It shall come upon you at different times, and by different degrees; till the judgments, with which from time to time I have threatened you, shall have their full accomplishment.’ Bp. Louth.

V. 12, 13. The prophets had pointed out to the people the true way of finding rest and comfort, amid their enemies and trouble, by trusting and waiting on God; but they did not choose to hearken: (Notes, 30:15—17. Jer. 6:16, 17. Matt. 11:28—30, 23:37—39.) and therefore, the constant and frequent instructions, which they treated with contempt, hastened and aggravated their condemnation; inducing them to depart still further from God, till they were broken by their enemies, snared in their own policy, and taken in Satan's net. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 9—11. 6:9, 10. 8:11—15. 1 Pet. 2:7, 8.)

V. 14, 15. When the prophets denounced the vengeance of God against the people, they treated it with mockery, and ridicule; especially the scornful rulers of Jerusalem, and the priests and prophets before mentioned. (Marg. Ref. c. Note, 9—11.) They boasted that they were in league with death and hell; (Notes, Job 5:20—23. Hos. 2:18—20.) and should be safe, even when the judgments of God deluged the land. (Notes, 17—19. 8:6—8. Dan. 9:25—27.) For they had formed such confederacies, and devised such politic schemes, as would secure them; though the prophets called these devices and alliances refuges of lies and falsehood; and though they were grounded in deceit and hypocrisy. Perhaps this may refer to some league, which they were attempting to make with Egypt, to assist them against the Assyrians. (Notes, 30:1—7. 31:5—5. Ez. 13:5—22.)—‘Our arts of cunning and falsehood will secure us, in the most difficult times. They are not supposed, to have said thus much in express terms, but this was their true meaning.’ 30:10’ Louth.

V. 16. This gracious promise, introducing the subsequent denunciations of approaching judgments, was well suited to give to the pious remnant an encouraging assurance, that the Assyrians should not prevail against Judah, as they had done against Israel. (Note, 7:14.) ‘This prophecy cannot belong to any but Christ, to whom it is often applied in the New Testament. But it may import thus much, with respect to the time wherein Isaiah lived; that he should never be disappointed who believes in God, whose dwelling is in Zion; and hath made peculiar promises to the Jewish church and kingdom, which shall eminently be fulfilled at the coming of the Messiah.’ Louth.—The person and salvation of Christ are, in this remarkable prediction, represented under the figure of “a Foundation,” on which some magnificent structure was about to be erected. For the spiritual temple is built on Christ, his Person, and Mediation: with the whole plan and purpose of God for glorifying his great name, in the salvation of sinners: as well as every human hope of mercy, and future happiness. This “Foundation was laid in Zion,” where the Lord dwelt upon his mercy-seat amidst his chosen people. JEHOVAH himself laid it, according to his eternal counsels, and his predictions from the beginning; by the incarnation of Christ, by carrying him through his work, by exalting him in human nature to the mediatorial throne, and by sending the gospel to the nations. This Foundation is a Stone of such stability and excellency, as to support the immense and glorious edifice, which is to endure to all eternity. It is “a tried Stone,” approved by God, and all his saints and servants. It is “a Corner-stone,” compacting together the whole building: “a precious Corner-stone,” in the sight of the Lord, and of every believer; and a most sure Foundation; so that every one, who in any age or nation believes this testimony, and rests all his hopes and his immortal soul on Christ, shall never be put to flight, or confusion, as one in haste to escape impending danger: for he shall be safe, and know himself safe, and shall “quietly wait the salvation of the LORD.” (Marg. Ref. Notes, Rom. 9:30—33. 1 Cor. 3:10—15. Eph. 2:19—22. 1 Pet. 2:4—8.)—The Septuagint render the last clause, “shall not be ashamed,” and it is thus quoted in the New Testament.—‘He that believes shall rest himself contented with this all-sufficient means of his comfort and salvation; and shall not either hasten to look out for other helps, or be ashamed of trusting to this.’ Bp. Hall.

V. 17—19. The judgments, which were coming on the scornful rulers and people of Judah, are here contrasted with the safety and well-grounded confidence of every believer, as stated in the preceding verse. For the Lord was about to execute impartial justice on the wicked, according to his strict and holy law; as the builder carries on his work by the line and the plummet. (Notes, 10:21—23. 2 Kings 21:13. Ez. 40:3. Am. 7:7—9. Rev. 11:1, 2.) Then the storm of his indignation would sweep away every false confidence; the presumption of the scornful would end in despair; (Notes, 9—15.) they would be trodden down by the instruments of his vengeance; destruction would march forth against them, and come nearer and nearer, by day and by night; so that 18 ¶ And "your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; "when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be "trodden down by it.

19 From "the time that it goeth forth it shall take you: for morning by morning shall it pass over, by day and by night: "and it shall be a vexation only "to understand the report.

20 For "the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it: and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it.

21 For the LORD shall rise up as "in mount Perazim, he shall be wroth as in "the valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, "his strange work; and bring to pass his act, "his strange act.

22 Now therefore "be ye not mockers, "lest your bands be made strong: for I have heard from the LORD God of hosts "a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth.

23 ¶ Give "ye ear, and hear my voice; hearken, and hear my speech.

the very report of their miseries at a distance would be a vexation and terror, to all who heard of them.—The calamities and alarms occasioned by Sennacherib's invasion, and his gradual approach to besiege Jerusalem, might be a partial accomplishment of these predictions. But neither that event, nor even the Babylonish captivity, nor any of their calamities till the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, after their obstinate rejection of Christ, the Corner-stone, fully answers the import of these verses. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20. 'A maschal, or proverbial saying; the meaning of which is, that they will find all means of defence and protection insufficient to secure them, and cover them from the evils coming upon them. . . . Their beds were only mattresses laid on the floor; and the coverlet, a sheet, or in the winter a carpet, laid over it, in which the person wrapt himself.' Bp. Louth.—Neither the confederacy of the Jews with Egypt, nor any of their politics, could defend them against the Assyrians, or Chaldeans: neither their temple, altar, sacrifices, nor Pharisaical righteousness could recommend them to the favour of God, when they rejected Christ: nor could their numbers and fortifications defend them against the Romans, when God forsook them, and became their enemy. (Notes, 57:11-13. 59:3-8. Rom. 9:30-33. 10:1-4.)—Two proverbial expressions, importing that all worldly comforts are insufficient to cure the maladies they are applied to; and that human devices are too short to secure us against the hand of Providence, whenever that will find us out to punish us. And therefore we ought not to rely too much on outward means: much less betake ourselves to evil arts for our security, but commit ourselves to God in well doing, as the surest Refuge in the time of trouble.' Louth.

V. 21, 22. (Notes, Josh. 10:10-14, vs. 10, 12.) 'The destruction of the Philistines is there compared to a breach of waters; (2 Sam. 5:20.) the same resemblance which is here used. (19) Those extraordinary manifestations of God's power at Perazim and Gibeon, were for the deliverance of his people, and the destruction of their enemies, but now God will act contrary to his usual proceedings of grace and mercy, and employ his power in destroying his own people.' Louth.—Perhaps his most extraordinary interposition, in cutting off the army of Sennacherib, in answer to Hezekiah's faith and prayer, and after the hopes of unbelievers had failed, may be alluded to. But his "strange work" which the Jews took it for granted he never would do, was the rejection of them from being his people, numbering them among his enemies, and rising up for their destruction by the Romans as he had done against the Canaanites and Philistines, by the hands of Joshua and Israel. (Notes, Hab. 1:5. Acts 13:38-41.) The prophet therefore warns the people to "give themselves to scoffing no more," (Bp. Louth), lest they should be bound in strong bands, unto the execution of his righteous indignation: for he had certainly "heard from the LORD of hosts, that he had determined a consumption upon the whole land."

—The Babylonish captivity was here predicted, but not that event alone: for the prophets addressed their writings to those of succeeding generations, as well as those to whom they were more immediately sent. (Notes, 10:21-23. Dan. 9:24-27. Rom. 9:24-29, vs. 27, 28.)

V. 23-29. The dealings of God with Israel and Judah, and with different descriptions of men, are here illustrated by apt similitudes, to which the prophet demanded their earnest attention. The ploughman varies his work as the case requires, not "ploughing every day;" he carefully prepares the ground for the seed, and sows it with different kinds of pulse, or grain, each in its appointed spot, the wheat 24 Doth the ploughman plough all day to sow? doth he open and "break the clods of his ground?

25 When he hath made plain the face thereof, doth he not cast abroad the fitches, and scatter the cummin, and cast "in the principal wheat, and the appointed barley, and the "rye in their "place?

26 ¶ For "his God doth instruct him to discretion, and doth teach him.

27 For the fitches are not "thrashed with a thrashing instrument, neither is a cart-wheel turned about upon the cummin; but "the fitches are beaten out with a staff, and the cummin with a rod.

28 "Bread-corn is bruised; because he will not ever be thrashing it, nor break it with "the wheel of his cart, nor bruise it with his horsemen.

29 This also "cometh forth from the LORD of hosts, which is wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working.

in the principal place as being most valuable. And when he has gathered in his harvest, he knows how to separate the corn from the straw, and the chaff, according to the methods of the time and place in which he lives; and to the nature of the grain, that he may not injure it, but prepare it for his use. (Notes, 21:10. 41:15-16. Deut. 25:4. Hos. 10:9-11. Am. 1:3-5. Mic. 4:11-13.) 'Four methods of thrashing are here mentioned, by different instruments; the flail, the drag, the wain, and the treading of the cattle.' The staff or flail was used for the firmiora semina, says Hieron. The grain that was too tender to be treated in the other methods. The drag consisted of a sort of frame of strong planks, made rough at the bottom with hard stones or iron. It was drawn by horses or oxen over the corn sheaves spread on the floor, the driver sitting upon it. The wain was much like the former; but had wheels with iron teeth, or edges like a saw. . . . This not only forced out the grain, but cut the straw in pieces for fodder for the cattle; for in the eastern countries they have no hay. . . . The last method is well known from the law of Moses. Deut. 25:4. Bp. Louth.—Thus the Lord, who has given man this wisdom and discretion, must himself be wonderful in counsel and excellent in operation. As the season and occasion requires, he threatens, corrects, spares, shows mercy, or executes vengeance. He distinguishes between one character and another, with the greatest exactness; and orders every thing according to the counsel of his own will, and for his own glory: he appoints his various dispensations, for the due correction of his people, and in order to separate them from his enemies, and from their sins: he will take care that no trials shall eventually injure his servants; but he will utterly destroy his enemies. Note, the proper time arrives.—In working. (29) תרשה Note, Prov. 27.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. All that glory and beauty of which men are proud, will prove a mere "fading flower;" and that affluence which is considered as a crown and ornament, frequently tempts to excess, and thus disgraces its possessor.—They, who are "overcome by wine," are overcome by Satan; for all drunkards are his slaves, and must sink under the final wrath of God, except they repent.—The Lord will abase all the proud; but they, who pride themselves in wickedness, will be rendered peculiarly contemptible.—When the Lord determines to execute vengeance on the ungodly, he has many and mighty instruments at his command, who readily bear down and destroy all before them. Happy then are they alone, who glory in the Lord of hosts himself! His favour and grace, communion with him, and communications from him, suffice to enrich the poorest and to ennoble the meanest: they form "a crown of glory and diadem of beauty," superior to any distinctions and decorations of earthly monarchs and conquerors; and thence his people derive wisdom, strength, and courage, for every service and for every conflict. Thus some are qualified for the ministry, and others for the magistracy; and others to defend their country, or lay down their lives in the cause of God. (Notes, 2 Cor. 12:7-10. Phil. 4:10-13.)—Whilst the Sovereign of the world leaves some guilty nations to fill up the measure of their iniquities, and gives them up to ruin; he raises up eminent reformers, and preserves a remnant of believers, in other nations, whose prayers and labours prolong their tranquillity. Yet every attempt to promote true religion has hitherto been attended with unspeakable discouragement. Even under the "most" scriptural means of grace, multitudes have continued ungodly; and have copied the example of the open enemies of God, rather than that of his most honoured servants. And alas! the nominal ministers of religion have frequently been the ringleaders in impiety and scandalous intemperance; and when they are "swallowed up of wine," no wonder that they wander out of the way, teach false doctrine, stumble in judgment, are blind guides, and go before those to the pit of destruction, whom they have misled by their erroneous teaching, and hardened by their flagitious example. Thus excess and riot become common, till no place is clean from filthiness; men's "ears are turned away from the truth, and are turned unto fables;" and the few who are able and willing to teach the people knowledge, and to cause them to understand doctrine, find them alienated, and entirely unteachable; having the incapacity, levity, and heedlessness of children, without their simplicity. In such circumstances, the most scriptural and rational method of inculcating divine truth, by repeated plain instructions, and particular cautions, warnings, and exhortations, excite disgust: and those who are too much engaged in excess or dissipation, to bestow any pains to understand the word of God, absurdly set up for critics; and censure or ridicule the ablest ministers, who give themselves wholly to their work! To keep themselves in countenance, they watch for something in the language or gestures of the minister, which they can misrepresent and deride; and thus they quiet their consciences in despising the message of God. Such men ripen apace for destruction: the Lord will teach them by other methods; "for judgments are prepared for scorners, and stripes for the back of fools." Indeed, evil is before all, who refuse to hearken to the proposals of mercy in the gospel, and to seek the holy rest and consolations, which God has provided for the weary and heavy laden sinner.—It is very painful for the minister of Christ to reflect, when he is endeavouring to instruct, convince, warn, persuade, alarm, or encourage his hearers; that numbers of them will thence take occasion "to go and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken." He must, however, go on, even though scorners be found among rulers, whether in church or state, being satisfied that he speaks according to the word of God.

V. 14-29. When we declare the vengeance of the Lord against all those who "trust in refuges of lies," we should expect to hear loud clamours against our bigotry and want of charity; and scornful infidels will divert themselves, and each other, even with the most scriptural denunciations of hell and damnation. They have no fears in that respect, and deride those who have, as men of narrow, weak, and superstitious minds: and they speak and act, as if indeed "they had made a covenant with death, and were at agreement with hell," and were secured against the vengeance of God; having made those things their refuge, which we are as sure are lies and falsehoods, as that the Bible is the truth of God. He has laid one Foundation, and no man can lay any other: this is tried, approved, and precious; and "he that believeth shall never be confounded." But let men contrive and endeavour whatever they please: if they do not build on this Foundation, and be not interested in the incarnate God and Saviour; if his person, character, and offices be not precious to their souls; their hopes will be found delusion and presumption; the storm of death and judgment will "sweep away their refuges of lies, and overflow their hiding place;" their "covenant with death shall be disannulled;" and the execution of the righteous sentence of God, according to his holy law, will be so dreadful, that the very report of it is sometimes, even now, intolerably vexatious to them. For whatever men trust to, for justification, except the righteousness of Christ; or for wisdom, strength, and holiness, except the regenerating and new creating influences of the Holy Spirit; or for happiness, except the favour of Almighty God; will be found "a bed which is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it, and a covering which is narrower than that a man can wrap himself in it." Let sinners then fear becoming mockers, lest they be bound in the strong cords of their own iniquity; for the Lord has unalterably decreed the destruction of all ungodly men, throughout the whole earth.—But men presume because God spares them from day to day: not knowing that he has his method and seasons of operation; and knows how to deal with all his creatures, as may best answer the purposes of his glory. For he, who gives natural wisdom to the husbandman, (as well as spiritual wisdom to the believer,) is himself "wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working." He has not yet made all ready for the great day of account; and sinners have not yet filled up the measure of their crimes, heaviness and sorrow: 'and it shall be unto me as Ariel.

3 And I will camp against thee round about, and will lay siege against thee with a mount, and I will raise forts against thee.

nor performed their part in the universal plan of him, "who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will," and therefore they are spared. His people are not yet fully purified from their sins, and have not yet sufficiently shown the power of his grace; and therefore they are kept in tribulation. But "he knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the wicked to the day of judgment to be punished." (Note, 2 Pet. 2:4-9.) The visible church is his husbandry, and professed Christians are the corn of his floor, mingled with the straw and chaff: but he knows how to make a separation by means of trials and persecutions; he will so moderate these, that they shall do his people no harm; when their end is answered they shall cease; his "wheat shall be gathered into his garner, but the chaff shall be burnt with unquenchable fire." (Note, Matt. 3:11,12.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIX. V. 1, 2. 'The subject of this and the four following chapters is the invasion of Sennacherib; the great distress of the Jews while it continued; their sudden and unexpected deliverance by God's immediate interposition in their favour; the subsequent prosperous state of the kingdom under Hezekiah; interspersed with severe reproofs, and threats of punishment, for their hypocrisy, stupidity, infidelity, their want of trust in God, and their vain reliance on the assistance of Egypt, and with promises of better times, both immediately to succeed, and to be expected in the future age. ... Though the matter is various, and the transitions sudden, yet the prophet seldom goes far from his subject.' Bp. Lowth. Jerusalem is here called "Ariel," which signifies the lion of God: and some think that it refers to the standard of Judah, which is said, though with little probability, to have been a lion: or to Christ the Lion of that tribe, or to the strength of the city. (Notes, Num. 2:2. Rev. 5:5-7.) But probably it relates to the altar of burnt-offering, which consumed the sacrifices, as a lion devours his prey. Perhaps the Jews sometimes called the city by this name; and trusted that it would prevail against every assailant, because of the sacrifices there offered. But though David had taken it from the Jebusites, fixed his residence there, and removed the ark of the covenant thither; yet God denounced a wo against it. And though the people continued from year to year to observe their solemn feasts, and to multiply their sacrifices; yet the Lord would surely distress the city, and fill it with trouble and sorrow; and it should be unto him "as Ariel." As the altar, flaming with the sacred fire, consuming the oblations, and surrounded with the blood and carcases of the sacrifices, was a typical display of divine justice in the punishment of sin; so should Jerusalem be filled with slain men, and consumed with fire by the avenging justice of God.—This will not allow us to interpret the chapter exclusively of Sennacherib's invasion. He distressed Jerusalem, but did not render the city like the altar of burnt-offering. "It shall be unto me as the hearth of the great altar."—Some suppose it (the name Ariel) 'to be taken from the hearth of the great altar of burnt-offerings, which Ezekiel plainly calls by the same name; and that Jerusalem is here considered as the seat of the fire of God, אֵל אֵל, which should issue from thence to consume his enemies; comp. 31:9. ... Ironically, 'Go on year after year, keep your solemn feasts; yet know that God will punish you for your hypocritical worship. ... Probably delivered at the time of some great feast, when they were thus employed. ... It shall be ... all on flame, as it was when taken by the Chaldeans; or covered with carcases and blood, as when taken by the Romans; an intimation of which more distant events, though not immediate subjects of the prophecy, may perhaps be given in this obscure passage.' Bp. Lowth. (Note, Ez. 43:13-17, v. 15.)—'The city which David besieged, (in which sense the word is taken in the third verse;) implying that the enemy should distress it in the same manner.' Lowth.

V. 3, 4. Sennacherib sent an army, under Tartan, Rabaris, and Rabshakeh, against Jerusalem: but no intimation is given that they closely besieged the city: (Notes, 2 Kings 18:17-25. 19:8.) and it is expressly said that Sennacherib should not encamp against it. (37:33.) Again, when the Assyrian chiefs approached Jerusalem, Hezekiah sent ambassadors to them: yet they made no humiliating submissions, but having heard Rabshakeh's insulting and blasphemous menaces, they answered him not a word. (36:31,32. Note, 2 Kings 18:36,37.) No doubt numbers of the Jews were extremely dejected, and ready to make any submissions; but the language of these verses seems to imply, that the city hat hath a familiar spirit out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust.

5 Moreover the multitude of thy strangers shall be like small dust, and the multitude of the terrible ones shall be as chaff that passeth away: yea, it shall be as an instant, suddenly.

6 Thou shalt be visited of the Lord of hosts with thunder, and with earthquake, and great noise, with storm and tempest, and the flame of devouring fire.

7 And the multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel, even all that fight against her and her munition, and that distress her, shall be as a dream of a night-vision.

8 It shall even be as when an hungry man dreameth, and behold, he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite: so shall the multitude of all the nations be, that fight against mount Zion.

[Practical Observations.]

9 ¶ Stay yourselves and wonder; cry ye out, and cry; they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink.

10 For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets, and your rulers, the seers hath he covered.

11 And the vision of all is become unto you, as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this: I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed.

12 And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned.

13 Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men:

14 Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.

15 Wo unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and they say, Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?

16 Surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter's clay: for shall the work say of him that made it, He made me should be closely environed, and at length taken, and laid even with the ground: and, in this full meaning, the prophecy had its accomplishment, when Jerusalem was destroyed by the Chaldeans; and afterwards by the Romans.—It is very natural to suppose, that many of the surviving Jews, when thus reduced to extremities, would in the most abject manner beg their lives of the haughty conquerors.—Instead of their former confident and presumptuous language, they would express themselves with the most timid and servile entreaties, and doleful complaints; like those that had familiar spirits, who affected to speak in a feeble, shrill, whining tone, as if from the belly; or as if the voice came up out of the earth, while they lay grovelling on the ground. (Note, 8:19.)—As one that hath a familiar spirit. (4) כאמר. Note, Num. 21:10.

V. 6. 'These verses' (5—7) 'contain an admirable description of the destruction of Sennacherib's army, with a beautiful variety of the most expressive and sublime images: perhaps more adapted to show the greatness, the suddenness, and horror of that event, than the means and manner by which it was effected. Comp. 30:30—33.' Bp. Louth. The predictions seem also to relate to all the subsequent calamities of the Jews, till the final ruin of Jerusalem.—Sennacherib's invasion formed the first fulfilment; and many circumstances, in the plain and full meaning of them, belong to that event: but the prophet might be led to use language, which was afterwards exactly accomplished, but could be understood only in a more general and qualified sense, concerning the distresses occasioned by those invaders.—Sennacherib's army, composed of various nations, all strangers to God and Israel, terrible for courage and ferocity, and insolent through success, seemed innumerable as the dust: yet they would be driven away as the chaff, and vanquished by a single blow "at an instant, suddenly." (Notes, 2 Kings 19:35. Ps. 46:6. 48:4—8.)—Their approach to Jerusalem was, however, a visitation from God, and occasioned terror and alarm, like thunders, earthquakes, storms, and tempests, and was destructive as a devouring fire. Or, the Assyrian army may be meant: called "thy strangers;" (5) and the sudden and dreadful slaughter of a hundred and eighty-five thousand men at once, by angel, may be predicted. (Notes, 10:28—34. 17:12—14. 30:29—33.)—Perhaps there is also an intimation that the Jews, not duly profiting by their deliverance from the Assyrians, would afterwards be destroyed in this manner.—The last siege and taking of Jerusalem was attended by dreadful thunders, earthquakes, &c. (Marg. Ref. i. Note, Zech. 14:4, 5.)—Thou shalt be visited, &c. (6) "From JERUSALEM God of hosts, there shall be a sudden visitation." Bp. Louth.

V. 7, 8. The transient joy, sanguine hopes, and speedy ruin of the enemies of the Jews, and of the church, are here represented by a very beautiful simile. A man who, being hungry or thirsty, falls asleep, and dreams that he is eating or drinking, seems to enjoy much pleasure from the visionary gratification: but it soon vanishes; and his craving wants and faintness continuing when he awakes, his disappointment aggravates his uneasiness. Thus the multitude of the nations, who, through succeeding generations fight against mount Zion, where the altar, or worship of God, is established, have their enmity gratified by transient successes; and, as it were, dream with pleasure and triumphant exultation of effecting the destruction of the church: but the delusion soon vanishes, and leaves them disappointed and miserable. 'The Assyrians had swallowed up Jerusalem in their imagination; but God should suddenly disappoint all their hopes, and send them away empty and confounded.' Louth. (Note, Ps. 73:18—22, v. 20.) Not only was Sennacherib's army at once destroyed, and his sanguine hopes thus frustrated; but the Assyrian, Babylonian, Macedonian, and Roman empires, successively, declined and came to ruin, after they had fought against mount Zion: and thus it must be with every nation and individual, which engages in that unequal contest. (Notes, Zech. 12:2—5, 14:1—3, 12—19.)

V. 9—12. The Jews were here earnestly called on to pause, reflect, be amazed, and cry out as in bitter anguish, on account of the judgments which were coming on the nation. Or ironically, "Take your pleasure and riot." (Marg. and Marg. Ref. t) They were, and would be, intoxicated with presumption and false doctrine, and rendered insensible to their danger: and the Lord would make them drink of the cup of his indignation, till they staggered as drunken men. (Marg. Ref. q. Note, 5:17—23.) Because they despised his word, and rejected his salvation, he had "poured upon them the spirit of deep sleep," and given them up to judicial blindness; and especially their prophets, rulers, and teachers of every description, were covered with darkness, as if hoodwinked: so that the visions or prophecies which were sent them, though plain enough in themselves, were utterly inexplicable to them. (Note, 6:9, 10, 28:9—11, Mic. 3:5—7, Acts 28:23—29, 2 Cor. 2:12—16, 2 Thes. 2:8—12.) Their learned men, when asked to interpret them, being blinded by prejudices and passions, excused themselves on account of the book being sealed: intimating that the predictions were so enveloped in obscurity, that, if there were any meaning in them, it could not be discovered. And the poor alleged their want of learning, as the reason of their contempt and inattention: so that in fact "the oracles of God" became of no use to them. The apostle applies this to the state of the Jews in his days: (Note, Rom. 11:7—10.) and doubtless it had its principal accomplishment, when the chief priests, scribes, Pharisees, and Jewish nation, rejected and crucified their promised and long-expected Messiah, and persecuted his apostles and disciples; and in the state of that nation to this present day; whilst, with the Scriptures of the prophets in their hands, and being conversant in the letter of them, the book is so sealed, that neither the learned nor unlearned among them can discern, that they were fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth.—'Prejudice doth as much hinder the learned from understanding God's word, as ignorance doth the unlearned.' Louth.

V. 13—16. Many of the Jews, through successive ages, adhered to the external worship of God, and thus "honoured him with their lips;" but in general their hearts were alienated from him, through the love of sin and worldly things; and their religion was induced, or regulated, merely by regard to human authority. Thus, in the days of Hezekiah, and their other pious kings, they adhered to the temple-worship and kept their solemn feasts; but when "the precept of man" no longer called them to the sanctuary, they turned from it to idolatry. In the days of Christ, they were very tenacious of their forms: but by the traditions of the elders they "rendered the commandment of God of none effect;" and almost all their religion consisted in superstition, formality, and hypocrisy. (Note, Matt. 15:7-9.) The Lord would therefore proceed again to do a marvellous work: he would entirely give up their teachers and counsellors to be infatuated to their ruin; leave Jerusalem to be desolated; and cast off the Jews from being his people. (Notes, 9-12. 6:9, 10. 28:21, 22. Jer. 38:9. John 9:39-41. 1 Cor. 1:17-24.) All schemes to hide their iniquity, or to vanish over their malice under specious pretexts, as if they could impose on God and hide their character from him; all their perversions of his word, to establish their own traditions; and all their opposition to his counsels, to support their own authority and reputation, would be as ineffectual, as if the potter's clay could attempt to disannul, or find fault with, the work of him who wrought it. They could no more resist his will, than the clay could that of the potter: he could as easily defeat their schemes, as the potter alters the shape of the clay. They could no more succeed in their enterprises, when God rejected them, than the clay could become a vessel by its own energy; or change the shape into which the potter cast it, whether he had formed it a "vessel unto honour or to dishonour." (Marg. Ref. notes, 5:18, 19. 45:9-11. Jer. 18:1-10. Rom. 9:19-23. 2 Tim. 2:20-22.)—The most refined arts of the deep politicians, shall not avail their authors nor be able to preserve them from God's judgments: and their learnedest men shall lose their judgment and discretion. This threatening was remarkably verified under the gospel, when their crucifying Christ out of fear of the Roman power, brought the Romans upon them; and their learned Rabbies ever since have minded little else but fabulous stories, and their Cabalists have vented trifles for profound mysteries. Louth.

V. 17—19). These verses seem wholly to relate to the rejection of the Jewish nation, and the calling of the Gentiles. In a little time, Lebanon would become Carmel; the uncultivated forest would be a fruitful field; the Gentile nation would be favoured with the abundant sowing of the good seed of "the word of God," and yield a plentiful harvest of true converts: at the same time, the field, which had long been tilled and yielded fruit, would be esteemed a forest; that is, the nation of the Jews would be rejected, and left without the means of grace, to become barren and desert. (Notes, 24:13—16. 32:9—15. 35:1,2. 49:5,6. 55:1,12. 65:13—16. Ez. 17:22—24. Rom. 11:16—32.) Then they, who before were deaf to the voice of God, would hear and understand the words of that book, which were sealed up from the unbelieving Jews; (Note, 9—12.) and the poor blind heathens, emerging from their obscurity and darkness, would enjoy the marvellous light of the gospel. (Notes, 32:3—5. 35:5—42:13—17. Acts 26:16—18. Eph. 5:8—14.) Perhaps the miracles of Christ and his apostles, might also be alluded to. Then the teachable, the meek, and poor in spirit, and the poor and afflicted of this world, would rejoice more abundantly in the Lord, because of the wretched condition from which they had been delivered; nay, they would be more joyful, than believing Jews in general had been. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 61:1—3,10,11. Zeph. 3:14—17. Phil. 4:1,4.)

Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field. (17) "Ere Lebanon become like Carmel." A Mashal, or proverbial saying, expressing any great revolution of things; and when respecting two subjects, an entire reciprocal change: explained here by some interpreters, I think with great probability, as having its principal view beyond the revolutions then near at hand, to the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles. . . . V. 20, 21. 'By the terrible one, we are to understand the foreign enemies of God's people; (5. 25,4,5) and by the scorner, those skeptics and infidels, that lived among them and made a mock at God's messengers, and what they said. (Comp. 28:14,22.) . . . Who condemn men for speaking the truth, as they often served the prophets, or for so slight a matter as an unwary expression. . . . It was the custom for the judges to execute their office at the gates of the city. (Deut. 21:19, 22:15. Ruth 4:1,11.) Louth.—No doubt this was the case, in the days of Isaiah and at many other times. (Notes, 28:5—15. Am. 5:10—13.) It is however evident, that when our Lord came, the rulers, priests, scribes, and sanhedrim of the Jews, most exactly answered this description. Herod, the king of the Jews, persecuted Christ as soon as he was born: he others despised and derided him; they lay in wait to find some accusation against him; they watched for his words and perverted them, and laid snares for him when he publicly reproved their sins, being determined to condemn him for any word which they could lay hold of; and they turned aside, rejected, and crucified this Just One, on the most frivolous pretences. They behaved in the same manner to his apostles and ministers, and were the chief persecutors of the Christians, till Jerusalem was destroyed: then that terrible enemy came to naught, and was cut off; and this tended to establish Christianity, and to increase the joy of believers. —The words may also be applied to the subversion of the Pagan persecuting Roman empire, which tended farther to the promulgation of the gospel. (Notes, Zech. 14:1—3. Rev. 12:1—6.)

V. 22-24. God did not intend to reject all the posterity of Abraham and Jacob, that these his redeemed servants should be, as it were, ashamed and wax pale. The Jews and Israelites, who embraced Christianity, would acknowledge the converted Gentiles, as the work of God's new creating grace, and as their spiritual children: (Notes, 19:23-25, 41:8, 9, 60:15-22. Rom. 11:11-15. Gal. 3:26-29. Eph. 2:4-10, v. 10.) and their believing descendants would be excited to trust, honour, and worship the Holy One of Jacob, with greater fervency, for this immense accession to the church. Multitudes even of those Jews who had erred in spirit, and murmured against Christ, and malignantly opposed his gospel, would come to a better temper, and understand and receive his doctrine: nay, at length, the whole Jewish nation will be converted to Christ, and readmitted into the church.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. External privileges and distinctions will not exempt from wo, any of those who are destitute of true godliness. Men may persist in an attendance on wearisome and expensive forms; nay, even on the instituted ordinances of God, and glory in their supposed relation to him; when the whole of their apparent devotion consists of pride and hypocrisy.—When he encamps against the strong-holds of his adversaries, they will soon be brought low. Such as refuse to humble themselves before him in submission to his righteousness, and obedience to his will, will soon be abased to the most extreme distress: and none are more abject in adversity, than those who are insolent and scornful in prosperity.—The Lord employs wicked men to chastise his people, and to avenge himself on hypocrites; and numbers are ready enough of themselves for such services. But at the same time, he prepares sudden destruction for them also; and his enemies shall be visited with vengeance more tremendous than earthquakes, thunders, tempests, or conflagrations can suggest to the imagination. All their sa gunie expect tations and transient joys, will be like a pleasing dream. Speedily will they awake from their soothing delusions; and if these continue till death, they will then lift up their eyes in hell, and not find one drop of water to cool their tongue. Then, indeed, "it shall be, as when a hungry man dreameth that he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or, as when a thirsty man dreameth that he drinketh; but he awaketh, and behold he is faint, and his soul hath appetite." (Notes, Luke 12:15-21, 16:22-26.) But the disappointment and misery of those who fight against the church, and exult in the expectation of destroying it, will be the most aggravated. And every nation, which involves itself in the guilt of persecution, lays the axe to the root of its own peace and prosperity.

V. 9-16. Pride, ambition, avarice, lust, or any headstrong passion, produces a perfect intoxication of the soul; and so do erroneous principles in religion: hence originates the most inconsiderate and infatuated conduct, by which men rush upon their own destruction. This should caution every one not to sin against conviction; not to scoff at divine truth; and not to lean to his own understanding or heart, and so despise the teaching and salvation of God: for thus he is provoked to pour on numbers "the spirit of deep sleep," or "strong delusion;" then they grope at noonday, as if it were midnight; and the most learned and sagacious, without excepting high-priests, or chief priests, rulers, and teachers, are covered with impenetrable error and ignorance. To such persons the Bible becomes absolutely a "sealed book;" and when the learned find that they cannot understand it, and make it accord to their conjectures, they impute it to its want of correctness; and either wholly reject or neglect it, or pervert it by presumptuous alterations, and unnatural comments: and the unlearned are glad of a sanction to their ignorance and impiety.—Instead of despising the poor Jews, who have long been left in this situation, we ought to look to ourselves, and take warning by their example. And let us remember that the Bible is, in some measure, a sealed book to every man, learned or unlearned, till he begins to study it with childlike simplicity and docility; daily praying that the Lord would "open his understanding, that he may understand the Scriptures," and honestly aiming to practise according to the instructions which he has already received.—Alas! what multitudes in this Christian country fall even below the hypocritical Jews in religion; and their conduct may well excite our grief and wonder! They do not so much as "draw near to God with their mouth, or honour him with their lips;" nay, the authority of laws, or royal proclamations, fails of inducing them to pay a decent respect to the name and the day of God! And, of those who are not openly profane, it is to be feared, that very great numbers are formalists, while sin and the world possess their hearts; and their religion is only a compliance with established customs, and regulated in subserviency to reputation and interest. Yet, let it be observed, that those wanderings of mind, and that defect of reverence and devotion, which are the believer's grief and burden, are very different from the alienation of heart from God, here so severely reproofed: for the former consists with sincerity, though it is a lamentable proof of imperfection.—As sinners grow hardened in hypocrisy, impiety, or infidelity, their presumption increases; and hypocrites, especially, cannot be convinced that God intends to do so "marvellous a work," as to punish them for their wickedness. The wise and prudent men, of this world, are often strangely infatuated, and fall into practical, and even into speculative atheism; and speak and act, as if they could hide their sins, their intentions, or their true character, from God, or frustrate his counsels. But they will find themselves in his hand, as "clay in the hand of the potter;" and as they can have no fence against his power; so their rebellion against his authority, and contempt of his truth, will tend to the display of his justice in their condemnation. By such conduct many other churches, as well as that of the Jews, have provoked God to bereave them of their advantages; and the blessings of salvation have been communicated to others in their stead.

V. 17-24. When the Lord teaches, "the deaf hear" his word, and "the blind see out of obscurity." When he comforts the meek, the poor, and the persecuted, "increase their joy in him;" and that holiness of character in God, which sinners hate and dread, inspires believers, in their happiest hours, with confidence and exultation. When by his power terrible persecutors and presumptuous scorners are cut off, the church enjoys peace. And let such, as "watch for iniquity," and scrutinize the actions of Christians and ministers with malicious severity, in order to find matter of accusation; who wait to catch at some word from their lips, for which they may make them offenders; who lay snares for those that boldly and honestly reprove sin, without respect of persons; and who revile and persecute the righteous on every trivial occasion—let such men recollect that they copy the example of the scornful Jews, and of those who crucified Christ, persecuted his disciples, and brought upon themselves swift destruction.—But the Lord will replenish his church, and never suffer any of his redeemed servants to be ashamed, or to wax pale, by witnessing the permanent triumphs of his enemies. Numbers of children are already raised up to Abraham, from among the poor Gentiles: (Note, Gal. 3:26-29.) may we be found of the number, and experience his new-creating power! May we see increasing numbers "sanctify the Holy One of Israel," and fear his name! And may those who now "err in spirit, and murmur against his truth," whether Jews, Gentiles, Mohammedans, or nominal Christians, be brought to understand and learn the true doctrine, till the whole earth be filled with the glory of our God and Saviour!

3 Therefore shall the strength of Pharaoh be your shame, and the trust in the shadow of Egypt your confusion.

4 For his princes were at Zoan, and his ambassadors came to Hanes.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXX. V. 1. The propensity, of both Judah and Israel, to form alliances with idolaters, and especially with Egypt, being directly contrary to the law, and inconsistent with dependence on God for protection against all enemies, evinced them to be "rebellious children," who acted unsuitably to their relations to God, and in direct disobedience to his commands. (Notes, 6:7. 31:1-3. Deut. 17:16.) Hoshea, king of Israel, made an alliance with So, king of Egypt, which brought ruin on himself and his people; and perhaps this prophecy was delivered about that time: when the princes of Judah also might be consulting together, to make a similar league against the formidable Assyrian power. (Notes, 2 Kings 17:1-6. 18:20, 21.) Yet there is no proof that Hezekiah actually entered into such an alliance; nor is it probable, that he would in opposition to the word of God by his prophets: indeed, it is likely that this very message by Isaiah prevented the design, which might otherwise have had terrible consequences. (Notes, 2 Kings 18:5, 6. 2 Chr. 32:6-8.) The princes and people, however, seem to have been bent on the measure: and instead of "asking counsel of the Lord," by his high-priest, or by a prophet, or regulating their decisions according to his word, or taking refuge under his protection by repentance, faith, and prayer, (which the Spirit of God would have led them to,) they proceeded to add sin to sin, by proposing to form a league with the Egyptians.—The words rendered "cover with a covering," may mean "pour out a libation," and some explain them of ratifying a covenant with that ceremony: but, as the custom of ratifying covenants with a libation was a religious observance, and among the Gentiles an act of idolatry; it can hardly be supposed that Hezekiah would comply with it, or that he would have escaped reproof if he had. Perhaps, however, the king of Israel had gone thus far, and many of the Jews were ready even in this sense to "add sin to sin."

V. 2, 3. "Who set forward to go down into Egypt." Bp. Lowth.—Perhaps some ambassadors from Judah had set out on their journey: but Hezekiah, receiving this message from God, and recollecting that he had not consulted him in the measure, recalled them. (Note, Josh. 9:14, 15.) The people, however, were disposed to put Pharaoh and Egypt in the place of God, by relying on them for protection, and trusting under the shadow of their wings. (Notes, 18:1. 20:5. Jer. 37:1-10. Ez. 29:6, 7.) But this would surely end in confusion and disappointment.

V. 4, 5. Hoshea's ambassadors came to Zoan and Hanes, or Tahpanhes, to attend on the Egyptian monarch, and concluded a treaty with him: but the Egyptians gave him no effectual assistance, and he and all his people were put to shame, for confiding in a nation which could not profit them, but were a reproach to them; for this alliance eventually hastened their ruin. (Marg. Ref.) And thus, the prophet intimated, it would be a reproach and ruin to Judah, if they persisted in copying their example. (Notes, Hos. 7:11-16. 14:1-3.)—Expositors indeed generally take it for granted, that Hezekiah's ambassadors are meant: but Judah is not particularly mentioned; nothing is elsewhere recorded of a treaty actually entered into by Hezekiah with Pharaoh; Hezekiah's character, as "trusting in the Lord more than all before him" seems not to admit of the supposition; and it was very natural to place the example of Hosea and Israel, with their Egyptian alliance and its consequences, before the Jews, when eager to seek help from the same quarter. The previous steps taken by the princes were sufficient, to give occasion for Sennacherib's taunt on the subject: (Note, 2 Kings 18: 20, 21.) but Hezekiah's confidence most certainly was placed in God, not in Pharaoh: and though the Egyptians and Ethiopians interrupted the progress of the Assyrians, this does not prove that Hezekiah made and adhered to an alliance with Egypt, in opposition to the warnings of the prophet.

V. 6, 7. "The burden of the beasts of the south" means the loads of treasure which the Israelites, or Jews, or both, carried on young asses and camels, southward into Egypt, to purchase the assistance of that people. These were sent into "a land of trouble and anguish," in which their ancestors had been greatly oppressed, which was likely to occasion much trouble and anguish to them; or which was itself doomed to endure much trouble and anguish. (Notes, 19:1—17.) "Through a land of distress and difficulty: whence come forth the lioness, and the fierce lion, the viper, and the fiery flying serpent." The same deserts are described, which the Israelites passed through, when they come out of Egypt. Bp. Louth. (Deut. 8:15. Notes, Num. 21:6—9. Jer. 2:6.) Egypt also, no doubt, in many parts of it, abounded with these fierce and poisonous animals.—The people impoverished themselves to obtain the alliance of Egypt, which could not profit them; for every effort of the Egyptians would be in vain. Therefore the prophet proclaimed concerning this, (the projected treaty of Judah with Egypt,) that "their strength was to sit still;" it would be their wisdom and security to drop the design, and to remain quietly at home trusting in the Lord, and only using lawful means for their safety. (Notes, 15—17. Ez. 14:13, 14. Lam. 3:24—30.)—The word, here translated "strength," is Rahab, a name for Egypt: (51:9. Ps. 87:4.) and some think that the prophet meant, that Egypt would sit still; or, that it would be more for her interest so to do. "Wherefore I have called her, Rahab the Inactive." Bp. Louth.

V. 8—11. This solemn command of God to the prophet, to write what follows in a table to be hung up, and in a book to be preserved to the most remote posterity, implies, that the prophecy related also to future generations, though the Assyrian invasion gave occasion to it. The same spirit of rebellion, hypocrisy, and falsehood, which then possessed the Jews, would increase in after ages; and they would more and more refuse obedience to the law of God. The people used and would use all their influence and authority, to suppress the testimony of those prophets who "prophecied right things," reproving their iniquities, alarming their consciences, and disquieting them in their sins; and employ menaces and reproaches, or bribes and blandishments, to induce them to speak unto them "smooth things, and prophecy deceits," which might feed their pride and presumption, and sooth their consciences into a false peace. Thus they endeavored to turn the prophets aside from the path of duty; or to deter them from molesting them, whilst they went on in the paths of iniquity. (Notes, 1 Kings 22:13, 14. 2 Chr. 16:7—

13 Therefore this iniquity shall be to you as a breach ready to fall, swelling out in a high wall, whose breaking cometh suddenly at an instant.

14 And he shall break it, as the breaking of the potter's vessel that is broken in pieces; he shall not spare: so that there shall not be found in the bursting of it a sherd to take fire from the hearth, or to take water without out of the pit.

15 For thus saith the Lord God, the Holy One of Israel: In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength: and ye would not.

16 But ye said, No: for we will flee upon horses; therefore shall ye flee: and, We will ride upon the swift; therefore shall they that pursue you be swift.

Perhaps they objected to the expression, and pretended to be disgusted with the frequent use of it: (Notes, 28:9—15.) but in fact they did not choose to hear of his holy character and commandments, his holy hatred of sin, and his determination to punish it. They desired that "the Holy One of Israel might cease from before them," and that they might no more be reminded of his awful justice.—If this were the case in the days of Hezekiah, it was much more so previous to the captivity; and most of all before the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans: for what was all the opposition of the chief priests, rulers, scribes, and nation at large, to the ministry of Christ and his apostles, but an exact fulfilment of this passage, considered as a prediction? V. 12—14. The prophet again, and immediately, used the language to which the Jews had objected, in denouncing the vengeance of God on the nation. "The prophet is resolved to usher in his reproofs with his preface, "Thus saith the Holy One of Israel," whatever distaste it might give to men of reprobate minds. (15) Louth. As they despised the word which God had sent him to speak, and resolved to trust in oppression, or deceit, and perverseness; i. e. in their own deceitful and perverse devices: so this their iniquity would undermine their safety, and render their state like a high wall, in which breaches are already made, and which bulges out, and at length rushes down at once: and the higher it is, the more dreadful the fall. (Notes, 1 Kings 20:30. Ps. 62:3, 4. Ez. 13:10—16. Matt. 7:24—27.) For the Lord would dash in pieces their civil and ecclesiastical constitution, like a potter's vessel, of which no sherd remains, with which fire could be taken from the hearth, or water from the pit.—Jerusalem and Judah were not thus dashed in pieces by the Assyrian invasion: nay, the Babylonian captivity was but a partial fulfilment of the prediction: but when the Jews had despised the word of the gospel, the Lord by the Romans irreparably dashed their state to pieces, and thus it continues to this present day. (Notes, Ps. 2:7—12. Matt. 21:40—44.)

V. 15—17. Notwithstanding the heinousness of their sins, and the power of their enemies, the Lord had assured the Jews, that in returning to him in true repentance and conversion, and adhering to him and his worship, and quietly confiding in his protection, they should be preserved: or, the ambassadors may be addressed, who were called on to return from Egypt, and quietly trust in God, who would protect them without the aid of Pharaoh. It is probable, that Hezekiah and a remnant did so, and for their sakes the city was spared: but many would not take this counsel: they were resolved, if possible, to have swift horses from Egypt, (Note, 31:1—3.) that in case of danger they might flee away: and God declared that they should flee away and be pursued by swift enemies: and be so terrified, that a single assailant should put to flight a thousand of them, and five would suffice to rout their whole army; (Notes, Deut. 32:29—31.) till

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. All they, who will not ask and follow the counsel of God, are "children of rebellion;" and so are they, who attempt to secure themselves against impending dangers, without relying on his mercy and protection, and obeying his commandments: nor is there any way of avoiding the dreadful consequences of "adding sin to sin," but by making the Saviour's righteousness our covering, and seeking the sanctification of the Holy Spirit in fervent believing prayer.—But men have always been prone to depend on "an arm of flesh," and to "lean to their own understandings," rather than to ask counsel of God, and trust in him: yet the event continually shows their wisdom to be folly, their strength weakness, and their confidence "a refuge of lies;" and that shame and misery are the consequences of departing from God.—More trouble and expense are almost always bestowed about such things as cannot profit, but must be a reproach to those who adhere to them; than are employed in the service of God: nay, multitudes not only follow the examples of such as have been ruined by their evil courses; but even seek pleasure in those things, which have already caused themselves much trouble and anguish; and expect happiness from those persons who are themselves most miserable!

V. 8-17. When sinners, having been fairly and repeatedly warned and instructed, refuse to hearken, their guilt becomes peculiarly aggravated; and they should recollect, that all their rebellions are written in a book before God, to be produced against them at the last day.—Hypocrisy is as provoking to God as profaneness; and they who reject and despise the divine law, will derive no advantage from the gospel. Yet a large majority of nominal Christians, and Protestants, nay, zealous professors of evangelical doctrine, prefer soothing instructions! Numbers dislike the holiness of God, and his holy precepts, ordinances, and servants; but they have collected some evangelical notions; they cannot be contented to keep entirely from the preaching of the gospel; and they would prefer such ministers as are of reputation in the church, if they could but induce them to accommodate. They would therefore in part, blind their eyes and stop their mouths, that instead of "right things, they might speak smooth things and prophecy deceits." But, when neither persuasions nor reproaches can effect this; then they "heap to themselves teachers" of another kind, and revile and oppose the faithful servants of God. (Note, 2 Tim. 4:1-5.) For they would induce ministers to leave the direct way of truth and holiness, to walk in crooked paths, and to countenance them, or at least to leave them unmolested, in their iniquities; and to speak little of the justice and holiness of God, but to dwell upon his mercy and grace alone, and the privileges of professed believers indiscriminately; without being particular about duties, precepts, self-deception, hypocrisy, or the wrath to come. But we must not so much as abstain from the use of one expressive scriptural phrase to humour men of this description: we must say, "Thus saith the Holy One of Israel," "whether they will hear or forbear;" and "if they despise this word," and trust in hypocrisy and iniquity; they must be plainly told, that sudden and inevitable destruction is before them. For those who will not repent and turn to God, welcome his salvation, and seek happiness in his favour and service, should be explicitly and solemnly warned that there is no other way, and that all their own devices will hasten and aggravate their ruin.

V. 18-22. The same word which speaks terror to hypocrites and infidels, gives encouragement to the broken-hearted, earnestly invites sinners to seek the Lord, and ensures the safety of the church. It is not "for us to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power;" but he assuredly waits his own time of being gracious to his church, and terminating her bondage; and he always waits on his mercy-seat, to be gracious to all who come to him by faith in Jesus Christ. It is his most glorious prerogative to show mercy; he knows how, when, and on whom, to confer his special favours; and "happy are they who wait for him." His people, who dwell in his church below, often weep for their sins and sorrows; but they will soon arrive at the Zion above, and then they will weep no more for ever. Even now he is very gracious to them, and ready to hear their fervent prayers, and grant their largest desires: and they would have more comfort, as well as holiness, if they were more instant and constant in prayer.—They, who know the value of spiritual blessings, will be reconciled to "bread of affliction and water of affliction," should this be their lot; especially if their "teachers be not removed into corners," and they be favoured with unrestrained access to the public means of grace. Many of us have the blessing here promised: may we be thankful for it, and duly improve it! and let those who are poor, sick, or in pain, or in any other way kept from the public means of grace, diligently use such as are yet afforded them; and consolation proportioned to their need shall not be withheld.—They, who drive the ministers of Christ into corners, are answerable for all the heresies and iniquities, which in consequence inundate the church and the world.—But let us remember, that we need the teaching of the Holy Spirit, as well as that of the word of God: and those who simply depend on his promises, and beg to be guided in the ways of truth and holiness, shall, by means of an enlightened understanding, a spiritual taste and a tender, well-informed conscience, hear, as it were, "a voice behind them, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when they are about to turn to the right hand or to the left." And this must appear to be no delusion; as they evidently learn to hate the most gainful iniquities, and to renounce every idol and sin with determined abhorrence.

V. 23-33. All temporal good shall be added to those who first seek heavenly blessings; (Note, Matt. 6.33, 34.) and who desire, above all other things, that the good seed of the word may be sown and watered in their hearts, and produce a large increase; and whose prayer is, that it may be more and more fast and plentiful, and that they may be enabled to live up to the full enjoyment of their largest privileges. If this be our happiness, let us continue to pray for the accomplishment of these most extensive and glorious predictions; that rivers of gospel-grace may water all the nations, which have hitherto proved inaccessible to it: that the towers of every antichrist, and of Satan, may fall, and his cause on earth be ruined; that the church may shine more resplendent with the glorious light of Christ "the Sun of Righteousness;" that he may shine with inexpressible splendour through all the regions of the earth; and that every breach of his people may be closed, and every wound healed. This approaching period will be as terrible to the enemies of God, as delightful to his people. Then his glorious name, and heavy indignation, and powerful arm executing his threatened vengeance, will suddenly come upon them, as a devouring fire or an overwhelming inundation; will reach them in the most distant regions and closest recesses, and cover them with disappointment, vexation, and anguish; whilst his people shall abound in songs of joyful praise.—Every oppressor, by whom the Lord has corrected his church, will perish like the Assyrian monarch: and every place, that has groaned beneath the rod of persecution, shall be filled with rejoicing. But let sinners of every rank remember, that, persisting in iniquity, they cannot escape the wrath of God. For Tophet is of old ordained for the devil, and his angels and subjects; yea, for ungodly kings and princes, as well as inferior sinners: it is prepared capacious enough to contain all the nations that forget God; the wicked will themselves be the incombustible fuel of that unquenchable fire; and the wrath of God, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it. (Note, Mark 9:43-50.) Let sinners then flee for refuge to Christ; that they may be safe and happy, when destruction from the Almighty shall sweep away all the workers of iniquity.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXI. V. 1. This chapter coincides with the beginning and conclusion of the preceding one. (Notes, 30:1-7, 15-17.) The Israelites had formed a treaty with Egypt, and the Jews were disposed to do the same: but wo to those of either nation, who confided in that people for chariots, horses, and horsemen; by which they were induced to neglect looking to God, and seeking help from him, from inquiring of him, and relying on his power and mercy. "The Lord had commanded the Israelites never to return to Egypt, lest they should forget the benefit of their redemption; and lest they should be corrupted with the superstition and idolatry of the Egyptians, and so forsake God." (Note, Deut. 17:16.) These considerations rendered alliances with Egypt peculiarly criminal: but confidence in men, of whatever nation, is departure from God. (Note, Jer. 17:5-8.)

V. 2, 3. The Israelites relied on the wisdom and policy of the Egyptians, as well as on their forces: but ought they not to have remembered, that the Lord also was wise, yea, infinitely superior in wisdom? And having denounced their destruction for iniquity, he would not call back his word, and could easily find means to effect his purpose. For "the Egyptians are men" (Adam) "not God;" they were but feeble, dying, sinful men, and their horses were mere animals. they could not therefore resist him and his "ministering spirits;" but would fall down, and fail, and perish, along with those, whom they vainly endeavoured to assist. (Marg. Ref. k-n. Notes, 20:2-6, 2 Kings 19:9-13.)

V. 4, 5. The Lord himself would undertake to defend

Zion against the Assyrians; so that the Jews would not have the least need for help from Egypt. He would no more regard the number or clamour of the Assyrians, than a young lion does the noise of the shepherds, who would drive him from his prey. (Marg. Ref. o Notes, Gen. 49:8, 9, Jer. 49:19, 20.) And as birds defend their young by hovering over their nests, so would JEHOVAH defend and deliver Jerusalem. (Marg. Ref. Note, 10:12-14.) Notwithstanding the sins of the Jews, he would pass over them, or step between them and the evil that threatened them, and not allow the destroying angel to smite them along with the Assyrians; even as he protected the houses of Israel, when he destroyed the first-born of Egypt. (Notes, Ez. 12:11-14, 22-30.)

Passing over, &c. (5) "Leaping forward, and rescuing her." The same word is made use of here, which is used upon that occasion; and which gave the name to the feast, which was instituted in commemoration of that deliverance (from Egypt) פסח. "JEHOVAH will pass through to smite the Egyptians, and when he seeth the blood on the lintels, and on the two side-posts, JEHOVAH will spring forward over (or before) the door... and will not suffer the destroyer to come into your houses to smite you." Ex. 12:23. Here are manifestly two agents, with which the notion of passing over is not consistent; for that supposes but one agent: the two agents are the destroying angel passing through to smite every house; and JEHOVAH the Protector, keeping pace with him; and who seeing the door of the Israelite marked with the blood, the token prescribed, leaps forward, throws himself with a sudden motion in the way, ... and covers and protects the house against the destroying angel, and suffers him not to smite it. In this way of considering the action, the beautiful similitude of the bird protecting her young, answers exactly to the application of the deliverance in Egypt; as the mother bird spreads her wings to cover her young, throws herself before them, and opposes the rapacious bird that assaults her, so shall JEHOVAH protect Jerusalem. Sp. Louth.

V. 6, 7. The whole race of Israel had deeply revolted from God, with many and great aggravations. The ten tribes were doomed to destruction: but the Jews, being yet spared, were exhorted to return unto him; and it was also predicted, that their preservation from the Assyrians would be attended with zeal against idolatry, and contempt of the idols which they had made, as an occasion of sin, even those which were formed of silver or gold. (Marg. Ref. x, y. Notes, 2:19-21, 30:22.)

V. 8, 9. The power and army of the Assyrian conqueror fell, neither by the sword of the powerful Egyptian, nor that of the despised Jew, but by a mighty angel. (Marg. Ref. z. Notes, 2 Kings 19:35-37.) Sennacherib fled from that invisible sword, which had destroyed his choicest troops, and made haste to Nineveh his strong-hold, or rock; whither divine vengeance pursued him: his princes also, who escaped, were frightened away, because of that ensign which the Lord displayed over Zion. The fire on his altar, consuming the atoning sacrifices, was the protection of his people, and as a furnace to purify them; but it menaced the destruction of all their enemies. (Notes, 4:34, 30:29-32, 33:10-14, Zech. 2:1-5, Mal. 3:1-4, 4:1.) comfort from heaven, shows that we are not duly sensible of their vanity and insufficiency, and of the all-sufficiency of God; and that we do not fully and constantly believe, that he will fulfil both his promises and threatenings. But he will assuredly arise against "the house of evil-doers," and against "the help of those that work iniquity;" and they will all fall together before his outstretched arm. The Lion of the tribe of Judah will appear for the defence of his church, and he will not be abased for the noise of those numbers, who encourage each other against him: but no emblems can fully express his terrible majesty, and his tender mercy, in caring for his people. (Note, Rev. 5:5-7.) Let sinners then take warning by the doom, and not follow the steps, of those who have perished in their sins: let us give him our whole heart and renounce all our idols, and he will abundantly compensate all our losses. But terror and destruction pursue and will overtake all the ungodly; and those dispensations and perfections of God, which ensure the sanctification of believers, will consume all unbelievers as in a furnace of fire. (Note, Heb. 12:26-29.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXII. V. 1, 2. This chapter seems to be a detached prophecy, delivered at the close of the reign of Ahaz, and referring to the prosperous reign of pious Hezekiah; though some think, that it was delivered about the time of Sennacherib's invasion. Ahaz and his princes had ruled very wickedly, but a king was about to mount the throne, who would "reign in righteousness," employ upright magistrates, and protect the people, both from internal oppression by his equitable administration, and from external invaders by his faith and prayers.—But this interpretation falls immensely short of the unprecedented and most evangelical language employed by the prophet; which cannot possibly be explained in its obvious meaning of any other than Emmanuel, "God manifested in the flesh," without enervating the terms used, in a degree which would, in no other case, be admitted. Christ, our righteous King, and those of his true disciples who exercise authority under him, in church or state, are evidently intended. He alone is the "Man," who shelters sinners from the wrath of God, the temptations of Satan, and the rage of the world; having sustained the storm himself. The consolations and graces of his Spirit are "as rivers of water in this dry land;" and as the overhanging rock affords the most complete and refreshing shade from the noonday sun, to the traveller wearied in the sultry desert; so his power, truth, and love, yield the believer the most complete protection and refreshment in this weary land, through which he is travelling to heaven. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 16-20. 7. 14. 8:5-8. 9:6, 7. 25:3-5. 35:6, 7. Ps. 72:1-3. 146:3-6. Jer. 17:5-8.) 'The shadow of a great projecting rock is the most refreshing that is possible in a hot country; not only as most perfectly excluding the rays of the sun, but also having in itself a natural coolness, which it reflects and communicates to every thing about it.' Sp. Louth.

V. 3, 4. Hezekiah's care to have his people duly instructed would render those, who had any spiritual discernment, clear-sighted; whereas before, they were enveloped in uncertainty, through the prevalence of ignorance and error. The deliverance from the Assyrians would render the people more attentive to instruction, and their minds more capable of receiving it. Even the inconsiderate and imprudent would apply their hearts to understand divine knowledge: and they, who before could scarcely lisp a broken sentence on these subjects, would learn to speak of them fluently and pertinent-ly.—But, the superior knowledge, and spiritual gifts and graces of Christ's kingdom are chiefly intended; and not without reference to his miracles and those of his apostles. ^{God} shall plentifully afford men the light of his truth, and give them ^{grace} to make a good use of the instructions he vouchsafes unto them. Those that are weak in faith shall come to more perfect degrees of knowledge. . . . The most rude and illiterate, such as could not speak so as to be understood, shall discourse, clearly and intelligibly, of God and of their duty. . . . That this promise chiefly relates to the times of the gospel will appear by comparing it with 29:18. 35:5. If it be objected that other prophecies foretell the blinding of the Jews under the gospel; we may answer with St. Paul, that "the children of the promise are accounted" for the true seed of Israel. . . . The text may be fitly expounded of the conversion of barbarous nations, and their giving praises to God in their several languages. Louth. (Notes, 29:17-19. 30:26. 35:5-7.)

V. 5. "There shall be so right a discerning of all things, that virtues shall not pass for vices, nor vices be mistaken for virtues; but men shall be esteemed as they are." Bp. Hall. (Note, 5:20.)—"The fool shall no longer be called honourable." Bp. Louth. "Nabal shall no more be called Nadib." Such a man as Nabal shall no more be called a prince, or a man of nobility and liberality. (Note, 6-8.) Under wicked monarchs, base men are often preferred, and panegyrized by hiring flatterers; but under wise and pious princes they are disgraced and exposed. This was no doubt the case, in some degree, under good Hezekiah; but the subjects of Christ are taught to form the most accurate estimate of characters and actions, without regard to outward rank or distinction; (Marg. Ref. Note, Ps. 15:4.) and the time will come ere long, when this rule will be far more generally adhered to, than hitherto it has been.

V. 6-8. A man of base and selfish temper will speak such things as tend to deceive and corrupt others: his thoughts will be employed to contrive the iniquity which his heart desires: and to cover it with hypocrisy, or to excuse it by principles subversive of the divine law, and destructive of piety. Perhaps perjury is meant by "error against the Lord." (Note, 1 Kings 21:8-14.)—Thus, instead of relieving the poor, he will devise ways still further to distress them, either to enrich himself by oppression, or for the pleasure of domineering. When such churls get into authority, they employ instruments, and listen to counsellors, like themselves; and the magistrates delegated by them crush the poor by false pretences, even when they have evident reason and equity on their side. (Notes, 1:21-24. Job 22:5-14. 24:2-12. Jer. 5:26-29. Ez. 22:12. Am. 2:6-8. 8:1-10. Mic. 2:1-3, 8-10. 6:10-15. 7:1-4.) Probably this applied to Ahaz and his princes, as what follows did to Hezekiah and his judges. For Hezekiah being of a liberal and equitable disposition, and influenced by the grace of God, devised liberal things for the relief of the poor, and this tended to his own establishment. (Notes, Job 29:12-17. 31:13-23. Ps. 112:5, 6.)—But the character of Christ, and of true Christians, and the use which he teaches them to make of authority or wealth, as opposed to the conduct of avaricious oppressors, best illustrate the passage.

The vile person will speak villany. (6) "The fool will still utter folly." A sort of proverbial expression." Bp. Louth. (1 Sam. 24:13. 25:25. Note, 1 Sam. 25:7-17.)

V. 9-14. These verses are commonly interpreted of the troubles which came upon Judah by the Assyrian invasion; yet some do allow that they also refer to the Babylonish captivity, though out of the order of time; and indeed it is plain, that they speak of far more entire and durable desolations, than Sennacherib occasioned. But if we suppose that Hezekiah's reign was predicted, as typical of the kingdom of Christ; we must naturally conclude, that the consequences of the Jews neglecting to profit by it were also typical of those which followed from that nation's rejection of the Redeemer. Thus the transition from the preceding part of the chapter is easy; and we consider these verses as predicting all the troubles of Judah terminating in the Babylonish captivity, and typifying all the miseries of that nation from the days of Christ, till the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and their consequent dispersion.—It seems, that the women of Jerusalem, in those days, were peculiarly vain, luxurious, dissipated, and wanton: and regardless of true religion. (Notes, 3:16-26. Jer. 44:15-25.) The prophet therefore especially addressed them, and assured them that many days, and even years, of trouble awaited them: for the provision for their mirth and indulgence would cease; various afflictions would deprive them of their ornaments, and constrain them to gird themselves with the meanest attire; and it would be their wisdom, previously, to gird themselves as penitents with sackcloth, in preparation for the storm, or, if possible to avert it. (Note, Deut. 28:43-57.) For they with the other inhabitants of the city, would have to lament the loss of the milk, corn, and cattle, as well as wine: the whole land would be overrun with thorns and briars; nay, the places devoted to festivity in Jerusalem, now rather a joyous than a holy city, (Note, 22:2, 3.) would be thus desolated: yea, the palaces, forts, and towers, being forsaken of their multitude, would for ages become dens for wild beasts, the pleasant abode for wild asses, and a pasture for flocks. (Notes, 5:5, 6. 6:11, 12. 7:17-25. 24:1-12.)—The word rendered "they shall lament," is masculine; and probably refers among other things to the weeping of the infants, when their mothers, pinched by famine, and bowed down with distress, could no longer give them suck.—"Ophel," (the word translated forts) "was a part of mount Zion, rising higher than the rest, at the eastern extremity, near to the temple, a little to the south of it. (Mic. 4:8. Heb.)—It was naturally strong by its situation, and had a wall of its own, by which it was separated from the rest of Zion." Bp. Louth.

Many days and years. (10) "Years upon years shall ye be disquieted, O ye careless ones." Bp. Louth.

V. 15. The connexion between the preceding part of this prophecy and that which here follows, is very obscure, on any other interpretation, except that above given. The Spirit might in some measure be poured out, exciting the Jews to repentance and prayer, before their restoration from captivity: by the rebuilding of Jerusalem, and the revival of religion there, the wilderness became a fruitful field; and their permanent renouncing of idolatry, and adhering to the worship of JEHOVAH, may be intended by the fruitful field being accounted for a forest: i. e. the best state of religion, in preceding times, was comparatively inconsiderable. But this seems by no means answerable to the energy of the language. (Note, 29:17-19.) No previous desolations of Jerusalem or Judah continued until a remarkable "pouring out of the Spirit from on high;" but the present dispersion of the Jews, and "Jerusalem's being trodden down by the Gentiles," shall continue till a far more abundant "pouring out of the Spirit," than even on the day of Pentecost, or at the calling of the Gentiles shall be vouchsafed. Then, indeed, "the wilderness shall become a fruitful field;" and the state of the church hitherto shall be accounted as a forest, in comparison of the glorious times which shall follow. (Note, Rom. 11:11-15.) This interpretation is adopted, because no events, which have hitherto occurred, exclusively answer to the full import of the terms employed; and it perfectly accords with many other prophecies of the same times. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 44:3-5. Ez. 36:25-27. 37:1-22. 39:21-29. 48:35. Joel 2:28-32. 3:18-21. Zech. 12:9-14.)—"Pouring out of God's Spirit" doth likewise signify the plentiful effusion of his grace; (Joel 2:28. Zech. 12:10.) and if we take the phrase in this sense, the prophecy will belong to that restoration of the Jews, which we are to expect in the latter ages of the world.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

The doom of Sennacherib, 1. The prayers of the pious Jews, 2. The haughty invader, when actuating the nations, becomes a spoil to the invaded, 3, 4. God exalted, and Jerusalem reformed and established, by means of Hezekiah's wisdom and piety, 5, 6. The Jews dismayed and distressed, by the ravages and menaces of the invaders whom God determines to destroy, that all men may know his might, 7—13. The terror of the hypocrites, contrasted with the confidence of believers, 14—16. The happy event of these dangers and terrors; and the security of Zion, under the protection of God, 17—24.

WO to thee that spoilest, and thou wast not spoiled; and dealest treacherously, and they dealt not treacherously with thee! when thou shalt cease to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled; and when thou shalt make an end to deal treacherously, they shall deal treacherously with thee.

2 O LORD, be gracious unto us; we have waited for thee: be thou their arm every morning, our salvation also in the time of trouble.

3 At the noise of the tumult the people fled; at the lifting up of thyself the nations were scattered.

4 And your spoil shall be as the gathering of the caterpillar: as the running to and fro of locusts shall he run upon thee.

5 The LORD is exalted; for the dwelleth on high: he hath filled Zion with judgment and righteousness.

6 And wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times, and the strength of thy salvation: the fear of the LORD is his treasure.

7 Behold, their valiant ones shall cry without: the ambassadors of peace shall weep bitterly.

8 The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth: he hath broken the covenant, he hath despised the cities, he regardeth no man.

9 The earth mourneth and languisheth: Lebanon is ashamed and hewn down: Sharon is like a wilderness; and Bashan and Carmel shake off their fruits.

10 Now will I rise, saith the LORD; now will I be exalted; now will I lift up myself.

11 Ye shall conceive chaff, ye shall bring forth stubble: your breath, as fire, shall devour you.

12 And the people shall be as the burnings of lime; as thorns cut up shall they be burned in the fire.

14 The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites. Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?

supplications, we may be confident that the glorious period approaches. Happy are they, who "sow the good seed of the kingdom" in places well watered with these sacred influences; where a large increase may surely be expected. We therefore, who are called "to labour in the word and doctrine," especially should remember, that success as much depends on the fervency of our prayers, as on the faithfulness of our preaching; and far more than it does on our learning, or eloquence, or ingenuity. Let us then pray without ceasing for the blessing; and we shall find that "our labour is not in vain in the Lord."

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXIII. V. 1. This chapter forms a distinct prophecy, relating chiefly to the Assyrian invasion. "And could a translation be made of it, that should come up to the original, it would appear to be as noble a piece of poetry, as is to be found in the most admired writings of the ancients." Louth.—Sennacherib, not having received any provocation, and urged on entirely by rapacity and ambition, had plundered the neighbouring nations; and he had treacherously violated his treaty with Hezekiah, after having taken all his treasures as the price of peace. (Notes, 2 Kings 18:7—17.) But he would soon be deprived of power to spoil or to deceive; and then his camp would be plundered by the Jews; and he would be most treacherously dealt with by his sons, who would murder him in the temple of his idol. (Notes, 23:24, 10:12—14, 2 Kings 19:35—37.) "The prophet addresses himself to Sennacherib, briefly, but strongly and elegantly, expressing the injustice of his ambitious designs, and the sudden disappointment of them." Bp. Louth.

V. 2. The prophet, for himself and other believers in Judah, interrupted his predictions, by this expressive ejaculation; intimating that prayer would be the most effectual weapon against the Assyrian invader. He entreated the Lord to be gracious to his people, who expected help from him according to his promise; and that he would continually strengthen those who managed their affairs; and thus save the nation in the approaching hour of trouble.—Or the change of person, ("their arm,") may mean, "the arm of all who trust in thee, and wait for thee." (Notes, Ps. 25:2, 3.)—"Every morning," or speedily, "God shall help, and that right early;" or "at the appearing of the morning." (Notes, Ps. 46: 47.)

V. 3, 4. The Lord himself seems here to address the Assyrian king. At the rumour of his tumultuous invasion, and his proud and boasting menaces, the nations whom he attacked were put to flight and scattered. But Hezekiah and his subjects would gather all the spoil of his army, as caterpillars strip plants of their verdure; or as locusts, running to and fro, destroy all the produce of the earth. (Note, Joel 2:18—20.) This aptly represents the eagerness of the Jews, each for himself, to seize some part of the spoil left in the deserted camp, till the whole was carried off. (Notes, 2 Kings 18:17—20, 2 Chr. 20:22—25. Ps. 68:11, 12.)

V. 5, 6. Sennacherib exalted himself, and was for a time very great and prosperous; but JEHOVAH was exalted above him, and above all, upon the lofty throne of his universal kingdom. He had chosen Zion for his earthly residence; and, by prospering Hezekiah's attempts for reformation, and raising up many to concur with him, he had "filled Zion with judgment and righteousness;" so that, compared with other cities, it was "a holy city." The wisdom and knowledge which God had conferred on Hezekiah and his princes, were the stability of those perilous times, and tended more to secure Jerusalem, than the strongest bulwarks; and after Hezekiah had been deprived of his gold and silver, his piety proved a far more valuable treasure, and caused him and his people to be enriched with the spoils of the enemy.

V. 7—9. These verses beautifully describe the terror and distress which preceded the deliverance of Jerusalem from the Assyrians. Their most valiant captains and soldiers cried out with dismay and deep concern; the ambassadors, who went to solicit peace, wept bitterly at finding the invader inexorable; no one ventured to travel, so that the highways were like a desert. (Note, Judg. 5:6, 7.) Sennacherib had broken his covenant with Hezekiah, and he despised the feeble opposition made to him by the defended cities, which he ravaged without mercy, regarding no man; and the most populous and fruitful regions resembled what Lebanon would be, if all its cedars were hewn down, and its glory torn from it; and Sharon and Carmel, if made a desert, and their spontaneous productions left to shake without any to gather them. (Notes, 10:7—11, 28—34, 2 Kings 18:19—37, 19:1—4, 23, 24.)

V. 10—13. In this extremity the Lord declared in a most solemn and sublime manner, that he would arise and exalt himself. He would render all the designs and expectations of the invaders abortive; their transient success would only fit them as fuel for the fire, and their own breath, or their blasphemies against him, would kindle the fire, which would burn them as stones are burnt to lime, or thorns to ashes. Thus the event would be so remarkable, that all nations, far and near, might properly, and ought to be, called upon to notice it, as an undeniable proof of the almighty power of Israel's God. (Notes, 10:15—19, 14:24—27, 29:5—8, 2 Kings 19:27—37. Dan. 4:1—3. Nah. 1:7—15.)

V. 14. After all the pious labours of Hezekiah and the prophets and princes, who cordially helped him, there were many profane and hypocritical persons in Jerusalem, who were extremely alarmed with the prospect of impending destruction; and they seemed not only to have dreaded the fire, which they supposed would burn the city and their habitations; but those everlasting burnings, which they had heard of as the punishment of the wicked hereafter.—Or rather, the tremendous slaughter of the Assyrians, in answer to the prayers of the king and the prophet, would make those, who had despised the authority of the one, and the word of the other, fear similar, or even more dreadful vengeance. "They that could not bear the thoughts of a mortal enemy falling upon them with all his force; how will they bear the weight of God's wrath, when he shall declare himself their enemy, and set his terror in array against them?" Louth. (Notes, Matt. 10:27,28. Mark 9:43-50.)

V. 15, 16. The prophet seems here to avail himself of the terror of the ungodly Jews, that he might excite them to seek the privileges of the righteous; and he describes the character and the safety of the consistent believer. He habitually acts with integrity, in his whole conduct towards God and his neighbour; his words are sincere, punctual, and faithful: he despises the largest gain of fraud or oppression: instead of grasping the bribe which might be offered him, to induce his connivance at injustice, he shakes his hands from it, and dreads and shuns it as a viper: he stops his ear from every proposal of violence and bloodshed, and closes his eyes from beholding wickedness, as one who detests it. (Hab. 1:13).—This was the character of Hezekiah in private and public. This placed him and his helpers on high out of the reach of the invaders, and secured them, as in natural fastnesses and impregnable strong-holds; and this preserved them likewise from the famine which had threatened them. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Chr. 31:20,21. Ps. 15: 24,3-6.)

V. 17-19. The pious Jews had deeply grieved to see their king in sackcloth and greatly abased: but they would speedily behold him in his royal robes and honoured by God and all the people. They were shut up in Jerusalem as in a prison; (Note, 7-9). but they would soon be allowed to visit the most remote corners of the land, in entire security. And then they would meditate with satisfaction on those events, which had so greatly alarmed them. The officers of the Assyrian monarch, who mustered the troops, dispensed their provisions, raised contributions, or weighed the gold and silver which they had taken, or made observations on the towers of Jerusalem, in order to form the plan of assault, would suddenly disappear and be no more. Or the secretaries, tax-gatherers, and engineers, (as we say,) of Hezekiah, may be intended, who had bestowed much pains to provide against a siege, but would soon appear to have been totally useless; as the Lord had not employed them, but an angel, to destroy the Assyrian army. (Notes, 1 Cor. 1:20-31.) And the Jews would no longer see their fierce enemies, whose very language, not being understood, had rendered them the more formidable and implacable. (Notes, 28:9-11. Deut. 28:49-57. y. 49. Jer. 5:15-18).—Stammering. (19) "Ridiculous." Marg. Notes, 1 Cor. 14:6-12,20-25.)

V. 20-22. The city, which God had chosen for the centre of his worship, and in which the Jews had for ages observed all their solemnities, was it probable, when this prophecy was delivered, threatened with an immediate siege: but it would soon become "a quiet habitation." The Assyrians thought they could as easily take and destroy it, as a man removes a tent: but it would not suffer the least injury. For the glorious JEHOVAH, the acknowledged Judge, Lawgiver, and King of Israel, would be the almighty Protector, of his temple and his worshippers; surrounding them by his powerful presence, as with large rivers and winding streams, into which no galley, or ship of war, belonging to their enemies, should enter. (Notes, Ps. 46:4,5).—He shall give Jerusalem protection without danger. In other cities and countries, where they have the commodity of large rivers and inlets from the sea, there may be some peril of advantage to an enemy; but here shall be no such matter. Bp. Hall.—The security and privileges of the Christian church, especially in those glorious times predicted; and a future period, when Israel and Judah shall be converted, and reinstated in their own land; seem here principally intended: for Jerusalem was never, after Isaiah's days, long together preserved from hostile invasions, and it has been repeatedly taken down as a tent. (Note, Ez. 48:35.)

V. 23, 24. The mention of gallant ships led the prophet to consider the ruin of the Assyrian army, as a vessel wrecked in a storm. Their tacklings were all driven away, the mast was blown down, and could not be properly strengthened; their efforts were vain, their ruin unavoidable; and, being cast upon the hostile strand, their cargo became plunder for the inhabitants. (Note, Ez. 27:26-36.) On this occasion even the lame would appropriate something of the spoil: and sickness would not prevent the people in general from coming to share the booty. In short God had pardoned the sin of his people, and all blessings were consequent upon it. (Notes, Ps. 32:1,2. 103:3,4. Matt. 9:2-8. P. O. 1-8.) This last verse leads our thoughts, not only to the most glorious state of the church on earth; but to heaven itself, whither no sickness or trouble shall find admission. [†]It is plain, that Hezekiah, by his treaty with Sennacherib, by which he agreed to pay him three hundred talents of silver, and thirty talents of gold, had stripped himself of his whole treasure: he not only gave him all the silver and gold that was in his own treasury, and in that of the temple, but was even forced to cut off the gold from the doors of the temple, and from the pillars, with which he had himself overlaid them, to satisfy the demands of the king of Assyria: but after the destruction of the Assyrian army, we find that he had "exceeding much riches," and that he "made himself treasures for silver and gold, and for precious stones, &c." (2 Chr. 32:27.) This cannot be otherwise accounted for, than by the prodigious spoil that was taken on the destruction of the Assyrian army. Bp. Louth. (Notes, 34. 2 Kings 18:14-16. 2 Chr. 32:27-29.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. Unprovoked rapine and treachery are peculiarly hateful to God, who will punish those that are guilty of them with marked severity.—When the wicked have filled up the measure of their sins, they frequently are spoiled of their treasures, and defrauded to their ruin, by others as wicked as themselves.—They, whose condign punishment is connected with the answer of the prayers of the Lord's people, are in a most perilous case: for he will graciously defend and uphold all those, who call upon and wait for him, and will be their Salvation in every time of trouble. And, as we have trials and services for every day, we should "every morning" beg of our God to be "our Arm and our Strength."—The scourges of the world cause great consternation by their tumult and prowess; but at length they fall an easy prey to their enemies. For the Lord is exalted above all in heaven and earth: it is his glory to abase the proud, and to take care of Zion; and in proportion, as any part of the visible church is replenished by him with truth and holiness, he will delight to watch over it for good. Wisdom, and knowledge, and righteousness, form the stability of our souls, in all persecutions and temptations; and render us steadfast and unmoveable in the ways of God: and true piety is the only treasure which can never be plundered or spent. The same wisdom, justice, and piety establish the honour and safety of nations; and render the throne of princes in a measure like that of the Lord. Yet even his servants are liable to many fears and distresses; especially when, they at all lean to carnal dependences, or cleave to earthly objects. To wean them from these, and to chastise them for their Predictions of dreadful vengeance, and perpetual desolations, against the media and the enemies of the church, 1-15. The certainty of the prophecy, 16, 17.

COME near, ye nations, to hear; and hearken, ye people: let the earth hear, and all that is therein; the world, and all things that come forth of it.

For the indignation of the LORD is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies: he hath utterly destroyed them, he hath delivered them to the slaughter.

Their slain also shall be cast out, and their stink shall come up of their carcases, and the mountains shall be melted with their blood.

fully, ungodly men are permitted to prosper, and to menace them with dreadful calamities. Then the very champions of the church, and her "ambassadors of peace," are apt to be dejected and alarmed; as they see the highways of Zion unfrequented, and all around ready to faint, by reason of the insults of persecutors and infidels, who have no regard either to God or man. But when all other confidences fail the believer, and when the enemies of the church think their victory secure; the Lord himself will arise, and, in some unthought of manner, turn the devices of the wicked into confusion, and consume them with the fire of his indignation; that all men may hear, and acknowledge his might, and fear before him.

V. 14-24. Sinners and hypocrites in Zion have cause to expect more tremendous vengeance, than even avowed enemies; and what fearfulness will surprise them, when they shall at length appear before the tribunal of God! when the Judge shall frown, and denounce sentence against them, and the pit of hell shall open wide to receive them! It behooves all therefore to inquire seriously, who they are, that "shall dwell with everlasting burnings;" and whether we have that genuine godliness, which proves that "Jesus hath delivered us from the wrath to come." For it is not a tolerable evil to which sinners are exposed, but the everlasting wrath of almighty God: and many, in congregations which are favoured with the best means of grace, will, to their own amazement, sink from under them into these everlasting burnings. "Oh, that men were wise, that they would know these things, and consider their latter end!" For there is a Refuge provided: sinners of all kinds are called upon to flee to it; none are refused admission; and every blessing of salvation is freely bestowed on all, who ask in humble believing prayer. Yet, unless men show that they have received the atonement and reconciliation, by a life of piety, integrity, sincerity, and superiority to the love of filthy lucre, they must be considered as hypocrites in Zion.—The believer is placed in an honourable and secure station; he is safe in time, and for eternity; and whoever wants, "bread shall be given him, his water shall be sure." He now by faith beholds the King in his glory and beauty, and anticipates the joys of heaven: and ere long his faith shall be changed for vision, his hope for full fruition. He can contemplate with gratitude those awful subjects which fill the ungodly with terror and dismay; and he needs not fear any of his crafty and subtle enemies, whom he shall shortly see no more for ever.—Our holy city, the church, in which the ordinances of God are administered, though often assailed by fierce and barbarous foes, will become at length a quiet habitation: and will no longer be exposed to the insults, revilings, or menaces of proud oppressors. And though her humble appearance be despised by them; yet "not one of her stakes shall ever be removed, nor any of her cords broken," by all the united efforts of earth and hell. But the Lord himself will be her Glory, Beauty, Riches, and Happiness: and every one, who submits to him as King, obeys him as a Lawgiver, and waits for him as a Judge, will surely partake of his complete salvation. For Immanuel reigns over his redeemed people, and as they are become willing subjects, so he is their sure Protector; while all, that refuse to have him to reign over them, will make shipwreck of their souls.—The poorest and feeblest believer will reap immense advantage from the disappointed devices of his enemies. He that bloteth out our transgressions, will heal our souls, and bring us to that land, the blessed inhabitants of which shall no more complain of sickness, pain, or sorrow, for ever. Let us then patiently endure our transient afflictions, and "both hope, and quietly wait the salvation of God."

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXIV. V. 1. This chapter and he next form one prophecy: and the whole of this is most tremendously descriptive of the greatest carnage and desolation which can be conceived or expressed. Some interpreters suppose it to be a general and poetical declaration of God's vengeance upon sinners, at the day of judgment and in the eternal world; and, as it is frequently the case, there are several images peculiarly applicable to those events.

4 And shall the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll: and all their hosts shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree.

5 For my sword shall be bathed in heaven: behold it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment.

6 The sword of the LORD is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams: for the LORD hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea.

7 And the unicorns shall come down with them,

(Note, 24:1-12.) But the connexion between these tremendous scenes, and the flourishing state of religion next predicted, as well as many things in the prophecy itself determines us to another interpretation.—The solemn and repeated call to nations, to the peoples, and to the earth, and the world, and every thing in it, to attend, shows that events of immense importance to all mankind are predicted. (Marg. Ref.)—These two chapters make one distinct prophecy; an entire, regular, and beautiful poem, consisting of two parts: the first containing a denunciation of divine vengeance, against the enemies of the people or church of God; the second describing the flourishing state of the church of God, consequent upon the execution of those judgments. ... Among those (the enemies) Edom is particularly specified. ... The Edomites were, together with the rest of the neighbouring nations, ravaged and laid waste by Nebuchadnezzar: ... but this event, as far as we have any account of it in history, seems by no means to come up to the terms of the prophecy, or to justify so high-wrought and so terrible a description. And it is not easy to discover what connexion the extremely flourishing state of the church, or people of God, described in the next chapter, could have with those events, and how the former could be the consequence of the latter, as it is there represented to be. ... It seems therefore reasonable to suppose, with many learned expositors, that this prophecy has a further view to events still future, to some great revolutions to be effected in later times, antecedent to that more perfect state of the kingdom of God upon earth, and serving to introduce it, which the holy Scriptures warrant us to expect. Bp. Lowth.

V. 2. All nations.] That is, all nations and their armies considered as enlisted under the standard of Satan, to war against the church of God. (Marg. Ref.) This may fitly be applied to "the battle of the great day of the Almighty." Rev. 16:14-16. Lowth. "God hath determined in his counsel, and hath given sentence for their destruction." (Notes, 30:27-30. Ps. 149:7-9. Joel 3:1-17. Zech. 14:1-3,12-15. Rev. 16:12-16.)

V. 3-7. The description of vast multitudes slain, and left unburied till they become intolerably offensive; and of human blood shed in such prodigious quantities, as to authorize the strong hyperboles, of the mountains being melted, and the land soaked with it; whilst the dust of the earth is fattened with the fat and flesh of men, suggests most tremendous ideas of these divine judgments: and it impresses the mind with a view of that general and obstinate resistance, which will be made by the nations, at the instigation of Satan, to the setting up of the kingdom of Christ; and of the dreadful judgments, with which that event will at length be ushered in. (Notes, Ez. 39:1-20. Rev. 19:17-21.) The dissolving of the hosts of heaven, represents the surprising revolutions, which will every where take place, in the constitution of kingdoms and states. (Notes, 13:9,10. Jer. 4:19-27. Matt. 24:29-31. Rev. 6:12-17.) The Lord's "sword bathed in heaven," may allude to some method then in use, of burning or tempering armour; and it implies, that the vengeance would be executed according to the wise and righteous purposes of God, and with invincible power.—Idumea, or the land of Edom, was a rival and enemy of the Jews: the prediction might have a partial accomplishment, in the desolations occasioned by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Macedonians, and Romans, in which that district was involved. (Notes, 21:11,12. Jer. 49:7-22. Ez. 25:35. Am. 1:11,12. Ob. Mal. 1:2-5.) But those events had no connexion with that glorious spread of religion next predicted; nor does it appear that they were answerable to such a tremendous description. Idumea may therefore be taken as a general name, denoting the nations inimical to the church, as the Edomites were to the Jews; and for the kingdom of Antichrist in every form.—As "the people of his curse," (peculiarly deserving his wrath and exposed to it), the Lord had devoted them to utter destruction; and would make them a sacrifice at Bozrah, the chief city of Idumea; (Note, 63:1-6.) that is, at the chief residence of Antichrist. The

and the bullock with the bulls; and their land shall be soaked with blood, and their dust made fat with fatness.

8 For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion.

9 And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch.

sword of divine justice will then be satisfied with the fatness and blood of the enemies to God; as when lambs, rams, and goats were slain, and their fat was burnt upon the altar. And not only inferior enemies, but unicorns, bullocks, and bulls will thus be sacrificed in abundance; that is, the proudest and mightiest princes of the world, will there be destroyed by the justice and power of God.—Edom signifies "red," as blood is; and "Bozrah," a vintage, which in the prophetic idiom denotes God's vengeance upon the wicked. 63:3. V. 8. The church has long been oppressed and wasted, by the nations of the earth: but the period approaches, when the controversy between her and her adversaries will be decided; and the Lord will in vengeance recompense them for their injustice and cruelty to his people. (Marg. Ref.)—The injuries also contemptuously done to Israel as a nation shall be avenged. (Notes, Ps. 137:7-9. Jer. 51:6, 7, 20-24, 33. Lam. 4:21, 22. Rev. 6:9-11.)

V. 9-15. These verses relate to the city where the sacrifice before mentioned (5) was to be made, or at least begun. The language is even more emphatical, than what had been used respecting Babylon, an allowed type of anti-Christian Rome. (Notes, 13:19-22. 14:21-23.) And the metaphors are taken from Sodom and Gomorrah: if indeed they be metaphors; but probably they will be literally fulfilled, and Sodom will appear to have been another emblem of that devoted city. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 19:24, 25. Deut. 29:21-25. Rev. 11:7-12.) Perhaps subterranean fire will consume the seat of the papal Antichrist; (indeed plentiful provision is evidently made in that part of the world, for such an event); and a continual burning and rising up of smoke may perhaps mark out the place on which that city stood, to all future ages; whilst all the rest of the neighbourhood may be entirely desolated, without any inhabitant, or any road by which travellers may pass through it. (Notes, Rev. 14:8-11. 18:4-8.) For the Lord will measure it with the line of confusion, and the plummet of emptiness; (the words rendered "without form and void," Notes, Gen. 1:2. 2 Kings 21:13.) and that city, whose nobles, or princes, civil or ecclesiastical, have so long lorded it over other nations, shall no more have any one existing in authority. All her tyranny and magnificence shall come to nothing; whilst noxious weeds, thorns, savage beasts, doleful and ravenous birds, and venomous reptiles, shall inhabit the spot, where her proud towers and palaces have stood: and there meet with no disturbance. (Notes, Rev. 18:20-24. 19:1-6.)

They shall call the nobles, &c. (12.) "The words might more clearly be translated thus: "they shall call," (or summon,) "their nobles; but there shall be no kingdom there." There shall be no sign of any government.' Louth.

V. 16, 17. Men in every age are here called on to examine the prophecies, which relate to these and similar events; assured that they will be exactly fulfilled. The Lord will take care, that all the animals above mentioned shall propagate uninterruptedly, in the place intended. The same Spirit, that inspired the prediction, will take care that it shall be accomplished: and the region, which God himself has allotted them, with the same exactness, as he divided with "the wild beasts of the island, and the satyr shall cry to his fellow; the "screechowl" also shall rest there, and find for herself a place of rest.

16 ¶ Seek ye out of the book of the Lord, and read: no one of these shall fail, none shall want her mate: for my mouth, it hath commanded, and his Spirit, it hath gathered them.

17 And he hath cast the lot for them, and his hand hath divided it unto them by line: they shall possess it for ever, from generation to generation shall they dwell therein.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

All people on the earth are concerned to draw near and attend to the word of God; as all must be judged according to it. Because of men's wickedness, the indignation of the Lord has been on all nations from the beginning: and the history of mankind is little more than a dismal account, how God has given them up to be slaughtered by each other, till the earth has become "a field of blood," a great slaughter-house, and burying-ground of its inhabitants. In these awful events the Lord executes his own righteous, wise, and deep decrees: and all, who perish by the sword of his anger, are sacrifices to his justice, and he is glorified in their punishment.—In the great vicarious sacrifice of his beloved Son, his justice is indeed fully satisfied, and through him he delights and is glorified in showing mercy. But "how will they escape who neglect so great salvation?" The day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of the recompenses of Zion, will come shortly: and imagination cannot reach the horrors of that awful season, to those who shall be found opposing the church of Christ. But if temporal judgments may be rendered so tremendous as thus to baffle description, and confound the powers of imagination itself; what will be the general conflagration, the day of judgment, and the unquenchable fire of hell! There, all the ungodly must for ever be expiating, yet never expiate, the guilt of their sins. Let us then daily "seek out of the book of the Lord" and read; and compare all that we there discover, with the conduct of Providence around us; that we may be more fully convinced of these important truths, and be rendered more earnest and diligent in "seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." What the mouth of the Lord has commanded, his Spirit and providence will perform; he will allow every man his portion among those, with whom he is fitted to associate, and in that place which is congenial to his disposition: and they shall all possess their portion for ever and ever.—Let us likewise observe how the evidence of our holy religion is continually accumulating, as one prophecy after another is accomplished: until the full completion of these awful scenes will introduce more happy days; for which we should hope without fainting, and "pray without ceasing," and exert all our ability and influence to forward and promote.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXV. V. 1, 2. This chapter may have some allusion to the prosperity of Judah, in the days of Hezekiah, at the time when Idumea was ravaged; or to the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity: but without doubt the kingdom of Christ was the grand subject intended by the Holy Spirit.—When the gospel was embraced by the Gentiles, and very great multitudes of spiritual and holy worshippers of God were raised up among them; "the wilderness and solitary place was glad... and the desert rejoiced, and blossomed as the rose." (Notes, 32:15-20. 42:10-12. 49:9-13. 55:12, 13.) Yet an immense proportion of the earth is still a desert; and neither means of grace, nor spiritual worshippers, nor fruits of holiness, are to be found in it. But when the events predicted in the foregoing chapter shall take place, all these countries likewise shall rejoice "because of them." (Notes, Rev. 19:1-8.) The destruction of the antichristian powers will make way for the most rapid and extensive success of the gospel: the benighted Jews and Israelites will be converted; and the gentile world will then blossom abundantly in every part of it, and be filled with joy, and grateful praise to God our Saviour. The glory and excellency of the most favoured and fruitful spots, through all preceding ages, shall be conferred on the most dark and barren regions of the earth: as if the productions of Lebanon, Sharon, and Carmel were transplanted into the parched desert, and made to flourish there. (Notes, Hos. 14:1-9. Zeph. 3:14-20.) For they "shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God," in the face of Jesus Christ; (Note, 2 Cor. 4:5, 6.) and shall learn to fear, love, trust, worship, obey, and imitate him, in righteousness, goodness, and truth.

5 Then [†]the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped.

6 Then [†]shall the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: [†]for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert.

V. 3, 4. The prophet directs the strong in faith, and especially the pastors and teachers, to encourage their weaker brethren, through successive generations, with the prospect of this happy event to all the troubles of the church; that they may not despond on account of what they witness or suffer. (Notes, 40:1-11. 57:14. 62:10-12.) By these animating topics the hands of the weak must be strengthened for the work, the feeble knees confirmed to run the race, and the fearful hearts fortified for the conflict. (Note, Heb. 12:12, 13.) For though the Lord would permit his enemies to prevail for a time: yet he would come at length to execute vengeance on them according to their deservings, and to save his afflicted people. This might be applied to the first coming of Christ to "destroy the works of the devil;" to his coming, in his providence, to destroy the unbelieving Jews and establish his kingdom, and from age to age to rescue his persecuted servants; and to his final coming to judge the world: but it seems immediately to predict the events, which constituted the subject of the foregoing chapter. (Note, 34:8.)

This may be applied to Christ, who is God as well as man. Louth.

V. 5-7. "The miraculous works wrought by our blessed Saviour are so clearly specified, that we cannot avoid making the application: and our Saviour himself has moreover plainly referred to this very passage." Matt. 11:4, 5. He bids the disciples of John to go, and report to their master, the things which they heard and saw: that "the blind received their sight, the lame walked, and the deaf heard;" and leaves it to him to draw the conclusion, in answer to his inquiry, whether he who performed the very works, which the prophets foretold should be performed by the Messiah, was not indeed the Messiah himself. And where are these works so distinctly marked by any of the prophets, as in this place? And how could they be marked more distinctly? To these the strictly literal interpretation of the prophet's words directs us. Bp. Louth.—The miracles of our Lord, here literally predicted, were also emblems of the effect produced by the power of his grace upon the souls of men: when the eyes of the mind are enlightened, the ears that were closed by prejudices are opened to instruction, the helpless sinner is invigorated to walk with joy in the ways of God, and his lips sing and speak praises to his name. (Notes, 17:17-19. 30:23-25. 32:3, 4. 42:13-17. 49:5, 6. Matt. 11:2-5. P. O. 1-6. Acts 3:1-11. 26:16-18.) The superior knowledge, holiness, and comfort, enjoyed under the gospel-dispensation, and the more abundant conversion of sinners which then took place, are here predicted. 'According to the allegorical interpretation, they may have a farther view: this part of the prophecy may run parallel with the former, and relate to the future advent of Christ; to the conversion of the Jews, and their restitution to their land; to the extension and purification of the Christian faith, events predicted in Scripture, as preparatory to it.' Bp. Louth. The calling of the Gentiles was meant, by the waters and streams breaking forth in the desert: when that dry and parched soil was converted into a well-watered country; and the abode of Satan and his worshippers became productive of the pleasant and valuable fruits of righteousness. But when these blessings shall spread over the earth, the accomplishment will be unspeakably more remarkable.

The parched ground. (7) שֵׁב. "This word is Arabic, as well as Hebrew: expressing in both languages the same thing: the glowing sandy plain, which in the hot countries, at a distance has the appearance of water. It occurs in the Koran. (ch. 24.) 'But as to the unbelievers, their works are like a vapour in a plain, which the thirsty traveller thinketh to be water, until, when he cometh thereto, he findeth it to be nothing.'" Bp. Louth.

V. 8-10. The knowledge of the truth and will of God, and of the way of acceptance and salvation, when made very plain and clear to any people, is like casting up a highway through a country, which was before impassable. (Notes, 11:11-16. 19:23-25. 40:3-5. 57:14.) The Gentile world was a desert, in this as well as in other respects; no prepared highway to God and heaven was to be there met with, nor even a more obscure and intricate path of life and salvation. This advantage began to be generally vouchsafed, when the gospel was sent to the nations: yet an immense proportion of the earth is still destitute of it. But it may be said of China, Japan, the interior and unexplored regions of Africa, and every other part of the earth, where Christ has scarcely been named, that "an highway shall be there." Christ shall be clearly made known; and the way of access and of duty shall be plainly marked out. This authorized way shall be called "the way of holiness," as it leads to a holy God and a holy heaven, and no unclean, or unconverted sinner, passes over it: but it is appropriated to those, before-mentioned, who have experienced the power of the Saviour's grace. (Note, 5-7.) These are "wayfaring men," who really desire to walk in this way: and, though they may some of them be men of weak capacities, unlearned, and apt to mistake, they shall be preserved from missing the road.—The words may be rendered, "He himself," (God,) "shall be with them walking in the way; and the foolish shall not err therein." Bp. Louth.—No tempter or persecutor can injure those who walk in it: and at the period chiefly predicted, the great enemy of souls shall be chained up, and the persecutors of the church be cut off: so that none of them shall be found there, even to alight the pilgrims. (Notes, 11:6-9. Ez. 34:23-31. Hos. 2:18-20. Rev. 20:1-3.) Then sinners, ransomed by the blood, and rescued by the power, of their Redeemer the Lord of Hosts, shall return, join themselves to the Lord in his holy ordinances, and go on their way abounding in joy and praise; till they arrive at the heavenly Zion, and have for ever done with sorrow and sighing, and be crowned with everlasting joy and felicity. (Notes, 25:8-8. 30:18-21. 65:17-19. Zeph. 3:14-17. Rev. 19:1-5.)

CHAPTER XXXVI.

Sennacherib invades Judah, 1-3. He sends a blasphemous message by Rabshakeh, who persuades the Jews to revolt, 4-20: Hezekiah's servants return no answer, but report his words to the king, 21, 22.

NOW ¹it came to pass in the fourteenth year of ²King Hezekiah, ³that Sennacherib king of Assyria came up against all the defended cities of Judah, and took them.

⁴And the king of Assyria ⁵sent Rabshakeh from Lachish to Jerusalem unto king Hezekiah, with a great army. And he stood by ⁶the conduit of the upper pool in the highway of the fuller's field.

¹¹And Rabshakeh said unto them, Say ye now to Hezekiah, ¹²Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, ¹³What confidence ¹⁴is this wherein thou trustest?

¹⁹Lo, ²⁰thou trustest in the staff of this broken reed, on Egypt; whereof if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh king of Egypt to all that trust in him.

²¹But if thou say to me, We trust in the LORD our God: ²²is it not he, whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and said to Judah and to Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar?

²³Now therefore give ²⁴sp pledges, I pray thee, to my master the king of Assyria, ²⁵and I will give thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.

²⁶How then wilt thou turn away the face of one captain of ²the least of my master's servants, and put thy trust on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

¹⁰And ¹¹am I now come up without the LORD against this land to destroy it? The LORD said unto me, Go up against this land, and destroy it.

¹¹Then said Eliakim, and Shebna, and Joah, unto Rabshakeh, Speak, I pray thee, unto thy servants in the Syrian language: for we understand it: and speak not to us in the Jews' language, in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

¹²But Rabshakeh said, Hath my master sent me to thy master and to thee to speak these words? ¹³hath he not sent me to the men that sit upon the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piss with you?

¹³Then Rabshakeh stood, and ¹⁴cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and said, ¹⁵Hear ye the words of the great king, the king of Assyria.

¹⁴Thus saith the king, ¹⁵Let not Hezekiah deceive you: for he shall not be able to deliver you.

¹⁵Neither let Hezekiah ¹⁶make you trust in the LORD, saying, The LORD will surely deliver us: this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

¹⁶Hearken not to Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria, ¹⁷Make an agreement with me by a present, and ¹⁸come out to me: and ¹⁹eat ye every one of his vine, and every one of his fig tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his own cistern;

¹⁷Until ¹⁸I come and take you away to a land like your own land, ¹⁹a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards.

holy edification. These, though esteemed fools by the world, and though they often are of very slender talents, shall be found wise unto eternal salvation. We do not indeed live in those favoured days, when no lion or ravenous beast shall be found in the believer's path: yet even at present every lion is chained, and every traveller divinely protected. Let us then go forward with alacrity, and rejoice in praising our gracious Lord; we shall soon arrive at the heavenly Zion; all our sorrows will flee away, and our everlasting joy and triumph be perfected: for he, who will render his church on earth victorious over every persecutor, will make each believer more than conqueror over every foe, till "death be swallowed up in victory."

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXVI. V. 1. As many of Isaiah's predictions related to the events here recorded: it was proper that the history contained in this and the following chapters should be inserted: but, as it has before been fully considered, it will not be necessary to add more than a few hints in this place. (Notes, 2 Kings 18:34-36, 19:20).—⁴ We may probably conjecture, that this was part of that history of Hezekiah's reign, which Isaiah wrote, as we read 2 Chr. 32: 32. ¹ Louth.

V. 2. Three verses found in Kings, are here omitted. Hezekiah on this first invasion of the land, submitted to the invader, and gave Sennacherib all his treasures as the price of peace: but soon after, probably the next year, Sennacherib sent Rabshakeh, and others with a great army, as here recorded. (Notes, 2 Kings 18:14-18, 20:1.) It is also added in the parallel passage, that Rabshakeh and his companions "called to the king," or demanded an audience of him. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3. Shebna. 'This declareth, that there were but few golly to be found in the king's house, when he was driven to send this wicked man in so weighty a matter.' (Notes, 22:15-25.)

V. 4-6. Notes, 2 Kings 18:19-21. 2 Chr. 32:9-16.—Egypt. (6) Notes, 30:1-7. 31:1-5. Ez. 29:6, 7.

V. 10. (Notes, 2 Kings 18:25.) 'He interprets his former successes, as if they were an argument that Heaven was on his side: (19:20, 10:9, 10.) or he may mean, that some oracle or idol... had promised him success: and this pretended deity he impiously calls by the name of the true God. ¹ Louth. (Note, 2 Chr. 35:20-24.)

Ghost sent down from heaven," are of all the most valuable, and conduce the most to our unmingled consolation. While blossoms of heavenly fragrantcy are produced in this our land, once a barren desert, may our souls blossom and bring forth fruit abundantly, and rejoice with joy and singing! may the peculiar excellency and glory of believers in every age be communicated to us, by the transforming knowledge of the glory and excellency of our God and Saviour! (Note, 2 Cor. 3:17, 18).—Hitherto many real Christians have been weak in faith, and ready to faint amidst their various trials and enemies. But we should take courage ourselves, and endeavour to encourage one another, in the midst of our tribulations; that the joy of the Lord may give strength to our souls, in our work, race, and warfare. (Note, Neh. 8:10, 11.)—Those who trust in the Lord's mercy, and desire to walk in his ways, ought not to "be of a fearful heart;" for he will not cast them off, or suffer their enemies to prevail against them: they should therefore be strong and cheerful: and pastors and established Christians should exhort and animate their weaker brethren to be "strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." Let the enemies of God and his church have terror for their portion, but let his servants rejoice; for the Lord will shortly come to execute vengeance on the one, and to complete the other's salvation.—That power, which once opened the eyes of the blind, and unstopped the deaf ears, is sufficient to illuminate, humble, and sanctify the most beighted, stout-hearted, and polluted sinner; to make the feeble believer victorious, and to comfort the most dejected. Let us then apply to him thus to renew and rejoice our hearts; and let us supplicate him in behalf of our blinded, hardened, and enslaved relatives and neighbours, and for a world that lieth in wickedness. May the Lord make bare his holy arm, as when the apostles preached his gospel; that all the desert lands may be replenished with "wells of salvation," and with fruits of righteousness, and favoured with highways to God and holiness, cast up, and cleared from every stumbling-stone.—As this way of holiness is cast up in our land, may we walk in it, and thus approve ourselves to be the redeemed of the Lord. But no unholly person can find this way however plainly marked out; or however ingenious, learned, or wise he may be in this world. It is only found by "wayfarers men, who leave the paths of vice and folly, to pursue eternal life and happiness: who seek direction from the word and Spirit of God, and walk by faith in Christ in the pains of 18 Beware lest Hezekiah persuade you, saying, The LORD will deliver us. ^aHath any of the gods of the nations delivered his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

19 Where are the gods of Hamath and Arphad; where are the gods of Sepharvaim? and have they delivered Samaria out of my hand?

20 Who are they among all the gods of these lands, that have delivered their land out of my hand, that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?

21 But they held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

22 ¶ Then came Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, that was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph, the recorder, to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rabshakeh.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Hezekiah sends to Isaiah entreating him to pray for the people, 1-5. Isaiah encourages him, 6, 7. Sennacherib, going to meet the Ethiopian king, sends a blasphemous letter to Hezekiah, who spreads it before God with fervent prayer, 1-30. Hezekiah describes the arrogant impiety, and predicts the ruin of Sennacherib, 21-35. An angel slays 185,000 of the Assyrians; and Sennacherib is murdered at Nineveh by two of his own sons, 36-38.

AND it came to pass, when king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the house of the LORD.

2 And he sent Eliakim, who was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and the elders of the priests covered with sackcloth, unto Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz.

3 And they said unto him, Thus saith Hezekiah, This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and of blasphemy: for the children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth.

4 It may be the LORD thy God will hear the words of Rabshakeh, whom the king of Assyria his master hath sent to reproach the living God, and will reprove the words which the LORD thy God hath heard: wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that is left.

5 So the servants of king Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

6 ¶ And Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say unto your master, Thus saith the LORD, Be not afraid of the words that thou hast heard, wherewith the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

7 Behold, I will send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 ¶ So Rabshakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish.

9 And he heard say concerning Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, He is come forth to make war with thee. And when he heard it, he sent messengers to Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, Let not thy God in whom thou trustest, deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be given into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 Behold, thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands by destroying them utterly: and shalt thou be delivered?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed, as Gozan, and Haran, and Rezeph, and the children of Eden which were in Telassar?

13 Where is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arphad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivah?

14 ¶ And Hezekiah received the letter from the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah went up unto the house of the LORD, and spread it before the LORD.

15 And Hezekiah prayed unto the LORD, saying,

16 O LORD of hosts, God of Israel, that dwellest between the cherubims, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth; thou hast made heaven and earth.

17 Incline thine ear, O LORD, and hear; open thine eyes, O LORD, and see: and hear all the words of Sennacherib, which hath sent to reproach the living God.

18 Of a truth, LORD, the kings of Assyria have laid waste all the nations, and their countries, 19 And have cast their gods into the fire; for they were no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone: therefore they have destroyed them.

20 Now therefore, O LORD our God, save us from his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the LORD, even thou only.

21 ¶ Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent unto

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Infidels, in every age, deride the dependence placed by believers on an invisible protection: but their own self-confidence will terminate in shame, when the hope, which rests on the word of God, shall 'be found to praise, and honour, and glory.' The afflicted servant of God will generally find it best to leave ungodly men to revile, boast, insult, and menace, without making any reply: for humiliation, faith, and prayer are our proper employment, in seasons of personal or public distress. And, however men attempt to discourage or exasperate us, they will not do us any real harm; unless they can prevail with us to neglect or violate the commandments of our Lord and Master.

Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, "Whereas thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria :

22 This is the word which the LORD hath spoken concerning him; "The virgin, the daughter of Zion, hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee.

23 "Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed; and against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against "the Holy One of Israel.

24 By "thy servants hast thou reproached the LORD, and hast said, "By the multitude of my chariots am I come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon; and I will cut down the tall cedars thereof, and the choice fir-trees thereof; and I will enter into the height of his border, and the forest of his Carmel.

25 I have digged, and drunk water; and "with the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of the besieged places.

26 Hast thou not heard long ago, how I have done it; and of ancient times, that I have formed it? now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldest be to lay waste defenced cities into ruinous heaps.

27 Therefore "their inhabitants were of small power, they were dismayed and confounded: they were "as the grass of the field, and as the green herb, as the grass on the house-tops, and as corn blasted before it be grown up.

32 For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and "they that escape out of mount Zion : "the zeal of the LORD of hosts shall do this.

33 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the king of Assyria, "He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with "shields, nor "cast a bank against it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Tempters and persecutors are effectually subservient to our highest interest, when their endeavours to terrify us, or seduce us from God, make us more simple in our dependence, and more fervent in our prayers; and when they revile us for the Lord's sake, and for our reliance on him, and devoted obedience to him; they engage him on our side, and ensure our victory. Those exploits, in which powerful and wicked men glory, form a counterpart of the conduct of the devil, their father: and when their course is run, some unexpected event sends them to their "own place." But the Lord 34 By "the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city saith the LORD.

35 For "I will defend this city to save it, "for mine own sake, "and for my servant David's sake.

36 Then "the angel of the LORD went forth and smote in the camp of the Assyrians a hundred and fourscore and five thousand: "and when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.

37 "So "Sennacherib king of Assyria departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at "Nineveh.

38 And it came to pass, as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch "his god, that Adrammelech and Sharezer his sons smote him "a.c. with the sword; and they escaped into the "land of "Armenia; and "Esar-haddon his son reigned in his stead.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

IN those days "was Hezekiah sick unto death. "And Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz came unto him, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, "Set thy house in order: "for thou shalt die, and not live.

2 Then Hezekiah "turned his face toward the wall, and prayed unto the LORD,

3 And said, "Remember now, O LORD, I beseech thee, how "I have walked before thee in truth and with "a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah "wept sore.

4 "Then came the word of the LORD to Isaiah, saying,

5 Go "and say to Hezekiah, Thus saith the LORD, the "God of David thy father, "I have heard thy prayer, "I have seen thy tears: behold, "I will add unto thy days fifteen years.

6 And "I will deliver thee and this city out of the hand of the king of Assyria: and I will defend this city.

7 And "this shall be a sign unto thee from the LORD, that the LORD will do this thing that he hath spoken;

8 Behold, "I will bring again the shadow of the degrees, which is gone down in the sundial of Ahaz ten degrees backward. So the sun returned ten degrees, by which degrees it was gone down.

sake, and for my servant David's sake;" and the sentence seems somewhat abrupt without it.' Bp. Louth. 'Hence it appears, that Hezekiah's sickness was before the destruction of Sennacherib's army, though it be not mentioned till afterward, because the sacred writer would not interrupt the thread of that story.' Louth.—Certainly this language does not well accord to a remote danger; which a new attack from the Assyrians after the destruction of their army, must have been, if it ever took place.

V. 7, 8. Notes, 2 Kings 20:38-11. 2 Chr. 32:31.—The sun. (8) It is here expressly said, that "the sun returned," and not merely that "the shadow went backward." (Note, Josh. 10:12-14.)

V. 9-13. Hezekiah afterwards recollected and recorded his thoughts during his sickness, both as condemning himself for his despondency, and as magnifying the power of God in his unexpected recovery. (Notes, Ps. 142: title. Jon. 2:1,2.)—By the premature cutting off of his days before he was forty years old, he was, as he supposed, about to go down to "the gates of the grave," and to be deprived of the residue of those years, in which he had hoped to be very useful to his people. In his attendance on the worship of the Lord at the temple, he had enjoyed many discoveries of his glory, and much experience of his love, which he supposed would now be terminated; and that he was to be excluded from beholding men any more, with the inhabitants of this world. He concluded, that his remaining years of life were departed, as a shepherd's tent is removed; his work was finished, as a weaver's web, when it is cut out of the loom; for the Lord would finish his web of life in the course of a day; that is, he would make it very short: and, by pining sickness, he would soon make an end of him. So that in the evening he reckoned, that by the morning at the furthest, the Lord would terminate his life: as a lion crushes the bones of his prey. (Notes, Job 10:14-17. 16:6-16. Dan. 6:24. Hos. 5:13,14.)

V. 14, 15. Hezekiah's disease seems to have been very painful; and probably his mind also was discomposed by temptation: so that on recollection, he was conscious he had wanted firmness and patience; his prayers had been intermixed with fretfulness or despondency; and his complainings had been unmeaning, like the chattering of a crane or swallow; and excessive, like the mourning of the dove for its mate. And whilst he looked to the Lord for relief, and it did not come, his eyes were weary, and his faith ready to fail. (Notes, Ps. 69:1-3. 83:3-12.) But when he was thus bowed down with trouble, and like a debtor who is about to be cast into prison; he still looked to the Lord, to be his Surety, and to "undertake for him," that he might be set at liberty: nay, at this crisis, he was assured by the prophet that he should recover, and the gracious promise was soon accomplished. He therefore scarcely knew how to express his gratitude, for so unexpected and welcome a deliverance: and he hoped, that he should walk humbly and circumspectly during the rest of his life, recollecting the bitterness of soul from which he had been rescued.—"I will, so long as I live, remember the bitterness of my life." ... The remembrance of the misery I endured, shall continually excite me to renew my thankfulness. Louth.

V. 16. 'As all men's lives are thy gift, so I shall always acknowledge the preservation of mine to be owing to thy goodness in promising, and faithfulness in making good thy promise.' Louth.—By these things the souls of men also are 16 O LORD, 'by these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit: so wilt thou recover me, and make me to live.

17 Behold, 'for peace I had great bitterness: but thou hast 'in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption: for 'thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back.

18 For 'the grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee: 'they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth.

19 The living, 'the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day: 'the father to the children shall make known thy truth.

20 The LORD was ready to save me: 'therefore we will sing my songs 'to the stringed instruments all the days of our life in the house of the LORD.

21 For 'Isaiah had said, Let them take a lump of figs, and lay it for a plaster upon the bile, and he shall recover.

22 Hezekiah also had said, 'What is the sign that I shall go up to the house of the LORD?

saved: and Hezekiah seems to have meant, that he trusted in the promises and faithfulness of God, for the eternal life of his soul, as well as the continuance of his temporal life.

V. 17-20. Hezekiah had enjoyed much peace, but it was at once turned into extreme bitterness. Yet the Lord out of love to him had spared his life, and delivered his body from "the pit of corruption;" nay, had "cast his sins behind his back," being determined not to punish him for them. (Notes, Jer. 31:31-34. Mic. 7:18-20.) For death and the grave terminate man's opportunities of praising God on earth, and of dependence on his promises. (Notes, Ps. 6:5. 30:6-10. 88:10-12.) But the living might thus glorify him, and both spread the knowledge of his truth and will among their contemporaries, and also transmit it down to posterity. (Notes, Gen. 18:18,19. Deut. 6:6-9. Josh. 4:20-24. Ps. 71:17,18. 78:3-5.) 'Thy wonderful mercy towards me shall be recorded to after ages; and fathers shall mention it to their children, as an instance of thy faithfulness.' Louth.—Hezekiah purposed without delay to celebrate publicly the praises of the Lord, who had thus shown his readiness to hear his prayers, and save him from death; and to continue so to do as long as he lived. The animation of the language, "The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day," should not pass unnoticed.—Perhaps this hymn was constantly sung in the house of the Lord, during the remainder of Hezekiah's life. —(P. O. 2 Kings 20:11. John 5:—14)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Afflictions, and intimations of approaching death, should excite us to serious self-examination and fervent prayer, and remind us to settle all our concerns: and, as the testimony of our conscience, to the simplicity of our faith and obedience, must form one chief support in a dying hour; we should endeavour at all times so to live, that death may not surprise us when this evidence is dubious.—Whatever may be conjectured or inferred from second causes, we shall surely live till our measure of services is accomplished: but it is just cause of regret and humiliation, when sloth or impudence has induced us to neglect, what we might otherwise have performed.—It is good for us to recollect, and in some cases to record, the circumstances which relate to the frame of our minds under heavy calamities. The review will supply cause for humiliation and gratitude: we shall commonly find, that our faith, hope, and submission, were greatly alloyed with distrust, dejection, and impatience. Sometimes we inordinately desired life, at others we were sinfully reluctant to live: and when God had corrected us for our good, we have been tempted to conclude that he meant to destroy us. But, if indeed our lives should be prematurely cut off, and we "deprived of the residue of our years," and no longer allowed to meet the Lord and his saints in his earthly sanctuary: yet, if Christians, we shall remove to a more glorious assembly, behold his glory more fully, and praise him in more exalted strains; even when our bodies "go down to the gates of the grave." We should always remember, that we now dwell in an earthly tabernacle, which must shortly be taken down: and instead of being anxious to provide for it, or indulge it, we should be seeking "a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." (Notes, 2 Co. 5:1-8.) Let us then daily endeavour to exercise repentance, faith, love, and good works: and then, whether the Lord (u. us) will

Thus the grace, truth, and power of our God will be "the life of our souls:" after a few more interchanges of peace and bitterness, our sorrows will terminate, and our consolations will be perfected.—But, as we cannot praise God in the grave, let us embrace the present season of serving him among our fellow-sinners; hoping in his word, extolling his perfections, blessing him for his mercies, and obeying his precepts. Let us endeavour to make known his righteousness and salvation to all around us, and to those who are to follow us; bringing our children with us to the house of our God, and instructing them from his word; discoursing with them on all his wondrous works, showing them how ready he is to save and bless those who call upon him, and leading them to walk with us before him, "in all his ordinances and commandments;" that when we are removed, they may be capable of filling up our places to greater advantage, and hand down to their children, and to posterity, those truths and instructions which they have received from us. (Note, 2 Pet. 1:12-15.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXIX. V. 1. (Marg.) ^aMerodach was the name of an idol worshipped by the Babylonians; and Baal or Bel was another: Jer. 50:2, and these two idols, with the addition of Adan, or Adon, which signifies lord, gave a name to this king of Babylon. It was usual for the Babylonian kings to take their names from the idols which they worshipped. Thus we find one of the kings was called Evil-merodach. 2 Kings 25:27.—Nebuz was another idol of the Babylonians, . . . whence Nebonassar, Nebuchadnezzar, and several other kings of Babylon took their names. . . . One reason of sending this embassy was, to satisfy himself about the prodigy of the sun's going backward upon the king's recovery. (2 Chr. 32:31.)—The Babylonians were famous for the study of astronomy, which made their king the more inquisitive about so extraordinary a phenomenon. ^bLouth.

mated in gratitude, and to adoring thanksgivings. (P. O. 2 Chr. 32:24-33. Note, 2 Cor. 12:1-6. P. O. 1-10.) On some occasions, also, they value too highly the friendly notice of ungodly men, in exalted stations. But such coalitions with the world ensure painful consequences; and the Lord will rebuke and correct those whom he loves. Their submission, however, to distressing appointments, shows that grace has regained the ascendancy; and thus truth and peace shall yet be with them through time and to eternity.

NOTES.—CHAP. XL. V. 1, 2. We now enter upon the latter part of this book, in which the name of the prophet is not mentioned: but it proceeds, as in one continued discourse, is full of consolatory topics, and treats almost entirely, and most clearly, of Christ and evangelical subjects. The whole seems to have been written after the deliverance of the Jews from the Assyrian invasion, and towards the close of the prophet's life; and the style and imagery are elegant, rich, and often most sublime: so that it cannot be read without great delight, by one that relishes beauties of that kind; even should he be ignorant of the spiritual and prophetic meaning of the sacred writer.—The narration in the preceding chapter, (which perhaps was here inserted, as introductory to these predictions,) had mentioned the Babylonian captivity in express terms: (29:6, 7.) and the prophet was here employed to prepare comfort for the church in expectation of that affliction, and while groaning under it. But though some reference is made in many places to the return of the Jews from Babylon; yet the prophet is so carried above all temporal deliverances, in the foresight of the great redemption of Christ and its most glorious effects, that it would often be absurd and vain to seek for any allusion to inferior events, in the language employed by him. ^aThe course of prophecies, which follow from hence to the end of the book, and which taken together constitute the most elegant part of the sacred writings of the Old Testament; interspersed also with many passages of the highest sublimity: was probably delivered in the latter part of the reign of Hezekiah. The prophet in the foregoing chapter had delivered a very explicit declaration of the impending dissolution of the kingdom, and of the captivity of the royal house of David, and of the people, under the kings of Babylon. As the subject of his subsequent prophecies was to be chiefly of the consolatory kind, he opens them with giving a promise of the restoration of the kingdom, and the return of the people from that captivity, by the merciful interposition of God in their favour. But the views of the prophet are not confined to this event: as the restoration of the royal family, and of the tribe of Judah, which would otherwise have soon become undistinguished, and have been irrecoverably lost, was necessary in the design and order of Providence, for the fulfilling of God's promises of establishing a more glorious and an everlasting kingdom, under the Messiah, to be born of the tribe of Judah, and of the family of David; the prophet connects these two events together, and hardly ever treats of the former, without throwing in some intimations of the latter; and sometimes is so fully possessed with the glories of the future more remote kingdom, that he seems to leave the more immediate subject of his commission almost out of the question.' Bp. Lowth.—The command, here given to the prophets and teachers of the church, (the Septuagint insert the words 'O priests,') to comfort the people of God and Jerusalem, with the assurance of the termination of their conflicts in victory and triumph, and of the pardon of their sins, may be considered as an introduction to the whole remaining prophecy, which indisputably extends to the consummation of all things.—The sufferings of Israel and of Judah had abundantly vindicated the honour of the law and justice of God, seeing he thus punished his chosen people for their sins; and the sacrifice of Christ displayed the honour of his holiness and righteous government far more, than even the final condemnation of every transgressor could have done.—As the church of Israel was to be comforted with the assurance of the Messiah's coming; so are Christians to be encouraged with the assurance of the final victory of his cause on earth; and of the church militant, and every member of it, soon becoming triumphant in heaven.—Any state of servitude or hardship is compared to a warfare in Scripture. 2 Tim. 2:3, 4. Thus the word is applied to the attendance of the Levites, in the service of the sanctuary. Num. 4:23. 8:24. The phrase here alludes likewise to the discharge given to soldiers, after so many years' service. Job 7:1. Louth.

V. 3-5. It is generally supposed, that the prophet here refers to the proclamation of Cyrus, and to the return of the Jews to Jerusalem; as their fathers had come out of Egypt into Canaan, through a waste and dreary wilderness: and it is considered as a command to make all things ready for their safe and commodious passage. (Notes, Ezra 1: 8:21-23.) But the coming of JEHOVAH to his people, not their return to Jerusalem, is predicted: and though his protecting presence with them on that occasion may be alluded to; yet this forms a feeble interpretation, compared with that of the Holy Spirit in the New Testament. John the Baptist, in the desert part of the land, (an apt emblem of the barren state of the Jewish church at that time,) was a herald sent to proclaim the approach of Christ, as JEHOVAH their God. When powerful or victorious monarchs, at the head of their armies, march through countries where highways are not previously cast up; they are used to send pioneers before them, to level the country, to cut ways through impervious mountains and defiles, to make bridges over rivers, to cast up roads through morasses and deep valleys, and to make their march as straight and unobstructed as possible. 'Diodorus's account of Semiramis's marches into Media and Persia, will give us a clear notion of the preparation of the way for a royal expedition.—In her march to Ecbatane she came to the Zarcian mountain, which, extending many furlongs, and being full of craggy precipices and deep hollows, could not be passed without taking a great compass about. Being therefore desirous of leaving an everlasting memorial of herself, as well as of shortening the way, she ordered the precipices to be digged down, and the hollows to be filled up; and at a great expense she made a shorter and more expeditious road, which to this day is called from her, the road of Semiramis.' Bp. Lowth. A spiritual preparation, of a similar nature, was needful for the coming of Christ, and the setting up of his kingdom. John the Baptist's ministry was calculated to excite the attention of the people; to convince, alarm, and humble them; to subvert their self-confident prejudices, and carnal expectations; to show them their need of a spiritual redemption, and to raise their expectations of those blessings, which the Messiah was actually to bestow on them. This tended to 'prepare the Acts 13:24-37.) And the first Jewish converts to Christianity seem to have been in general prepared by John's ministry, for that of Christ and his apostles. (Notes, John. 1:35-51.) Thus "the glory of the Lord was revealed" to them, and through them to the Gentiles; this light has hitherto been continued to many nations, and at length "all flesh shall see it together, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."—The Septuagint here read, "All flesh shall see the salvation of our God;" and this is quoted by the evangelist. (Note, Luke 3:4-6. v. 6.)—The Jewish church, to which John was sent to announce the coming of the Messiah, was at that time in a barren and desert condition, unfit, without reformation, for the reception of her King. It was in this desert country, at that time destitute of all religious instruction, in true piety and good works unfruitful, that John was sent to prepare the way of the Lord by preaching repentance.' Bp. Lowth.

V. 6-8. 'To understand rightly this passage is a matter of importance: for it seems designed to give us the true key to the remaining part of Isaiah's prophecies; the general subject of which is the restoration of the people and church of God. The prophet opens the subject with great clearness and elegance. He then introduces a voice commanding him to make a solemn proclamation; And what is the import of it? That the people, the flesh, is of a vain temporary nature; that all its glory fadeth and is soon gone; but that the word of God endureth forever. What is this but a plain opposition of the . . . carnal Israel to the spiritual; of the temporary Mosaic economy to the eternal Christian dispensation? You may be ready to conclude, (the prophet may be supposed to say,) by this introduction to my discourse, that my commission only to comfort you with a promise of the restoration of your religion and polity, of Jerusalem and the temple, and its services and worship in all its ancient splendour: these are earthly, temporary, shadowy, fading things; . . . these are not worthy to engage your attention, in comparison of the greater blessings, the spiritual redemption, the eternal inheritance, covered under the veil of the former, which I have in charge to unfold unto you. The law is only the shadow of good things, the substance is the gospel, . . . which shall never be done away, but shall endure for ever.' Bp. Lowth.—The impotency of man, in all his glory, to oppose the purposes of God, seems also to be intended. Thus the Chaldean prosperity withered when the time came for the Jews to be delivered; and the Jews lost all their honours and privileges when the kingdom of Christ was to be established.—The carnal expectations of the Jews, respecting the nature of the Redeemer's kingdom may likewise be adverted to. The word translated "goodliness" properly signifies excellency, moral excellency, even piety, justice, truth and mercy: and thus the passage shows the vanity and insufficiency of all human virtues, as well as of human power, accomplishments, and valour, without the word of the gospel which endureth for ever, and without that regeneration which alone can render it effectual (Notes, Ps. 103:15-18. Zech. 4:4-7. 1 Cor. 1:26-31. Jam. 1:9-11. 1 Pt. 1:22-25.)

The Spirit, &c. (7) "The wind of JEHOVAH." (Ps. 103: 16.) "As wind and storms deface the beauty of the grass and flowers; so the breath of God's displeasure blasts the counsels of men, and brings them and their designs to naught!" Louth.

V. 9-11. The former part of this paragraph is rendered by some, and by Bishop Lowth in particular, "O thou, that bringest good tidings to Zion, &c." And, as it is in the feminine gender, it is supposed to allude to the custom of women leading companies, with songs and dances, to celebrate great deliverances; as in the cases of Miriam and Jephthah's daughters.

hoppers; that stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in:

23 That bringeth the princes to nothing; he maketh the judges of the earth as vanity.

24 Yea, they shall not be planted: yea, they shall not be sown: yea, their stock shall not take root in the earth; and he shall also blow upon them, and they shall wither, and the whirlwind shall take them away as stubble.

25 To whom then will ye liken me, or shall I be equal? saith the Holy One.

26 Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things, that bringeth out their host by number: he calleth them all by names, by the greatness of his might, for that he is strong in power; not one faileth.

nothing could so much provoke God to jealousy, and bring ruin upon them as this abomination.—Hereby he armeth them against the idolatry, wherewith they should be tempted at Babylon. (Notes, 41:5-7. 43:9-20. Ez. 32:1. Ps. 115:3-7. Jer. 10:3-11. Dan. 5:15-24. Hab. 2:18-20. Acts 17:22-31.)

V. 21-24. "Will ye not know? Will ye not hear? Hath it not been declared to you from the beginning? &c." Bp. Louth. This is more literal than our version.—Would not the people after all understand? Would they not hearken to the word of God, which approved itself so fully to their minds and consciences? Had not the Jews known, and heard from the beginning? Nay, had not the Gentiles sufficient information, from the foundations of the earth, and in the things created, concerning the "eternal power and Godhead" of the Creator? (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, Rom. 1:18-23.) He sitteth upon his throne in the heavens, which environ the earth as a circle; thence he beholds the puny efforts of all its inhabitants, like those of insignificant grasshoppers. He has veiled himself with the vast expanse of the firmament, as with a curtain; and dwells beyond it, in invisible glory, as in a pavilion. (Notes, Ps. 104:2, 3.)—Disdaining the vain ambition, and the daring but impotent rebellion of wicked princes, he brings them and their devices to nothing; so that they cannot establish themselves, or their posterity, as they purpose and expect to do: for he will not suffer them to be planted or sown, or to take root: but in anger he blows on them, and they wither and are driven away as the stubble by the whirlwind. (Notes, 14:21-23. 1 Sam. 2:4-8. Ps. 75:4-8.)—The revolutions in the great empires of the world are intended, especially the subversion of the Babylonish empire by Cyrus, which was made way for the restoration of the Jews. (Notes, Dan. 4.) Nebuchadnezzar and his successors had attempted to perpetuate the grandeur of their family; but the Lord blew upon it, and it all came to nothing.

V. 25, 26. (Notes, 18-20. Ps. 89:6-12.) Nothing could be mentioned, which might with the least appearance of propriety be likened to JEHOVAH, except the sun, moon, and stars: and these appear to have been adored as deities, in one form or other, from the earliest ages, and almost in every nation; though a few of the philosophers of Greece or Rome, saw, or seemed to see, a superior Intelligence directing them, which however produced in them no practical effects. But the Lord says by his prophet, Who hath created these splendid luminaries? They are the host, or army of Israel's God, numbered, marshalled, and commanded by him, as if he spake to them by name: and because of the exceeding greatness of his mighty power, not one of them failed to fulfil his will, and shine in its appointed season, from age to age. (Notes, 45:7. 51:4-6. Gen. 21:2. Deut. 4:19. Job 31:24-28. 38:12-15, 31-41. Ps. 8:3-9. 148:1-5.)

V. 27-31. Jacob is here introduced as in great and permanent affliction: as was the case with the Jews in the captivity; as it is with Israel at present; and with the church under antichristian persecution. Every external appearance was discouraging: and they were apt to forget or distrust the power and promise of God, through long delays, many disappointments, and unbelief; and to conclude that he either disregarded them, and was not able to deliver them, or that he neglected to judge between them and their oppressors. (Notes, 49:14-16. Jer. 33:23-26. Rom. 11:1-6.) But why should they harbour such gloomy thoughts? why judge so dishonourably of God? Had they never heard, or known, that "the everlasting God, JEHOVAH," (Note, Ez. 31:4.) the Creator of the world, was incapable of being wearied out, or fainting, or leaving his work unfinished? There was no "searching out of his understanding" and therefore, he could not be discerned by unforeseen obstructions, or "want" of resources to obviate difficulties. (Marg. Ref. v.

27 Why sayest thou, O Jacob, and speakest O Israel, My way is hid from the Lord, and my judgment is passed over from my God?

28 Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? there is no searching of his understanding.

29 He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength.

30 Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fail:

31 But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint.

Notes, 55:8, 9. Ps. 138:8.) When his wisdom should see the proper season to be arrived, he would certainly effect their deliverance: by his help, the most feeble and intimidated instruments would acquire great and increasing strength and courage. And whilst men of superior abilities and resolution, who confided in their own vigour, (as young men are apt to do), would faint and be wearied out, in all their attempts to save themselves, or effect their purposes: those "who waited on the Lord," and relied on him for wisdom and support, should repair the decays of their spiritual strength after every conflict, and make continual accessions to it; till they mounted aloft, as on eagles' wings, out of the reach of their enemies: nor would they grow weary in their race, or faint in their walk, till they reached the glorious goal, and received the conqueror's crown. (Marg. Ref. m-q. Notes, Ps. 73:23-28. v. 26. 138:3. 2 Cor. 4:13-18. v. 16. 12:7-10.)—"They shall put forth fresh feathers, like the moulting eagle." It has been a common and popular opinion, that the eagle lives and retains his vigour to a great age; and that, beyond the common lot of other birds, he moults in his old age, and renews his feathers, and with them his youth. . . . Whether the notion of the eagle's renewing his youth is in any degree well founded or not, I need not inquire: it is enough for a poet, whether sacred or profane, to have the authority of popular opinion to support an image introduced for illustration or ornament. Bp. Louth. (Note, Ps. 103:5.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11. Those who walk with God need comforting, especially when iniquity abounds, and the church is in tribulation: accordingly he has commanded his ministers to "encourage the broken-hearted," as well as "to warn the unruly;" and should the servant neglect or mistake his duty, the Lord himself will speak comfortably to them.—All effectual deliverances are connected with the pardon of iniquity; and in the great atonement of the death of Christ, the mercy of God is exercised to the exceeding glory of his justice and holiness. This is the fountain of all our consolations, and ensures a happy event to the warfare of the church, and of every real believer. Even in this desert world, where nothing but noxious creatures and productions, through man's apostasy, would otherwise have been found, a voice is heard calling on us to "prepare the way of the Lord;" for he comes "to bless us, in turning away every one . . . from his iniquities." (Note, Acts 3:24-26.) May he prepare our hearts, by the instructions of his word, and the convictions of his Spirit, cordially to welcome his salvation, and submit to his authority; that, every prejudice being removed, every proud and ambitious thought brought down, every groveling passion subdued, the desire of things truly excellent and honourable implanted, our crooked and rugged tempers softened, and all obstructions removed; "the glory of the Lord may be revealed" to our souls; and we may be made ready for his whole will on earth, and for his heavenly kingdom. And may his power remove all hinderances to the establishment of his kingdom throughout the earth; that "his glory may be revealed, and that all flesh may see it together."—The Lord alone is worthy of unserved fear and confidence, and what are all the connexions, possessions, distinctions, attainments, or performances of fallen man, but "as the grass and the flower of the field?" When the Lord blows upon them with the breath of his displeasure, how soon they wither and fade! And what will the envious and admired titles and accomplishments of a dying sinner avail him, when they leave him under condemnation, and "a vessel of wrath fitted for destruction?" But those, who rely on the word of God, which endureth for ever, shall possess unfading and eternal distinctions and treasures, however poor and despised they may be here on earth. These are the glad tidings brought unto us by Zion's harbingers: may we gladly receive

CHAPTER XLI.

JEHOVAH calls on the nations to consider his works for Israel, and describes the zeal of the idolaters about their idols, 1-7. He gives many promises and predictions of assistance, victory, and prosperity to his people; and of the vain reason of the Gentiles, 8-20. He challenges the idols of the nations to forecast future events and accomplish them, as he did; and predicts the conquest of Cyrus, and the deliverance of the Jews from captivity, 21-28.

KEEP silence before me, O islands; and let the people renew their strength: let them come near; then let them speak: let us come near together to judgment.

the word, and diligently diffuse it all around! All, who know this joyful sound, should thus endeavour by their bold and open profession of the truth, their holy examples, their fervent prayers, and all their influence, to communicate the blessing to others. And let ministers especially "cry aloud and not spare," and point out to all, who inquire after salvation, the divine Redeemer, saying, "Behold your God!" "Behold, JEHOVAH has come in the flesh to "destroy the works of the devil;"²³ he has finished his work on earth; he has ascended his mediatorial throne in heaven; all power is in his hands, and "his Arm shall rule for him, his reward is with him, and his work before him." Whilst he crushes his obstinate foes under his feet, he feeds his purchased flock with inexpressible tenderness and care; and he is ever ready to gather in the new convert, to cherish the feeble, the tempted, and afflicted; and to proportion the strength of every one to the trials allotted him. May we know our Shepherd's voice, and follow him, and by our gentle, harmless conduct prove ourselves to be the sheep of his pasture; may he gather our children and relations, as his "lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom;" and may numbers of those, who "are as sheep going astray," be continually "brought back to this Shepherd and Bishop of our souls!" For who is he, but Israel's Shepherd, "that measured the waters in the hollow of his hand?" This is the support of all our hopes, that, with the Father and the blessed Spirit, our Jesus is JEHOVAH, "God over all blessed for evermore."

V. 12-31. As we cannot comprehend the mysterious nature, and the majesty of the Lord our God; let us learn to admire and adore those displays of his perfections, which are made in his works, and in his word. Let us abase ourselves before him, deeply sensible of our meanness as creatures, and our vileness as sinners; and let us never presume to object to his appointments or decisions, as if we were qualified to "teach Him knowledge," before whom "all nations are as nothing and vanity." And what are all man's attempts to expiate his own sins, and merit an eternal inheritance? It costs more than the whole creation to ransom our souls; and "must have been let alone for ever," if "the only begotten of the Father" had not given himself for us, a sacrifice of infinite value. With this God is well pleased: but all the power, wisdom, pride, and ostentation of sinful creatures, are with him "less than nothing;" abominable, as well as vain.—Surely fallen man's boasted reason is a blind guide in religion: when he has always been prone to represent God, by images made like to corruptible man, or the inferior creatures! And though we do not now, and in this our land, generally make images of gold, silver, wood, or stone, to worship them; we are still apt to conceive of God, as being such a one as ourselves. Yet, we at least have abundant opportunity of becoming so acquainted with his perfections, (were not our carnal minds at enmity against him,) as to be convinced, that we can conceive nothing in the smallest degree proper to represent him to our minds; except it be his holy image renewed upon the soul of believers, which gives us some faint idea of his moral excellency: but of his infinite majesty we can form no conception. (Note, Job 26:14.) Wretched then are the mightiest princes, who rebel against him: he will soon reduce them to the most abject contempt and misery; and all their schemes of aggrandizing themselves and their descendants, will be as vain, as if the stubble should attempt resistance to the furious whirlwind. But though "we cannot find out the Almighty to perfection," it behooves us to look about us, and to view his glory, in the work of his hands. The heavens, and all the host of them, proclaim "his eternal power and Godhead;" and the strength of his arm continues them in their settled orders, with a punctuality which can never be sufficiently admired. Nor let us forget, that he, who retains the planets in their orbits, spake all the promises, and stands engaged to perform them. Why then should believers despond, either respecting themselves, or the common cause of godliness? Their way, though dark to them, cannot be hid from him, and he will plough their cause and execute judgment for them. When the everlasting God has begun his work of grace, he will never faint, nor be weary, nor withdraw his hand, till he has perfected it. (Notes, Phil. 1:3-8.) But we should confide in his unsearchable wisdom, to perform his promises to us and to his church, in his own time and manner; neither discouraged by the sense of our own weakness, nor by a view of the power of our enemies: as "the LORD giveth power to the faint," nay, to those who have no might he createth strength to abound. (Notes, Phil. 4:10-13. Col. 1:

2 "Who raised up 'the righteous man from the east, called him to his foot, gave the nations before him, and made him rule over kings? he gave them 'as the dust to his sword, and 'as driven stubble to his bow.

9-14, v. 11.) Let us then watch against unbelief, pride, and self-confidence: for if we go forth in our own strength, we "shall faint, and utterly fail," however strong we may think ourselves. But if we wait on the Lord, out of weakness we shall be made strong; and having our hearts and hopes in heaven, we shall be carried above all difficulties, and enabled to press forward, and lay hold of "the prize of our high calling in Christ Jesus."

NOTES.—CHAP. XLI. V. 1. JEHOVAH speaks through the whole of this chapter. He here calls on the most distant nations, in reverent silence, to hearken to the proofs which he is about to give, that he is the only true God, and that all their idols are nothing; and when they had attentively considered the subject, let them collect all their resolution, and draw near to plead their cause; that the controversy might at length be finally decided, whether JEHOVAH or their idols was entitled to their worship and service. (Notes, 21-24. 1 Kings 18:21. Ps. 46:10. Hab. 2:18-20. Zech. 2:10-13.)—Islands.] "Those countries that were parted from Judea by the sea." Louth.—People.] Or, peoples; עַמִּים, plural.

V. 2-4. Some eminent expositors suppose Cyrus to be here meant; but it is not likely that he should be called "the righteous man;" (or righteousness, Marg.) nor could the success of that monarch give any general alarm to idolaters.—JEHOVAH is pointing out to the nations the evidences of his being the only true God; and is about to predict those events which will terminate in the extirpation of idolatry: but he previously calls the attention of mankind at large to the victories, which had already been obtained by his worshippers over idolaters. The calling of Abraham, from the eastern country of Mesopotamia, was the first remarkable check, which God gave to idolatry after the flood, when it was about to become universal; and the opening of that grand design by which the whole empire of Satan was in due time to be entirely subverted. (Notes, Gen. 12:1-3. 49:10.) As the pattern of all future believers, both in the manner of his justification and the effects of his faith, Abraham was properly distinguished as "the righteous man." The Lord called him "to his foot," that is, to follow him in the most implicit and unserved confidence and obedience. (Note, Heb. 11:8-10.) And though he was not a warrior on any other occasion; yet, relying on the power of JEHOVAH, he once marched forth at the head of a small company of his servants, against four victorious heathen kings and their armies; and God gave them before him, and made him victorious over them; so that they became as dust, or stubble driven by the wind, before his sword and bow; and he pursued them with entire safety, through those parts of the land, into which he had never before travelled. (Notes, Gen. 14:14-20.) This, and other interpositions of God in his favour, gave him a great ascendancy over kings and nations; and were earnest of the victories, which were promised to his posterity, and in due time granted them.—The king and people of Egypt first fell before the God of Israel; and then Arad, Sihon, and Og, with their subjects; and then the inhabitants of Canaan; and thus Abraham, in his seed, ruled over many kings and nations. These events were extensively known, and could not be denied; and they caused great alarms in the adjacent regions. (Note, 5-7.) Now, who had effected these victories of Israel over the idolaters? Even He, who had also predicted them, and had from the beginning called the generations of Israel from among the rest of the nations, speaking of them as already existing. And as JEHOVAH, the self-existent and eternal God, had been present with his people at first, so he would be to the last, to support them and render them triumphant. (Notes, 44:6-8. Ez. 3:14. Rev. 1:8-11. 2:8,9.) "Some explain this of Abraham; others of Cyrus. I rather think that the former is meant, because the character of the righteous man, or righteousness, agrees better with Abraham, than with Cyrus. Besides, immediately after the description of the success given by God to Abraham, and his posterity, (who, I presume, are to be taken into the account,) the idolaters are introduced as greatly alarmed at this event. Abraham was called out of the east; and his posterity were introduced into the land of Canaan, in order to destroy the idolaters of that country; and they were established there, on purpose to stand as a barrier against idolatry, then prevailing, and threatening to overrun the whole face of the earth. Cyrus... had nothing in his character to cause such an alarm among the idolaters, 5-7." Bp. Louth.

V. 5-7. The success which attended the servants of JEHOVAH, is here represented as exciting the apprehensions of the most distant nations, lest the cause of idolatry should be ruined. So that, being instigated by that ambitious spirit, who is worshipped by idolaters as "the god of this world," they combine together, and stimulate and encourage each other to support their senseless worship, and render it prevalent against the cause of God and Israel. This was the case when Israel conquered Canaan, and in their wars with the Philistines and others. It was still more remarkably so, when Christianity was established on the ruins of Pagan idolatry; and we have reason to expect that a similar scene will be exhibited, when antichristian idolatry shall be extirpated. (Notes, Ex. 15:14-16. 1 Sam. 4:7-9. 5:3-12. 6:2-9. Acts 19:23-41.)—The word rendered "carpenter," is in the former chapter translated "workman," and joined with meleth. (40:19.) Some of the images were carved of wood, and covered with plates of gold. (Notes, 40:18-20. 44:12-17.)

V. 8, 9. The Lord seems in disdain to leave the idolaters to weary themselves in forming their idols, and strengthening their cause: (Note, Hab. 2:12-14.) and addresses himself to his people, to encourage them with assurances of support and victory. Israel was the servant and worshipper of JEHOVAH, through his gracious choice, and as "the seed of Abraham," whom he had favoured and honoured with the peculiar name and privileges of his friend, "a lover of God." (Notes, 1 Chr. 16:12-22. John 15:12-16. Jam. 2:21-24.) Abraham had been called out of Mesopotamia, and the Israelites out of Egypt, from among the chief men of the earth; and the Lord still adhered to his choice: though he had corrected and proved them by many adversities, yet he had not cast them off. (Notes, 1 Sam. 12:22. Rom. 11:25-32.)—But in these respects Israel was a type of the chosen seed, who are brought from every part of the earth into this church, made the servants, the friends, and children of God, who will never reject them, or leave them to perish. (Marg. Ref. x, y. Note, Deut. 7:6-8.)—The word (הַרְוֹקֶרֶת), translated lath, seems equivalent to that used by St. Paul concerning his own conversion: "for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." (Note, Phil. 3:12-14.)

V. 10-14. "Fear not... for I have strengthened thee, I have assisted thee, I have supported thee with my faithful right hand." Bp. Louth. Past deliverances are mentioned, to encourage the expectations of future protection and support.—The security and victories of the church are, however, here predicted and promised: and the prophecy is couched in such terms, as can be fully accomplished only by the most complete triumph of true religion over all idolatry and iniquity; yet at the same time it consists of promises, suited to the encouragement of believers through successive ages. They know themselves to be feeble, and see the cause of godliness destitute of external defence; but they are assured, that the Lord is with his church, and every true member of it: therefore they ought not to be dismayed by the number or power of their enemies. JEHOVAH himself will strengthen, assist, and uphold his people, with his powerful arm performing his faithful promises, and maintaining his righteous cause. The powerful monarchies which in succession have been incensed against the church, and have contended with her, and which have warred against the nation of Israel, have been put to shame, and brought to nothing; and this prediction has already been fulfilled, in the ruin of the Egyptian, Assyrian, Chaldean, Macedonian, and Roman empires, which we now may seek for in vain; for no vestiges of the three former, and scarcely any of the last, can be found; while the church still subsists, and the Jews still remain a distinct people! (Notes, 27:7-11. 54:15-17. Ps. 37:10, 11, 35, 36. Jer. 10:11. 30:10, 11. Dan. 2:40-45. 7:23-27. Zech. 12:2-5. 14:1-3.) In like manner, all who now do, or hereafter shall, contend with his people, shall perish. For JEHOVAH leads them by the right hand to the conflict; and both inspires them with courage and strength, and fights for them: and though they are as "worms," in the contempt poured upon them, in their own humble sense of their weakness and meanness, and in their low and abject condition, and few men in comparison with their enemies; (Note, Ps. 22:4-6, v. 6.) yet their "Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel," will render them victorious.—God's truth shall at last prevail against all opposition: and the kingdom of Christ shall subdue and break in pieces all its adversaries. Louth.

V. 15, 16. Deep-rooted idolatrous empires, and systems of idolatry, superstition, and imposture, are like impassable mountains; and form obstructions to the propagation of the gospel, insuperable to man; but the Lord will furnish his church, from time to time, with proper and adequate instruments to destroy, or remove out of the way, and even to disperse as chaff and dust, all remains of them. Or, "he will form and constitute the church to be such a thrashing instrument, &c." Something of this kind was done, in the ruin of the Chaldean monarchy, in order to Israel's deliverance from captivity; and far more in the subversion of the Pagan Roman empire, in order to the establishment of Christianity; but future events will more signally illustrate the propriety of the strong metaphors here employed, which are taken from the methods of thrashing and winnowing corn, that were then in use. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 10-14. 28:23-29. Mic. 4:11-13.)

V. 17-20. The care taken to supply water and provisions for the poor Jews, and to defend them, when they returned from Babylon, as their fathers had been provided for in the wilderness; (Notes, Ex. 16:17.) and the re-establishment of their church and state, in the desolated land of Judah; form but feeble accomplishments of this remarkable prophecy. We meet with repeated predictions of the conversion of the Gentiles, and of spiritual blessings, under similar allusions. (Notes, 12:3. 30:23-25. 35:5-7. 42:13-17. 43:14-21. 44:3-5. 49:9-13.)—The provision, which is made for the consolation of the poor and humble people of God, in all their distresses and persecutions from age to age, may be implied: but perhaps some intimation may also be given of the method in which the Lord will accomplish his promises of spreading the gospel. By "the poor and needy, who seek water and find none," he may describe the case of people.

18 I will 'open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys: I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water.

19 I will 'plant in the wilderness the cedar, the shittah-tree, and the myrtle, and the oil-tree; I will set in the desert the fir-tree, and the pine, and the box-tree together:

20 That they may see, and know, and consider, and understand together, that the hand of the LORD hath done this, and the Holy One of Israel hath created it. [Practical Observations.]

21 ¶ 'Produce your cause, saith the LORD; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob.

22 Let them bring them forth, and show us what shall happen: let them show the former things, what they be, that we may consider them, and know the latter end of them; or declare us things for to come.

23 Show the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods: yea, do good, or do evil, that we may be dismayed, and behold it together.

24 Behold, 'ye are of nothing, and your work of naught: 'an abomination is he that chooseth you.

25 I have raised up one from the north, and he shall come: from the rising of the sun shall he call upon my name: and he shall come upon princes as upon mortar, and as the potter treadeth clay.

26 Who hath declared from the beginning, that we may know? and before-time, that we may say, He is 'righteous? yea, there is none that sheweth, yea, there is none that declareth, yea, there is none that heareth your words.

27 The 'First shall say to Zion, Behold, behold them: and 'I will give to Jerusalem one that bringeth good tidings.

28 For 'I beheld, and there was no man; even among them, and there was no counsellor, that, when I asked of them, could answer a word.

29 Behold, 'they are all vanity, their works are nothing: their molten images are wind and confusion.

destitute of the means of grace, yet brought to some indistinct, but anxious desires of instruction and spiritual blessings. Cornelius and his friends, (the first Gentile converts,) were thus prepared to receive the gospel, before it was sent to them: and Paul was called into Europe by "a vision of a man of Macedonia," who begged him to come over and help them. (Notes, Acts 10:1-8. 16:6-12.) Indeed we know not in what degree the Lord may facilitate the promulgation of Christianity, in due time, by exciting desires of instruction and salvation, in the minds of those, who have not hitherto heard the gospel. Such desires will dictate earnest prayers, and the Lord will hear them, and not leave the suppliants destitute: and many effects of the late and present exertions, for making the word of God known to the most distant and ignorant nations, seem already to have produced, and are well calculated still more to produce this kind of preparation for the go-spel. Thus rivers, fountains, and wells of salvation, shall be opened in the most unlikely places: and trees of righteousness, both ornamental and fruitful, shall flourish in abundance, throughout the barren desert of the Gentile world. (Notes, 55:11, 12.) As these predictions shall be more and more accomplished, the power, truth, and love of God, will be seen, known, and considered more and more generally; and the progress of the gospel will be with accelerated motion, as the stone falls to the earth with increasing rapidity.—"I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, &c." as it were on purpose to shelter my people, in their return home from the scorching heat of the sun.' Lowth. (Notes, 25:3-5. 32:12. Cant. 2:3.)

V. 21-24. In these prophecies, JEHOVAH speaks to mankind through all generations; and as his predictions are accomplished, his conclusions become still more strictly demonstrative. Let the nations, in the mean time, plead for their idols, and produce their most cogent arguments. Let them bring forth some ancient authenticated oracles, which had already received as signal an accomplishment, as the prophecies made to Abraham, or to Israel, had done: nay, let them give some satisfactory account of the creation of the world, and the transactions of former times, which might stand in competition with that given by Moses; and let them foretell the event of them. Or let them now utter some prophecies, like these of JEHOVAH's prophets, which, coming to pass in process of time, might justify their claim to be worshipped as gods: yea, let them interpose to inflict miraculous judgments upon their despisers, or to effect miraculous deliverances for their worshippers; that the people of JEHOVAH might evidently behold it together, and be dismayed; as the Egyptians, Canaanites, Philistines, and Assyrians had been, at the wonderful works of God. (Notes, Ez. 12:31-36. 15:14-16. Josh. 2:8-16. 1 Sam. 4:7-9. 2 Kings 19:35-37.) But indeed the idols and their works were alike nothing; and they who chose them in preference to the true God, were an abomination to him.—"Let those of your idols, which ye think most powerful, approach." Jerom. I prefer this to all other interpretations of this place. (21) . . . The false gods are called upon to come forth and appear in person, and to give evident demonstration of their foreknowledge and power, by foretelling future events, and exerting their power in doing good or evil.' Bp. Lowth.

V. 25. JEHOVAH here predicts the victories of Cyrus over the Chaldeans and their allies, at least a hundred and fifty years before that expedition was undertaken; as one instance of his foreknowledge and invincible power. (Notes, 13:17. 21:1-20.) Media lay north of Babylon, and Persia eastward, and Cyrus commanded the forces of these two nations. The Lord raised him up to great power, and formed him a man of extraordinary courage and capacity. It is not indeed recorded, that he renounced idolatry, to become the worshipper of God only; yet his decree proves, that he paid some honour and worship to his name, and thus may be said to have called on him: (Notes, Ezra 1:1-4.) and by his wonderful success he trampled down mighty monarchs as mortar, or as the potter treads the clay. It will appear, as we proceed, that the deliverance of the Jews was a typical event; and consequently Cyrus was a typical person. (Notes, 44:25-28. 45:1-6.)

V. 26. (Notes, 21-24.) This is another challenge to idolaters, to prove that their idols had ever declared future events in this manner; that it might be confessed they had a righteous claim to adoration. But, in fact, none of them ever showed, or declared any thing of the kind; none ever heard their words to this effect. (Notes, 1 Kings 18:26-29.)—It is probable, that the Sibylline books, and other pretended prophecies among the heathens, were framed in consequence of this challenge, through the subtlety of Satan, and to evade the force of this argument: and the most plausible part of them seems to have been pillaged from the prophecies of Scripture.—Doubtless fallen angels possess vast conjectural foresight; and, if permitted, could give general intimations of future events, which might frequently come to pass accordingly. But the certain knowledge of futurity must be peculiar to God, who has formed his whole plan, and in performing it fulfils at once his decrees and predictions. In fact all prophecies, except those of the Bible, have been couched in ambiguous terms, and the performance has been dubious and uncertain. They have been exactly such as might previously have been expected, from the subtlety, sagacity, and foresight of the highest created intelligence, apostatized from God, and excluded from all acquaintance with his secret purposes: and a few occasional instances, in which they have come to pass, have been used to hide the shame of numerous failures; or their ambiguity has prevented the detection of them. But the prophecies of Scripture form a regular system, which is fulfilling from age to age, without any failure, or appearance of it. The time of accomplishment was in several instances named, and the exact performance may be demonstrated: and some evidently relate to future times: being so arranged that we can tell very nearly the period, in the series of predicted events, in which we live. And this forms the grand demonstration to mankind at large of the divine original of the Scriptures, on which the Lord himself here evidently rests the weight of the argument: and it gathers strength in proportion as that from miracles may be supposed to lose some part of its energy. (Notes, 42:8, 9. 43:8-13.)

V. 27-29. JEHOVAH, the First and the Last, (Note, 2-4.) first gave notice to Zion of future deliverers, the Medes and Persians: and he sent his prophets to announce the glad tidings of their redemption, before the commencement of their captivity. Now which of the idols of the Gentiles ever had done, or could do the like? Which of them, or of their priests and oracles, had given any intimation of these events? The more the case was examined, the plainer must it appear that they could give no counsel to their worshippers, or answer to their inquiries: for they were all vanity, wind, and confusion. (Notes, Hab. 2:18, 19. 1 Cor. 12:1-3.)

CHAPTER XLII.

JEHOVAH calls on men to behold the Messiah; and predicts his character, ministry, and kingdom, 1-4; and states his commission to Jews and Gentiles, 5-7. He declares that he will glorify himself in fulfilling his predictions, and calls on the nations to rejoice in and praise him, 8-12, promises to remove every obstacle to the conversion of the Gentiles, and denounces the confusion of idolaters, 13-17; predicts the blind and obstinate unbelief of the Jews, and their rejection and consequent miseries, 18-25.

BEHOLD "my servant, whom I uphold; mine Elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my Spirit upon him; he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.

on which it rests, have been reverently and carefully investigated, they are found to have undoubted reason and argument on their side. But the enmity of men's hearts, against the humbling, holy truths and precepts of this precious book, disposes them rather to strengthen themselves, and collect together every apparent argument and plausible objection which they can devise against them; than impartially to examine with a disposition to be convinced and governed by them. Yet the question must be decided at length; and, however men now plead in behalf of infidelity, or impiety, or heresy, they will have nothing to say when they draw near together to meet the Lord upon his judgment-seat.—Every work of God, in accomplishing the prophecies and promises of his word, irrefragably proves his right to our confidence and obedience: and it is well worth our while minutely to consider all that he has done, from the beginning to this day, in fulfilling the antecedent revelations of his word. We should begin from the calling of righteous Abraham, and consider his care of that patriarch, and of Isaac and of Jacob, and of Joseph: we should review his wonders in Egypt, at the Red Sea, in the wilderness, and in Canaan: we should meditate on the "wars of the Lord" under Joshua, the Judges, Samuel, and David; and on the wonders performed for Israel during the reigns of Asa, Jehoshaphat, and Hezekiah: and remember that the authenticity of these histories is fully ascertained, by the concurring prophecies fulfilling at this day. We should next reflect on the return of the captive Jews from Babylon, and their preservation during the prevalence of successive conquerors and oppressors, until the birth of the promised Seed of the woman, the Seed of Abraham, and Son of David. We should compare with these ancient prophecies the history of his character, miracles, doctrine, life, death, resurrection, and kingdom; the establishment of his religion in the world, and its continuance hitherto; notwithstanding the opposition against it from without, and the various methods within, which have been employed to corrupt it. We should also turn aside to contemplate the desolations of Nineveh, Babylon, and Tyre; and even of Jerusalem, when the Saviour had been rejected by his professed worshippers: and whilst the New Testament authenticates all these predictions; we may behold its divine authority demonstrated, in the dispersion and preservation of the Jews as a distinct people; (Note, Luke 21:20-24.) in the long-continued corruptions of popery; and in a variety of other events, which cannot here be particularized. Now, who has wrought and done all these things, according to these ancient predictions, but "the everlasting God," who has also predicted the ruin of idolaters and unbelievers, and the full salvation of his people? Well may determined infidels and idolaters be dismayed, at hearing and seeing such things: for all their efforts to uphold their tottering cause will be in vain; it will shortly be ruined, and every remaining prediction will also be performed.

V. 8-20. Happy are the chosen and righteous servants of the Lord, whom he has called to be his friends, and to walk with him by faith, and in holy obedience! If we have thus been favoured, let us not yield to fear, in the prospect of dangers or enemies: our God will be our Guide and Strength, in every service and difficulty: our conflict may be sharp, but our victory will be sure; all who hate, oppose, or harass us, shall be as nothing; and we shall shortly be out of their reach, and see them no more for ever. (Notes, Rom. 8:28-39.) Why then do we hesitate to pass through scenes of tribulation or persecution; or even through the gloomy valley of death, when the Lord God will hold our right hand, and both inspire courage and consolation? And though we are weak and vile as worms, and the church consists hitherto of but a few despised men, struggling with difficulties like the strong mountain; yet our God will carry us above them all: he will provide for the subverting of every empire on earth, which supports the great empire of Satan, and they shall all be reduced to nothing, or driven away as chaff by the whirlwind; that "we may rejoice in the Lord, and glory in the Holy One of Israel."—These are the blessings reserved for "the poor in spirit," and such as "hunger and thirst after righteousness;" who are become acquainted with their own character, situation, wants, and true interests, and who long for divine illumination, pardon, holiness, and spiritual consolation. Wherever they are placed, or how long soever the desired blessings are delayed, and "they seek water, and find none, and their tongue faileth for thirst;" or however, through conscious guilt, or weakness of faith, they may think that the Lord will leave them destitute; yet he will hear their prayers, and answer them, and not forsake them. In his infinite truth, power, wisdom, and mercy, and in "the unsearchable riches of Christ," they have a never-failing resource: and the Lord will supply all their wants, by means as unexpected, as if rivers should be opened on the tops of mountains, and fountains in the valleys. And as he has planted "trees of righteousness" in the barren Gentile lands; so will he render our barren souls fruitful in all the precious, ornamental, and pleasant fruits of his Spirit; that all, who behold, "may consider, and understand together, that the hand of the Lord hath done this, and the Holy One of Israel hath created it."

V. 21-29. Let the advocates for infidelity, or other doctrines than that of God our Saviour, now produce their cause, and bring forth their strong arguments. Can they show such effects from their soothing and self-flattering systems, as have been, and constantly are produced by genuine Christianity? Or can the infidel answer the arguments from prophecy for the divine original of the Scriptures? Can he match them with equal predictions from "the oracles of reason"? Or satisfactorily explain the appearances of the natural and moral world? Can he prescribe an effectual cure for human depravity? Or give proof to a reflecting mind, that he is competent to establish any system of equal value with that which he labours to degrade? Until he evidently does these things, we must aver, that his cavils spring from pride and enmity to God and holiness, and are as irrational as they are impious; that they are worse than "nothing, and vanity;" and "those who choose them are an abomination."—But a Deliverer is raised up for us of nobler name and greater power than the deliverer of the captive Jews: he will trample all his powerful enemies under his feet, that when He, who from the beginning has declared these things, shall fulfil them, all may acknowledge that he is righteous. He alone sends those who "bring good tidings unto Zion," and all that are not employed by him, can give no good counsel or instruction; nor solve the difficulties of distressed sinners, or speak one word to the purpose. May we then receive his salvation, cast away all our idols, and turn away our ears from hearing, and our eyes from beholding vanity; may we be numbered among his obedient servants and faithful friends, and rejoice in his holy consolation, in life, in death, and through eternal ages.

NOTES.—CHAP. XLII. V. 1-4. When spiritual blessings are predicted under the veil of temporal deliverances: some passages will accord best to the type, and others to the antitype: thus Cyrus, and the redemption of the Jews from captivity, are in this place lost sight of; that the Messiah and his salvation may be brought into full view.—"The natural import of the words, as well as the authority of the New Testament, do plainly determine this and many other texts, here and in the following chapters, to an evangelical sense: the Holy Spirit taking occasion, from the deliverance of the Jews out of their captivity, to give the prophet a view of a more glorious redemption, which should be accomplished by the Messias." Louth. "St. Matthew has applied it directly to Christ; nor can it, with justice or any propriety, be applied to any other person or character whatever." Ep. Louth. (Note, Matt. 12:14-21.)—He was "in the form of God, and took upon him the form of a servant." (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, 49:3-6, 52:13-15, 53:11, 12, Zech. 3:8.) Being upheld by the divine power in his human nature, he "finished the work which was given him to do." He is the first Elect of God, for his own sake, and to be the head of the church; and all others are elect in him: (Note, Eph. 1:3-8.) in his person, righteousness, and mediation, the Father is well pleased and greatly delighted; "the Holy Spirit resteth upon him," and is through him communicated to the church: (Notes, 11:1-5, 59:20, 21, 61:1-3.) and he "brings forth judgment to the Gentiles;" or makes known unto them the truths, precepts, and ordinances of God, that they may become accepted believers, obedient servants, and spiritual worshippers of him. He did not appear on earth with external pomp, attraction, and honour; or to establish his kingdom by the violence and tumult of war and contention; but he was outwardly mean, and behaved with humility, gentleness, and kindness; and acquired his peaceful victories by beneficent miracles, convincing instructions, a holy example, patient sufferings, and a divine power accompanying his words. He is peculiarly tender to the broken hearted, and those whom temptations and afflictions have almost have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law.

crushed, like "the bruised reed;" and will by no means break them; he encourages the first beginning of holy desires in the young convert; and revives the almost expiring spark in the baffled and backsliding believer; though it be only as the offensive smoke from the stalks of the flax, when it does not break forth into a flame; and he will bring forth every man's judgment, with most perfect agreement to the truth of his case and character. 'He shall instruct those that oppose themselves with all meekness and gentleness; he shall patiently "endure the contradictions of sinners against himself," and not, in an angry or clamorous manner, vindicate himself against their calumnies. He will have a tender regard for afflicted consciences, and such as are bowed down under the burden of their sins: and where the least spark of grace appears, he will not quench it, but take the utmost care to keep it alive and improve it.' Louth. In his personal ministry, and in that of his servants, he met with many and formidable difficulties, and powerful opposition; and both he and they were treated with much contempt, enmity, and cruelty; but nothing could induce him to leave his work unfinished, or discourage him in it, till he had established judgment, (or the truth, righteousness, and worship of JEHOVAH,) in the earth; and the most distant nations, accepting his salvation, submitted to his authority, and waited his righteous commands. This has hitherto been accomplished, only in part; but "he will not fail, nor be discouraged," till it be more completely effected throughout the whole earth.

24. v. 5-7. JEHOVAH before spake of his beloved Son and "righteous Servant," here he immediately addresses him. He, the great Creator of heaven and earth, and the Author and Preserver of the lives and souls of all men, declares that he had called, or appointed, the predicted Messiah, "my righteousness," that is, to manifest his righteousness in the salvation of sinners, to fulfil his faithful engagements to his church, and to support the cause of righteousness on earth. Upholding and preserving him, he would give him to be the Surety, the Foundation, and the very Substance, of the new covenant; and the pledge and security of all the covenanted blessings to his people Israel: and likewise to be the Fountain of knowledge, holiness, and happiness to the Gentiles: in order that he might open those understandings which Satan had blinded, through pride, prejudice, and ignorance; and set at liberty from the bondage of sin, those who had been confined in it, as in a noisome and dark dungeon; that they might enjoy the light, liberty, and comfort of his service. V. 8, 9. (Note, Ex. 3:2-6.) JEHOVAH here again addresses mankind in general, declaring his essential glory and excellency and that he would not give the honour and worship 12 Let them ^hgive glory unto the LORD, and declare his praise in the islands.

[Practical Observations.]

13 The LORD shall go forth ^{as} a mighty man, he shall stir up ^kjealousy like a man of war: he shall cry, yea, roar; he shall ^tprevail against his enemies.

14 I have ^{an}long time holden my peace. I have been still, and refrained myself: now will I cry like a travailing woman; I will destroy and ^{will} devour at once.

15 I will make waste mountains and hills, and dry up all their herbs; and I will make the rivers islands, and I will dry up the pools.

16 And ^oI will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; ⁱI will lead them in paths that they have not known: I will make darkness light before them, and ^ccrooked things ^sstraight. These things will I do unto them, ^aand not forsake them.

17 They shall be turned back, *they shall be greatly ashamed, that trust in graven images, that say to the molten images, Ye are our gods.

18 ¶ Hear, ye deaf; and look, ye blind, that ye may see.

19 Who is *blind, but my servant? or deaf, as my messenger that I sent? who is blind as he that is perfect, and blind as the LORD's servant?

which belonged to him to any other; either fallen angels, or graven images, or even the most excellent and exalted creatures: for no limitation can be admitted in so general a declaration.—But, as we are commanded “to honour the Son, even as we honour the Father,” we are sure he is more than Man or Creature, even one with the Father, in the unity of the divine nature. (Note, John 5:20–23.)—It is also added, that as the ancient prophecies received their accomplishment, new predictions were delivered, for the confirmation of true religion, through successive generations. (Notes 41:21–24.26. 44:6–8.)

V. 10-12. The prophet, animated by the glorious subject calls on the nations, even to the ends of the earth, and every remote region which navigation has discovered, with all the inhabitants, and the navigators themselves, to sing praises to JEHOVAH. And he exhorts those dark and barren regions which are like the Arabian deserts, or the uncultivated top of a rock or mountain, to give glory and praise to him for the blessings of his salvation. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 24:13-16; 44:23. 49:9-13, v. 13. 55:12,13.) "The expressions here and in the parallel texts, denote the joy to be so great and universal, that even the inanimate parts of the creation... are exhorted to bear a part in the general chorus." Louth. "Such exhortations imply predictions, that thus it would be at the time appointed. Indeed the latter part of this passage is future: 'The wilderness and the cities thereof shall lift their voice, &c.'"

17-13-17. The prophet seems at first to speak, but the LORD soon resumes the subject. Numerous and confederate enemies would obstruct his purpose of converting the Gentiles, and destroying idolatry: but he would, as a mightier power, with tremendous indignation, intimidate and destroy them. He had long "suffered the nations to walk in their own ways," and idolatry and iniquity to prevail: (Note, Acts 14:11-18, v. 16.) but at the appointed period he would break silence, and with the most vigorous exertions of almighty power, and vehement convulsions in providence, he would ruin his enemies, and effect his great designs. (Note, 59:16-19.) The unbelieving Jews would indeed crucify the Redeemer, and obstruct the gospel: but he would turn their cultivated mountains into a waste, and make their rivers and pools dry land; that is, he would deprive them of their privileges, and cast them off from being his people. (Notes, 29:17-19. 35:5-7, v. 7.) But he would bring the blind and benighted Gentiles into his church, by methods of which they had no previous knowledge: and lead them in the paths of truth, peace, and holiness, to which they had been entirely strangers: he would afford them abundant light and instruction, open the eyes of their understandings, make their way plain and pleasant to them, and not cast them off from being

21 The LORD is 'well pleased for his righteousness' sake; 'he will magnify the law, and make it honourable.

22 But this is 'a people robbed and spoiled; they are all of them snared in holes, and they are hid in prison-houses: they are for a prey, and none delivereth; for 'a spoil, and none saith, Restore.

23 Who among you 'will give ear to this?

his people. (Notes, 5—7. Acts 26:16—18. Eph. 5:8—14. 1 Pet. 2:9, 10.)—This I suppose to be the prophetic meaning of this passage: but it has also a spiritual meaning, applicable to every believer. And this union of the prophetic and spiritual meaning forms one of the greatest beauties and excellencies of this part of Scripture; and exceedingly illustrates the divine wisdom by which it was dictated. (P. O. 13—25.)—The calling of the Gentiles would also be attended with the defeat and confusion of idolaters. (Notes, 41:1—7.) This was remarkably the case in the primitive ages of Christianity; but the prophecy will have a more notable completion, when antichristian, as well as pagan, image-worshippers shall be confounded, put to shame, and perish for ever.

V. 18—20. The Lord here calls the Gentiles, who had been deaf to his voice, and blind to his glory, to hear and see: not without reference to the miracles of Christ. (Note, 35:5—7, v. 5, 6.) Or, as some think, he upbraids the Jews with their blindness and obstinate unbelief. That nation gloried in being the servants and worshippers of JEHOVAH: yet not only others of them, but the priests, prophets, and rulers, who were his messengers to the people, were become more blind and deaf than even the Gentiles: and whilst they deemed themselves so perfect, so wise and righteous, that they needed no instructor, and no repentance, and despised others; they were given up to judicial blindness and obduracy. (Notes, Jer. 5:20—25. 6:10, 11. Matt. 15:12—14. 16:1—4. Rom. 2:17—24.) The Jews, in our Saviour's time, saw indeed numerous miracles to prove his mission, yet they did not observe them to any good purpose; and though they attended on his ministry, as opening their ears to his word; yet they neither believed nor obeyed him. (Marg. Ref.)—The word, (rendered "he that is perfect,") is meshullam in the Hebrew; whence the Arabic Mussulman is derived, a title the Mahometans give to themselves. Louth. See article plus in Golius.

V. 21. This verse is variously interpreted. Some explain it of the willingness which the LORD had always shown, to fulfil his covenant and promises to Israel, for the sake of showing himself faithful and just; and thus to magnify and honour his word. (Note, Ps. 138:2.)—"The LORD took delight in this people for his righteousness' sake; he hath given them an excellent law, and thereby made them honourable." Deut. 4:6—8. Their law, if they had kept close to it, would have been both their ornament and defence. Louth.—But these interpretations seem foreign to the subject of the prophecy, which is allowed to relate to the Messiah, and the conduct of the Jews in rejecting him: nor does it appear that the original can be made to bear this construction; but the verse may be thus rendered: "The LORD is well pleased, because of his" (the Messiah's) "righteousness. He" (the Messiah) "will magnify and render honourable the law."—Christ "brought in an everlasting righteousness;" believers are "made the righteousness of God in him;" his name is "the LORD our righteousness." (Notes, 45:23—25. Jer. 23: 6, 7. Dan. 9:24. 2 Cor. 5:18—21, v. 21.) Thus the holy law of God is established in honour and authority, both as to its precept and sanction. In him, the righteous Servant, the Chosen of God, "his soul delighteth." (Note, 1—4.) "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased;" he always did those things which pleased the Father. This accords entirely with the New Testament, and with the scope of the prophecy. The Messiah is the grand subject of the chapter; and seems here intended, though not expressly named. (1 John 3:16. Gr.) While the Jewish rulers and teachers blindly rejected and crucified him, as an opposer and violator of the divine law, God was "well pleased" on account of his righteousness, because he magnified the law, by his infinitely valuable obedience unto death, as well as by his holy doctrine: so that for the sake of his righteousness and atonement, salvation was freely preached to the Jews first, and then to the Gentiles. And when the Jews put it from them, God "took pleasure for his righteousness' sake, to magnify" and honour "his law," by inflicting on them deserved punishment. This connects the verse with those which follow, and shows the whole who will hearken, and hear for the 'sake to come?

24 Who 'gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? did not the LORD, he against whom we have sinned? for they would not walk in his ways, neither were they obedient unto his law.

25 Therefore 'he hath poured upon him the fury of his anger, and the strength of battle: and it hath set him on fire round about, yet 'he knew not; and it burned him, 'yet he laid it not to heart.

CHAPTER XLIII

Promises to Israel of support, deliverance out of trouble, and abundant mercy and increase of glory.—A challenge to idolaters to expect these prophecies, or the miracles wrought by JEHOVAH for his people, 8–13. Predictions of deliverance from Babylon, attended with the ruin of that city; and of spiritual redemption, 14–21. Heavy charges against Israel, contrasted with the freeness of God's pardoning mercy to them, 22–28.

BUT now thus saith the LORD that "created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Israel, ¹Fear not: for I have redeemed thee, ²I have called thee by thy name; ³thou art mine.

² When thou "passeth through the waters, ⁴I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee; ⁵when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee.

³ For I am the LORD thy God, ⁶the Holy One of Israel, thy Saviour: ⁷I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee.

the Redeemer's name resound through our cities, villages, plains, and mountains; and let our merchants and sailors give glory to the Lord, and declare his praise, and concur their efforts, with that of all the other inhabitants of our island, in conveying the same inestimable treasure to all those, who yet "sit in darkness and the shadow of death, to guide their feet into the way of peace."

V. 13–25. Alas! iniquity and infidelity still abound, and Satan is permitted to deceive the nations of the world. For a long time JEHOVAH has held his peace; and his enemies exult in the hope that they shall triumph over his gospel; but their consternation will equal their anguish, when he shall appear to confound and destroy them, and to desolate whole nations, which have sinned in defiance of his word.—All his saints in heaven and on earth will acknowledge, that he "brought them when blind in a way that they knew not." He met them with his word, when they were not seeking after him; he sent his ministers to their neighbourhood, perhaps against their will; or, he led them, in providence, while pursuing worldly things, to the places where his gospel was preached; and at length he conquered their prejudices and opened their eyes. Then he led them in paths of truth and peace, and sometimes of trial and temptation, to which they were utter strangers; but he still "made darkness light before them, and crooked things straight;" he cleared up their doubts, obviated their perplexities, helped them to surmount obstacles, and did them good by all their troubles; and thus gave them daily proof, that he would never leave or forsake them, either in temptation, in death, or judgment; when all the worshippers of idols and workers of iniquity shall be confounded together.—But alas! how many professed Christians, and nominal ministers, are more blind, than even the benighted heathens! so that, whilst the voice of God cauteh "the deaf to hear and the blind to see;" those who think they do see, and are proud of their knowledge and virtue, are given up to judicial blindness and obstinacy; and all instruction and arguments tend to increase their enmity and guilt. Whilst the Lord is well pleased in saving sinners, through the righteousness of Christ; he will also take pleasure in glorifying his justice, by punishing such proud despisers: indeed the present condition of the Jews is a warning to all such as oppose the gospel. Who then, among them, or among us, "will hearken for the time to come?" And, seeing he has thus poured out his indignation on that once favoured people, for their sins; let us lay it to heart, and "fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of us should be found to come short of it." (Notes, Heb. 2:1–4. 4:1,2. 12:22–25.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XLIII. V. 1, 2. (Note, 4:2–25.) From the conclusion of the preceding chapter, the pious remnant in Israel might have inferred that the Lord was about finally to cast off the whole nation. But he here assures them, that, having created them, formed them into a people, redeemed them from their enemies, called them by the name of Israel, ("a prince of God,") to be his own inheritance; he would still show them special favours: even as if, by his powerful presence with them, they should pass through seas and rivers; nay, through raging fires, without harm or danger. Accordingly, the nation being preserved, through all the ravages of the Chaldean invasion, and through the captivity, was again restored to prosperity: even the desolations which attended the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, did not consume it; but the Jews have been kept distinct from other nations to this day, notwithstanding their dispersions, and the massacres and oppressions to which they have been continually exposed. (Notes, 5–7, 41:10–14. Num. 23:9. Jer. 30:10,11.) This is as marvellous an effect of JEHOVAH's power, as if they had passed through vehement flames unscorched, or dry shod through rivers and seas. (Note, Ps. 66:11,12.)—This seems to be the prophetic meaning; as a promise it ensures the preservation of true believers, through all possible trials and temptations.—"God's elect are called "the work of his hands;" (29:23, 60:21.) and these God will never utterly forsake. (Ps. 138:8.) Louth.

Called thee by thy name. (1) "When a person of great dignity calls an inferior by his name, it is a token of a particular intimacy, and doing him a great deal of honour. 45:4, 49:1. Ez. 33:12. ... It is probable, that many of the promises, mentioned here and in the following chapters, relate to the general restoration of the Jews." Louth.

V. 3, 4. When Egypt was desolated, that Israel might be liberated, Egypt was given for the ransom of Israel. Sennacherib was taken off from besieging Jerusalem, by successful wars against the Egyptians and Ethiopians; and these nations, when vanquished by Cyrus, might be considered as a ransom paid him for the release of the Jews. Or, in general, when the preservation of Israel required the ruin of any nation, the Lord readily gave it up for their sakes. Before he had publicly testified his special regard for them, they were base and contemptible, but his favour rendered them honourable among the nations; and he would persevere in his love, and continue to give the same proofs of it, as heretofore.—"I will not spare any man, rather than thou shouldest perish; for God more esteemeth one of his faithful, than all the wicked in the world."—"I will give man for thee;" Adam in the singular number. The clause is thus literally rendered in the old version.—"The second Man," (or Adam,) "is the Lord from heaven;" and "God spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all."

V. 5–7. The Jews were scattered by the Chaldeans into different regions; and the Israelites were carried by the Assyrians into divers lands: but these were professedly the sons and daughters of the Lord, and called by his name; and the Jews were gradually gathered from their captivity to Jerusalem and Judah. Yet it does not appear that many of them were brought from the west, or the south, on that occasion; or that they were generally new created to holiness, and prepared to glorify God, as it here implied. (Notes, 1:2,14–21, v. 21. 11:1–16. 63:16–19. 66:19–23.) But the conversion of sinners in every quarter of the globe, to be through Christ the children of God; and the future conversion of the dispersed Israelites and Jews to Christianity, and restoration to their own land, seem to be predicted. (Notes, John 1:49–53. 1 Pet. 2:9,10.) It is undeniable, from the application of the name of Babylon in the New Testament, that the restoration of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity was typical of the deliverance of the church from antichristian tyranny; and, probably, the destruction of the seat of Antichrist will be followed by the conversion of the Jews: as the taking of Babylon by Cyrus preceded their release from captivity; and that proud city from that time began to decay, till it was "swept with the besom of destruction." The conversion of the Jews, and the bringing the fullness of th

JEHOVAH promises to pour out his Spirit on the seed of Israel and to convert them to himself, 1-5. He declares himself to be the only true and eternal God, and exposes the gross and stupid folly of idolaters, 6-20. He calls on Israel to remember these things; and promises forgiveness and many blessings; especially deliverance by Cyrus from the Babylonish captivity, 21-28.

have been offered, and during which they have persisted in obstinate rebellion: and yet, ere long, "for his own name's sake," JEHOVAH will blot out their sins, and restore them to his church, and to their own land. (Note, Ez. 16:60-63. 36:25-36.)

V. 26-28. If either Judah or Israel could deny this charge, let them remind God of their good works, and plead with him, declaring on what ground they expected to be continued in his special favour, and to be justified before him. But indeed their remote ancestors, from Adam to that time, and their high-priests, chief rulers, and teachers especially, had combined in transgression: and therefore God had treated them as if they were heathen, notwithstanding their external relation to him and his sanctuary; and had given up the nation, as accursed, to be every where reproached, and treated with contempt.—"I have suffered the Babylonians to profane the sanctuary, to abuse the chief priests, and pollute whatever is sacred. 47:5. Lam. 2:6, 7. 4:14. Louth.—Their king, also, the anointed of the Lord, of David's line, might be intended. (Marg. Ref.)—The prophecy, however, certainly had its most signal fulfilment in the combination of the high-priest, chief priests, scribes, and rulers against Christ; and in the rejected and disgraced state of the nation, with its rulers and teachers, to this day. But, as of mere mercy, their national guilt was formerly pardoned, and they were brought back from Babylon; so the Lord, of the same abounding grace, will bring the nation to repentance and faith in Christ, and glorify himself in blotting out all their transgressions.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. If we are not only called by the name of the Lord our Creator and Redeemer, but are really partakers of his grace, and aim to live to his glory; we can have no just cause to fear any thing that can befall ourselves, the church, or the world. We may meet with hot fires of tribulation and persecution, during our pilgrimage; we may pass through deep waters of temptation, and we must cross the Jordan of death: but the Lord will be with us; and no fire can injure us, no waters drown us, with him for our Guard, our Upholder, and our Comforter. He has done far more for us, than when he gave Egypt for the ransom of Israel; for he has "given his only begotten Son to be the propitiation for our sins;" and though in ourselves we were exceedingly base and vile; yet this great ransom of the Holy One of Israel our Saviour has dignified our species, and shown the value of our souls; and when the grace of the Holy Spirit manifests that we are precious in the sight of the Lord, and the objects of his special love, we are ennobled, enriched, and made honourable, as "kings and priests unto him." Then, whatever endangers the life of our souls shall be removed; and all that can be wanting shall be supplied: for as "he hath not spared his own Son, but delivered him up for us; all; how shall he not with him freely give us all things?" (Notes, Rom. 8:28-39).—The most powerful princes and empires are as nothing before God, when compared with his church. For all true believers, are "the seed of Israel," "the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty;" when he calls, they must be given up, and cannot be withheld by the powers of darkness, from coming to him from all the ends of the earth; and he will new create them for his glory, and be honoured in them and by them to all eternity.—But alas! many, who are favoured with the word of God, are as blind and deaf as the most stupid idolaters, or their senseless images; and they only use their senses and faculties to ensure their own condemnation! But none will be more justly brought forth to punishment, than the advocates of false religion in preference to divine revelation.—Let the whole world assemble, and endeavour to form such a book as the Bible, if they can: let them match the prophecies which are contained in it, and fulfilled from age to age, to authenticate its sacred truths and holy precepts; let them produce their witnesses, and see whether they can be justified at the bar of unprejudiced reason, before they appear before the tribunal of God. Or, if they cannot do this, let them hear his word, acknowledge its truth, and yield obedience to it. Every servant of God is witness for him, and concurs in the testimony of his prophets and apostles, and in that of his beloved Son: and they all can give such an account of what he has wrought in them, shown to them, and done for them, as may tend to lead others to know, believe, and understand, his power, truth, and love. He only is "the true God and eternal life;" he saves his people by himself, and needs no created aid; and the help which he sends, in answer to their prayers, enables them to testify, that "he never faileth those who trust in him."

V. 14-28. As none can deliver the enemies of God out of his hand; so none can hinder him from effecting the deliverance of his friends. It is as easy for him to divide rivers and seas, and to destroy the legions which obstruct their path, as to quench the fire in tow. But external miracles are as nothing compared with that great work and "mystery of godliness, God manifested in the flesh," "purchasing the church with his own blood." These "things the angels desire to look down into." And all that remains to be done, in order to bring every believer to glory, to rescue sinners from the bondage of Satan, and to cause the heathen to rejoice in glorifying God our Saviour, is little, compared with that work of incomprehensible love and power. Let us then bless God for the waters which spring forth for us, in this barren wilderness, and let us endeavour to answer the end of our creation and redemption, by showing forth his praises.

—But, alas! too many professed Christians love a cheap and easy religion: and are negligent or weary of every duty, and grudge all expense or trouble; nay, they weary God by their iniquities and rebellions. Indeed he may well expostulate with each of us. We allow his service to be perfect freedom; that he has a right to all we have and are; and that he requires of us nothing, but for our own and each other's profit: yet often we neglect to call upon him, or seem weary of his ordinances; we are scanty in our measure of services, as if we grudged him our time; we often grieve his Holy Spirit, and weary out his patience with our relapses into sin, and our ingratitude and folly: so that, from first to last, he "blotteth out our transgressions for his own sake," and not because we have any claim to such a benefit. If any man imagine himself an exception to this rule, let him draw near and plead his cause, and declare on what grounds he rests his hope of being justified. Alas! the attempt is desperate: our first father transgressed the covenant, and we all, teachers and rulers as well as others, have copied his example of rebellion: and if we should all be left under his curse, and to everlasting reproach and misery, we could have nothing to answer or plead in our own behalf. But "where sin hath abounded, grace hath much more abounded." Yet let none "sin on, that grace may abound;" we have no reason to expect pardon, except we seek it by faith in Christ; and this is always attended by deep repentance, and followed by newness of life, from hatred of sin, and love to God our Saviour.

V. 3-5. Water is the emblem of the Holy Spirit. (Notes, Ez. 17:5, 6. John 4:10-15. 7:37-39.) As water refreshes, enlivens, cleanses, and fructifies the earth; so do his influences the soul, which without them would remain desolate of good and of all true consolation. (Notes, 32:15-20. 41:17-20.) When any of the descendants of Israel, through reviving ages, thirst for spiritual blessings, this promise is ready in their Scriptures for their direction and encouragement. As a prediction it has been accomplished as often as true religion has been revived: but it seems particularly to predict the pouring out of the Spirit on, and immediately after, the day of Pentecost; and a still more glorious completion may yet be expected, both in respect of Jews and and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring:

4 And they shall spring up as among the grass, as willows by the water-courses.

5 One shall say, I am the Lord's; and another shall call himself by the name of Jacob; and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, and surname himself by the name of Israel.

6 Thus saith the Lord, the King of Israel, and this Redeemer the Lord of hosts; I am the First, and I am the Last; and besides me there is no God.

7 And who, as I, shall call, and shall declare it, and set it in order for me, since I appointed the ancient people? and the things that are coming, and shall come, let them show unto them.

8 Fear ye not, neither be afraid: have not I told thee from that time, and have declared it? ye are even my witnesses. Is there a God besides me? yea, there is no God: I know not any.

Gentiles.—When desires are excited and fervent prayers offered, for "the pouring out of the Spirit" on any place, where the power of godliness has been little experienced and witnessed, the blessing may be expected; and converts will spring up as grass in well-watered meadows, or as willows on the banks of rivers and brooks; and these will dedicate themselves to the Lord, as his servants and worshippers, setting their hands and seals to the new covenant of his grace, and joining themselves to his people, to walk in holy fellowship with them. (Note, Deut. 26:17-19.)—Some think, that the phrase, "subscribe with his hand unto the Lord," signifies bearing his name, as belonging to him: thus soldiers are said to have been marked in the hand with the name of their leader, slaves with that of their owner, and idolaters with that of their idol. (Note, Rev. 13:13-17.)

V. 6-8. Israel's Redeemer and King, the everlasting JEHOVAH, and the only living and true God, here again challenges the idols and their worshippers to call forth, and to declare in order before him, a series of predictions similar to that which he had given and been accomplishing, since he appointed to the ancient inhabitants of the earth their several abodes; and to show the things which should come to pass immediately, or in distant periods. By "the ancient people," or "the people of eternity," Israel seems to be meant, as the type of the elect, whom "God hath from the beginning chosen unto salvation."—He chose Abraham and his family to be his peculiar people; over whom he hath all along exercised a particular providence; and hath from time to time foreshowed what should befall them, which accordingly hath come to pass. Louth. Indeed a compendious history of that nation, from the calling of Abraham to this day, (that is, for three thousand seven hundred years,) might be drawn up, without very material alterations, from the various prophecies concerning them contained in the Scriptures.—As then Israel had full proof that their God alone could do such wonders, they ought not either to worship idols, or to fear idolaters. They were witnesses for God, that he had from ancient times declared the events which had come to pass; and he appealed to them, whether there were any God beside him, or any other Rock, or Protector, who could defend them, for He, who knew all things, knew not any.—Let any serious mind compare this decisive language, with the tenor of the New Testament concerning Jesus Christ; and he must perceive that it is necessary to admit the mystery of distinct persons in the Godhead, in order to reconcile them. (Marg. Ref. 8, 1, u. Notes, 9:6, 7, 41:2-4, 43:8-13, Rev. 1:8-11, 2:8, 9.)

V. 9-11. The subsequent passage contains the most keen reproof of idolatry, and even invective against it, that is any where extant. The makers of graven images must be very vanity and emptiness, when the objects of their supreme confidence and delight, formed by themselves, were utterly worthless; the very idols sufficiently bear witness to the folly and wickedness of their votaries; as it was evident, that they could neither see nor know any thing; and this should have rendered every intelligent being ashamed of worshipping a lifeless block for a deity. Indeed, all concerned in making or worshipping them, would at length be ashamed of their folly. The artists themselves were "of Adam," weak, dying men: how then could they confer power and divinity on their workmanship? Can a dying man make a living God? and though they should all gather together to support their cause, they would be intimidated and confounded before the God of Israel. (Notes, Dan. 3:51-9, 18-24, Hab. 2:18-20.)—The clause rendered "they are their own witnesses," may be translated, "they" (that is, the idols, the immediate antecedent,) are "witnesses to them."

V. 12-17. The process of image-making is here described, in order to expose the folly of idolaters. The smith exhausted his strength, and would not allow himself time for rest or refreshment, in cutting, hammering out, and fashioning his idol; which after all could not preserve him from fainting or perishing by hunger and thirst.—The carpenter, in his way too, employed his strength and skill in forming an idol of wood, to set up in his house as the object of his adoration; though it was as senseless as the meanest part of his furniture, and far more useless. In order to be prepared to serve his neighbours with this strange manufacture, he provided a large stock of several kinds of timber, selecting that which grew most strong and straight; and even planting ash-trees, and waiting their growth, for this purpose. And when the boughs and chips, and other parts of it, had been used for fuel; he was so absurd, as to make his deity of the same log, to prostrate himself before it, and to pray unto it, saying, "Deliver me, for thou art my God!" That which warmed him and cooked his food, though the refuse, was useful; but that which made the image was good for nothing, nay, an abomination! (Notes, 40:18-20, 41:5-7, 46:5-9, Jer. 10:3-11.)—We are not to conclude that all the idolaters were so stupid as to terminate their adoration upon the lifeless image; for some of the heathen poets acutely derided the folly of those who did so. Yet the practice naturally led the unthinking multitude to adore the idol itself. And the invisible object, which a few conceived to be present with it, and to be represented by it, was commonly as much the creature of their imagination, as the other was the work of their hands. In every way God was dishonoured and robbed of his worship, and Satan was gratified as the object of their adoration.—The history of popery shows that similar effects have uniformly followed the use of images; whether as representing the saints and angels which the people invoke as mediators, or as representing the persons in the sacred Trinity.—A heathen poet ludicrously puts these words into the mouth of an image, "I was of old the trunk of a fig-tree, a block of

V. 1-5. When the greater part of any church is become totally corrupt, and ripe for divine vengeance; there may yet be a few of another character: warnings and calamities may likewise bring a remnant to repentance, and encouragement must be given to them. For, however the Lord may deal with atrocious offenders, he will always have a company of chosen servants, who will hear his call and obey his voice. Having formed them to be upright in heart, he unites towards them the love of a Creator, and of a Redeemer; and he would have them discard those dejecting fears, which are often excited by his denunciations of wrath against hypocrites. To whatever regions Providence may lead them, his grace shall refresh their thirsty souls, and cause them to flourish as a watered garden. The blessed influences of the Spirit render the barren desert, and the dry ground, a fruitful field. May our souls, our families, our congregations, our land, and all the nations of the earth be abundantly replenished with it! then shall we abound in the fruits of righteousness, and believers will be daily added to the Lord.—He is ever ready to receive the sinner to mercy, and into his service; and nothing can hinder our being "his people, and he our God," except our own proud and carnal unwillingness. But when his Spirit is poured out on any congregation or company, which was before formal and lifeless; one and another continually springs up, and comes forth, to profess his acceptance of the Saviour and subjection to him: this tends to enliven others, and a blessed change is soon perceived.—It beehoves those, who have learned to hope in the mercy of God, and to love his pleasant ways, to make an open profession of their faith and willing devotedness to his service; solemnly to ratify the new covenant of his grace, and to avow their purpose of cleaving to him steadfastly; to join themselves to his people; to put themselves under the care of such "as watch for their souls," and to seek the benefit of brotherly inspection and admonition. The Lord's supper, when properly administered and received, is suited to answer these ends: and new converts should not be slack in this "subscribing with their hands unto the LORD, and surmounting themselves by the name of Israel."

V. 6-20. Who can presume to compare himself with Israel's Redeemer and King? He is "the First and the Last;" he alone calls, and declares, and appoints, and orders every thing with absolute authority: his majesty and mercy are alike unrivalled: and, "beside him," none is entitled to our worship, or deserving of our confidence.—As "God is in Christ reconciling the world unto himself," sinners coming "to God by him," may be happy in his favour, rich by his bounty, and safe under his protection: but Satan so blinds the hearts of men, that they generally neglect and despise these blessings, for the sake of some senseless idolatry, worthless form, or base iniquity.—We may well be amazed at the absurdity of those unnumbered millions, who have worn snipped "wood and stone, the work of men's hands," to the disgrace of their reason and understanding. Yet we should also be humbled; as we are equally capable of the same folly, though the blessed light of revelation has preserved most of us from the grosser effects of this propensity. But what multitudes are there, even among protestant Christians in Britain, whose characters and lives are vanity; whose "detectable things cannot profit;" and whose grovelling pursuits, polluting pleasures, and childish amusements, bear witness against them, and should cover them with shame! What numbers, whose religious principles and observances can no more abide scrutiny, or stand the test of Scripture or common sense, than those of the poor pagans! The object of their worship is an imaginary being: and they think of God, and behave towards him, as if he were altogether such a one as themselves. (Note, Ps. 50:16-21.) nay, they expect him to reward with eternal felicity, such services as they would disdain, if imitated by any of their domestics: a mere lip-labour, slovenly performed, belying the sentiments, and covering the enmity, of their hearts.—But sometimes men will even weary and deny themselves more in a false religion, than would be necessary in the service of God. Many of us "likewise can remember a time, when we more abridged ourselves of rest and refreshment, in following our own humours and pleasures; than we now willingly do for the glory of God, and in attending on his ordinances. Indeed the earnestness, assiduity, perseverance, and self-denial of worldly or superstitious men, may put believers to shame; when they consider how far they are surpassed by those, who act from motives so immensely inferior, and for such worthless acquisitions. (Notes, Luke 16:1-8. P. O. 1-12. Note, 1 Cor. 9:24-27.) The absurdity and madness of man can never be accounted for; except we advert to the power of Satan to shut his eyes and his heart, that he cannot know nor understand; and recollect that the Lord often sends men "strong delusions to believe a lie," because they hate the truth through love of sin. In this way they are brought "to feed upon ashes;" their deceived hearts turn them aside from truth and holiness; and they are so fettered by their lusts, that they cannot deliver their souls, nor discover that they are holding fast a lie in their right hand. It is awful to think how many are in this situation: they make an evident error their first principle of activity, and will neither be convinced, nor persuaded to doubt of the truth of their favourite mistake: they cling to it most closely when most alarmed, and grasp it fast in the hour of death, and go into eternity with it in their right hand. Oh, may we remember these things, and take care not to provoke God, by sinning in defiance of conviction, to give us up to be thus blinded and deceived! Let us pray for the illuminating and renewing influences of his Holy Spirit, that we may be formed to be his servants; and that he would give us "the love of the truth, that we may be saved;" and thus secure us from every delusion, and assure us that we shall never be forgotten by him.

V. 21-28. The manifold transgressions of all men, as fallen children of Adam, were risen or rising into a thick and black cloud, and vengeance was about to burst on their heads: but the sacrifice of Christ has caused this cloud to vanish, and we are now without exception called and commanded to return to the LORD, for "he hath redeemed us." Let us then obey the gracious call, and avail ourselves of this abundant mercy; that we may join the songs of the inhabitants of heaven and earth, in praising the Lord, that he has done this, and has glorified himself in the redemption of his people. How should we exult and triumph at the thought, that he "who stretched forth the heavens alone, and spread abroad the earth by himself," is become our gracious Redeemer!—He will indeed "confound the wisdom of the wise, and turn them backward, and make their knowledge foolish;" and above all he will put to shame false teachers and deceivers, whom Satan employs to support idolatry, impiety, infidelity, or false religion. But he will confirm the word and approve the counsel of his faithful ministers: and when his promises and threatenings shall be completely performed, those, who now despise his worshippers and messengers, will then perceive their wisdom and happiness. He, that "knoweth the end from the beginning," has given commandment to replenish Jerusalem, to erect his spiritual temple, and to repair the decayed places of his church. A nobler shepherd than Cyrus is commissioned to gather together his scattered flock, and to feed and protect them in his fold: and he will do all the Father's pleasure, till his work be fully completed. As he has removed obstacles, and raised up instruments to fulfil former prophecies, so will he do, in respect of all which yet remain to be accomplished: until the top-stone of his temple be brought forth "with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace, unto it." (Note, Zech. 4:4-7.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XLV. V. 1-6. The Lord here addressed Cyrus, as if present: he was the anointed of God, as he was set apart for this work, and as in some respects a type of Christ our Redeemer. Cyrus, being "holden by the right hand," and strengthened by the Lord, would certainly be victorious. (Note, 41:10-14.) JEHOVAH subdued many other nations before him, previously to his conquest of Babylon: and he degraded or enfeebled many kings by him; Belshazzar especially was thus intimidated before he was destroyed. (Notes, 21:3-5. Dan. 5:1-9.) All the streets of Babylon, which led down on each side to the river, were secured by two-leaved brazen gates: these were ordered to be shut every night: and when Cyrus marched his army into the channel of the river, he could not, without great danger and difficulty, have taken the city, had not the Babylonians (engaged that night in feasting and mirth, and despising his efforts) left the gates open. Thus God "opened before him the two-leaved gates;" or what was equivalent, he took care that they "should not be shut;" and so Cyrus and his captains and army met with no hindrance, till they surprised the king in his palace, and by his death ended the contest at once. (Notes, Jer. 51:31, 32, 38-40. Dan. 5:30, 31.) Indeed the Lord went before him, through his whole expedition, to remove every obstacle to his success: (Note, 40:3-5.) he broke word, which he had spoken. Nor shall his word "return." (Note, 55:10, 11.) for assuredly, "every knee shall bow" in adoration and submission to him; and "every tongue shall confess" his name, and vow allegiance to him. (Note, Ps. 2:10-12.) "Surely," shall each of them say, "In JEHOVAH have I righteousness and strength," declaring all their righteousness to be in Christ, "the LORD our righteousness;" all their holy dispositions and righteous actions to spring from his sanctifying grace; and all their safety, support, inward strength, and outward protection, to be in and from him alone. To him, men shall come from every nation for these blessings; (Note, Gen. 49:10.) all that are enraged at the honour paid to him and that hate his cause, shall be put to shame; (Note, 54:15-17.) and all believers, the true "seed of Israel," shall be accounted righteous, as one with him; and shall glory and rejoice in him, as their whole Salvation, their Friend, and Portion; as made of God the Father unto them, "Wisdom, and Righteousness, and Sanctification, and Redemption." (Notes, 1 Cor. 1:26-31. 2 Cor. 5:18-21. Phil. 2:9-11.) The passage seems immediately to predict the establishment of the divine Redeemer's kingdom on earth, the destruction of all implacable enemies to him, from among men, and the most universal subjection to the gospel, through all nations. (Notes, 41:10-14. 1 Cor. 15:20-28.) But St. Paul also applies it to the future judgment; (Note, Rom. 14:7-12.) when every man must give an account of himself to God, by appearing before the tribunal of Christ. Then all will know his right to be their King and Judge; his enemies will be put to shame, and perish; his people shall be declared righteous, and shall glory in him as their God and Saviour for ever.—Bishop Lowth translates the word, rendered in our version "a just God and a Saviour," (21) "A God that uttereth truth, and granteth salvation." Yet he assigns no reason for deviating so materially from the literal, general, and almost universally received meaning of the words "A just God and a Saviour." A God infinite in justice, and infinite in mercy, is the God who has revealed himself to man in the Scriptures, as "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ;" and by this especially he is distinguished, not only from the idols of the heathen, but also from the imaginary supreme being of infidel philosophers of every description. (Note, 2 Cor. 1:1-7. v. 3.) It may be questioned whether the word (צַדִּיק) ever signifies simply uttering truth; though it sometimes means faithful, or performing engagements, which were originally entered into of free grace: for the fulfilling of an engagement is an act of justice, whatever induced the person to make it: (Note, 1 John 1:3-10.) and justice seems ultimately in all cases the meaning of the original word. Again, he renders a word from the same root, Salvation, which our version translates most properly, "righteousness," (24) and thus the strong testimony of this chapter to the leading doctrine of the believer's being "made the righteousness of God in Christ," is wholly kept out of sight!—Here God confirms by an oath the truth of what was foretold in the twenty-second verse; that the time should certainly come, when all the world should give glory to him, by paying him solemn worship, . . . and by swearing or professing allegiance to him. . . . What the prophet speaks here in the person of God, is applied by St. Paul to Christ, that is, to the second person of the blessed Trinity. Comp. 61, with John 12:41. 8:14, with Rom. 9:33. . . . Many more such instances might be given; and that the prophets of the Old Testament had all along an eye to the times of the New, and spoke of the Messias as God. . . . This likewise (24) is very applicable to Christ, who is called "The LORD our Righteousness," . . . and is "made unto us Righteousness." . . . To be justified is a term taken from the forms of law, and signifies to be acquitted, or pronounced innocent, and come off victorious in a cause. Lowth.—It seems, indeed, in the Scripture to mean even more than this; namely, to be accounted and dealt with, not only as innocent, which merely exempts from punishment; but as righteous, and entitled to the reward of righteousness.—Adam was innocent on the day of his creation: but he never attained to righteousness; that is, in himself: because he did not fulfil the commands of God, during the probation allotted him. (Notes, 61:10, 11. Dan. 9:24. Rom. 1:17. 3:21-26. 2 Cor. 5:18-21. v. 21. Phil. 3:7-11. 2 Pet. 1:12.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

24 "Surely, shall one say, 'In the LORD have I righteousness, and strength: *even to him shall men come; and all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed.

in the execution of his immense, his universal plan. He frequently employs such as know him not, to accomplish those ends which require extensive dominion, and are attended with great bloodshed: for he knows, that obscure situations are more advantageous to the souls, and peaceful employments more agreeable to the minds of his true people. (Note, Jam. 2:5-7.)—The Lord does all things for the sake of "his elect," and to promote their comfort and salvation: and we should improve our talents for the same purpose. (Notes, 2 Cor. 4:7, 13-18. 2 Tim. 2:3-13. v. 10. Tit. 1:1-4.)—It is the express design of the prophecies, which are fulfilling from age to age, by those who know not God, to attract the attention of men, "from the rising to the setting of the sun," to inquire after the LORD, by whose inspiration the Bible was written: we should therefore study the prophecies, mark their accomplishments, and point them out to others for the same important ends. (Notes, Rev. 1:3. 22:6, 7.) Whether peace and prosperity, or evil and adversity be allotted us; we should recollect, that the Lord creates all these things, that all creatures are his instruments, and that nothing can exceed the limits which he assigns it. From God "the Father of lights cometh every good and perfect gift;" and even the evil, that he permits, is overruled for greater good to all his faithful servants, and to the more complete discovery of the glory of his name. But, whilst we submit to his will in those troubles which come upon us through the wickedness of men; and give him the glory of all the good that is wrought in us or done by us: let us take all the blame of our sins to ourselves; for "God cannot be tempted of evil, neither tempteth he any man." Let us turn his promises into prayers, and beseech him, that "the heavens may pour down righteousness" and grace upon the earth, rendering it exceedingly fruitful; and that salvation, with all its sanctifying effects, "may spring forth and abound in every land;" that our "God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ."

V. 9-14. We ought carefully to watch over ourselves, and repress any risings of our hearts against the decrees, dispensations, and precepts of the Lord.—It is madness in the extreme for us frail creatures to contend with the Almighty, while we see such numbers perish by their contests with feeble mortals like themselves. JEHOVAH disdains and abhors our impotent arrogance and perverseness, when we dare to object to his sovereign appointments. It is our wisdom to reverence the depths which we cannot fathom, and to silence our presumption by considering our own ignorance and weakness, and his infinite perfections; and by taking it for granted, that "the Judge of all the earth will do right." (Notes, Gen. 18:23-26. Rom. 11:33-36.) We may inquire of the Holy One of Israel, concerning the things which he freely gives to his children, and of what he requires of his creatures; and we may ask what we will of him in humble prayer, and he will do it for us, if it be for our good. But it is intolerable insolence in any man, to demand an account of the Lord's dealings, as if he had authority to interfere, and give orders to him how he ought to dispose of his own works. Yet nothing is more common than objections and decisions, which imply this horrid blasphemy! But let us endeavour to get acquainted with our own character and place; and to wait the performance of the Lord's promises, in the way of his precepts: and in due time he will answer all objections, and clear up all difficulties.—Our offended Creator, when he might have left us captives to sin and Satan, to whom we were sold for our crimes, has raised up a mighty Redeemer for us, even his own Son; who, having satisfied the divine justice with the sacrifice of himself, sets the souls of believers at liberty, "without price or reward," and makes them citizens of that holy city, which he has builded for his own eternal residence. As this greatest of all promises has already been accomplished, we may be assured that all the rest shall in due season. (Notes, Ps. 138:2. Rom. 5:6-10. 8:32-34.) He will bring all the potent and mighty nations of the earth to join themselves to his despised people, and make them heirs in Christ Jesus; and they shall all know, that God honours and dwells in his church, and that none else can bless them. Many have thus yielded themselves to Christ and to his people, and have supplicated admission to their communion and privileges: others will continue to come in to them, till his cause has gained the entire ascendancy: and all who truly join themselves to the Lord and his people, are constrained by love, to devote their labour and substance to promote his honour and cause, and to count "his service perfect freedom."

V. 15-25. Our God and Saviour often hides his tender compassions behind frowning dispensations; and requires us to walk by faith, and to give him credit for his wisdom, justice, truth, and mercy, when we cannot see them; for "what he doeth we know not now, but we shall know hereafter." (Notes, Job. 13:6-11, v. 7.) If then he hides his face from us, let us humbly wait for him: for while the most prosperous sinners, and self-confident hypocrites, will soon go into confusion together; they who trust in the Lord, and partake of his grace, shall be saved, in and by him, "with an everlasting salvation, and shall not be ashamed or confounded for ever." Neither his works nor his word are in vain: as he created the world to be inhabited; so he gave Israel his oracles that they should be proclaimed, and his promises that they should be believed. He would not have this light put in a secret or dark place, but diffused far and wide; and he never said to the seed of Jacob, who wrestled, and prevailed, and was surnamed Israel, that they should seek his face in vain. (Notes, Gen. 32:24-28.) For the Lord speaks in truth and righteousness; and though to the proud, carnal heart, his words appear obscure; they are all plain to the humble soul, as well as sincere and faithful, and to be entirely depended on. Let sinners then renounce their iniquities and superstitions, and cease to pray to mediators or idols, that cannot save: (Notes, Ps. 68:19, 20. John 4:21-24, v. 22.) and let them with one consent draw near to him, who is "a just God and a Saviour," and who glorifies his righteousness in pardoning the most atrocious offenders, when they, penitently and in faith, rely on the merits of Jesus Christ and "come to God by him." (Note, Heb. 7:23-25.) He, who once was lifted up on the cross, now calls from his glorious throne, and invites all the ends of the earth to look to him for salvation. He is "the true God and eternal life;" and besides him there is no other able to save from the wrath to come. In one way or another all must come before him, and submit unto him: for he has irrevocably confirmed it with an oath, that "every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall swear unto him." As we then must all appear before his judgment-seat; and all his enemies, however fierce or powerful, yea, all that will not have him to reign over them, must be covered with shame and confusion: may we now come to him as "the Lord our Righteousness," and trust in him for acceptance, sanctification, and victory over every enemy: that we may be justified, and rejoice and glory in Him, and in his salvation, and walk worthy of it; and at last be "presented faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy." (Note, Chap. 22-25.)

NOTES.—CHAPTER XLVI. V. 1, 2. Bel, (a contraction; probably of Baal,) and Nebo, were the two principal idols of Babylon. When that city was taken by the Persians, the images of these imaginary deities were seized on by the victors, and broken down; and among the rest, no doubt, the golden image, set up by Nebuchadnezzar: (Note, Dan. 3:1-7.) for the Persians were generally Magians, who did not worship idols, but the sun under the symbol of fire. (Note, 45:7.) They would therefore load their beasts of burden, or their wagons, with the metals of which the images were formed; and carry them into captivity. "The expressions . . . allude to the custom of carrying idols in procession, which was a solemn piece of worship paid to them; whereas, now they were carried about, by way of contempt and derision." Louth. When the Philistines took the ark of God, it became a burden to them, and they were induced to send it back, with trespass-offerings, and memorials of their own disgrace; (Notes, 1 Sam. 5: 6:1-18. 2 Sam. 5:21.) but the idols of Babylon would only prove a burden to the "weary beasts" which carried

V. 3, 4. The continued care which the Lord had always shown towards Israel, and all his powerful works in their behalf, are here contrasted with the impotency of the gods of Babylon. The latter had been carried off by the weary beasts: the former had always carried Israel, in the arms of his love and power, as the nurse carries and tends the newborn infant. (Notes, Ex. 19:4. Num. 11:11-15. Deut. 1:29-31. 32:11, 12.) JEHOVAH had done this from the time when they were called out of Egypt, which was as the birth of their church and nation, to their deliverance from Babylon, when become, as it were, helpless through old age; and thus he would always do, whilst they continued to be his people. (Notes, Ps. 71:5-9, 17, 18.)—Remnant, &c. (3) Israel, as distinguished from Judah, was reduced to a small remnant.—I am he. (4) "I am the same" (God): "so the phrase is translated." Ps. 102:27. Louth.

V. 5-9. The Jews were always prone to make images representing God, as well as to worship the idols of other nations. But he here called their attention to the lavish and useless expense, to which the idolaters put themselves, in making a lifeless image, that was only a trouble and burden to them. It was rather a likeness of a dead corpse, than of the living God: when they had with much labour carried it, and fixed it in its place, they would be sure to find it there, except it should be thrown down or stolen; (Notes, Judg. 18:13-26. 1 Sam. 5:1-5.) for it could not move itself; and therefore it was not able to answer their prayers, or deliver them out of their trouble. (Notes, 40:18-20. 41:5-7. 44:9-20. Ps. 115:3-8. Jer. 10:1-11.) Let then the Jews remember these things, and show themselves men, acting like reasonable creatures, and avoiding such an absurd abomination. Let those, who had thus apostatized, review their conduct and retract their error; considering the former works of God to his people, by which he showed himself exclusively entitled to their adoration.—Some think, that the folly of idolaters is thus repeatedly exposed, to prevent the captive Jews in Babylon, from conforming to the idolatry of their conquerors; and indeed they seem to have kept far more free from that crime, when living among idolaters, than they had done in their own land.

V. 10, 11. From the beginning of the world God had declared what would come to pass to the end of time: (Note, Gen. 3:14, 15.) and from ancient times he had predicted the things, which were not then accomplished. He had declared his determinations, and no power in the universe could defeat them; but "his counsel should stand, and he would do all his pleasure:" especially he would call Cyrus, like an eagle or bird of prey, from a far country, "the man of his counsel," to execute his purposes of delivering the Jews. (Notes, 14: 24-27. 44:6-8, 24-28. 45:1-8. Dan. 4:31-37. Rom. 8:29-31. Eph. 1:3-8. 3:9-12.)—The standard of Cyrus was a golden eagle, and the rapidity of his conquests answered to the emblem.

V. 12, 13. Obstinate, presumptuous, and impenitent sinners, both of the Jews and Gentiles, were here addressed. Such were "far from the righteousness," both from that of the law, and that of faith; yet they were summoned to hearken to the word of the Lord. He would speedily perform

12 ¶ Hearken unto me, ye stout-hearted, that are far from righteousness:

13 I bring near my righteousness; it shall not be far off, and my salvation shall not tarry: and I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory.

CHAPTER XLVII.

Predictions of terrible judgments upon the inhabitants of Babylon, for their pride, luxury, and cruelty to the Jews, 1-12. The diviners and counsellors shall not help them, 12-15.

COME down, and sit in the dust, O virgin-daughter of Babylon; sit on the ground: there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans: for thou shalt no more be called tender and delicate.

2 Take the millstones, and grind meal: uncover thy locks, make bare the leg, uncover the thigh, pass over the rivers.

his righteous engagements to his people, execute his just vengeance on his enemies, and establish his righteousness in the earth. He would deliver the Jews from Babylon, again make Zion his peculiar residence, and there reveal his salvation: and there it should be stationed, for the benefit of Israel, in whom he gloried, and in and by whom he would be glorified.—Bishop Lowth translates the clause "far from righteousness," "far from deliverance;" and again that rendered, "my righteousness," "my promised deliverance;" but this greatly obscures the meaning of the text; and it may be questioned, whether the word be ever used in that sense. It is a substantive from the same root (צִדִּיק) with that adjective, which he renders speaking truth, in the clause, (as it stands in our version), "A just God and a Saviour." (Notes, 45:20-25. 51:4-8. 61:10, 11.)

Far from righteousness. (12) "Such as do not think it reasonable to acquiesce in my promises, which whosoever believeth, it shall be accounted to him for righteousness." Lowth.

Shall not tarry. (13) Shall not be postponed, or delayed; that is, beyond the appointed time. (Notes, Gen. 49:10. Dan. 9:24-27. Hag. 2:6-9.) This solemn declaration is a full refutation of the pretence of the Jews, that the coming of the Messiah is postponed, because of their sins.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The things, from which ungodly men expect safety and happiness, will soon be torn from them, and be totally incapable of saving them from death and hell: even at present they have much more trouble than comfort from them; and they commonly become an incumbrance and a snare to those, to whom they afterwards devolve. (Note, 2:19-21.) But happy is the man who trusts in God, and expects felicity from him! As his providence seems especially to watch over the helpless infant, and those who are decrepit through age; so his gracious care is peculiarly employed about the new-born babes of his family, and those who are grown hoary in his service. The history of the life of every individual, from the womb to the grave, is a kind of abstract of the history of Israel, through their successive generations: and, notwithstanding all our ingratitude and rebellions, we have each of us experienced numberless instances of JEHOVAH'S powerful protection, and tender care over us. If then we have learned to trust and love him, we need not be anxious about our remaining years, or days: he will still watch over us, and proportion our strength and comforts to our trials; he will bear with us, carry us, and deliver us, both as the creatures of his power, and as new created by his Spirit. We may then regard, with equal pity, those who lavish their gold in vain superstitions, or ruinous pleasures, and those who hoard and idolize it, though it can do them no good in the time of trouble. Did we indeed show ourselves men "in understanding" (Note, 1 Cor. 14:20-25. v. 20.) we should with shame renounce all kinds of ungodliness and iniquity, as they are altogether unmanly and irrational: but by yielding to our propensities as fallen creatures, we forfeit our distinction as reasonable beings, and become either brutish or diabolical. Let transgressors then call to mind the works and words of God: let them consider that there is none like him, or that can do as he doeth: let them notice how he has "declared the end from the beginning, and from ancient times, the things which are now doing," but not yet completed: and let them remember, that, however they may behave, "his counsel shall stand and he will do all his pleasure," he will certainly bring to pass all that he has purposed and spoken, both of mercy to his people, and of vengeance on his enemies.—Whilst men continue proud, and stubborn, and stout-hearted in their rebellion against God; they are as far from the grace of the gospel, as from the righteousness of the law. For the salvation of a sinner begins with a broken and contrite heart, which trembles at God's word; with true repentance, submission to God's righteousness, and faith in his mercy, through the obedience unto death of our divine Surety; and this ensures reconciliation unto God, and the willing obedience of love and gratitude.—"The righteousness of God" in Christ is now brought near; his salvation is revealed in his word, and communicated through his ordinances; all believers partake of it, and become the glory of the Lord, who is and for ever will be magnified in them and by them. Let then the stout-hearted hearken unto him, and humble themselves before him; that he may be glorified in their salvation, and not in their destruction. (Notes and P. O. 2 Thes. 1:1.)

3 Thy nakedness shall be uncovered, yea, thy shame shall be seen: I will take vengeance, and I will not meet thee as a man.

4 As for our Redeemer, the LORD of hosts is his name, the Holy One of Israel.

NOTES.—CHAP. XLVII. V. 1-3. Babylon (as the capital of the Chaldean empire, which succeeded to the Assyrian) had probably never been subdued before Cyrus took it. The city is therefore represented under the emblem of a virgin in great distress, who is called "the daughter of Babylon," or "of the Chaldeans." Instead of being seated, as heretofore, upon a throne, ruling over other cities and nations, and being "called tender and delicate," as exempted from hardships and calamities; she was now required to come down from her exalted station, and sit upon the bare ground, as an abject slave; and to grind corn with those handmills, that were in use before the invention of watermills and windmills. This was the lowest and most laborious of menial services: and often reserved as a punishment for slaves, who offended their masters.—(Marg. Ref. f.) Nay, she must be driven bareheaded, with dishevelled locks, and almost naked, before the victor, in order to ford the rivers, through which the captives were driven like herds of cattle: and as uncovered to be examined for sale, after the indecent and inhuman manner in which negroes are now exposed like cattle, in the places where the slave-trade is carried on. (Note, 20:2-4.) For the Lord would not meet her with the compassion or the weakness of a man, who might be resisted or appeased; but to take righteous vengeance on her as the Almighty God. Or, "I will not admit man to intercede for her;" as some explain the clause.—What is spoken of Babylon, under the emblem of a woman, must be understood of the calamities which would overtake numbers of her inhabitants, in the different ravages to which that devoted city would be exposed. (Notes, 13:14. Jer. 50:51. Rev. 17:18.)

V. 4. The prophet, representing Israel as a nation, or the believing Jews, in prospect of these events, interrupts his prediction, by thus exulting in the LORD of Hosts, as the Redeemer and Holy One of Israel, to ransom his people, and inflict vengeance on their enemies. (Notes, 49:24-26. 54:4, 5. Jer. 31:10-14.)

V. 5. Silence and darkness are opposed to that noise and gaiety, which is seen in rich and populous cities. Lowth. (Marg. Ref. k. l. Notes, 7-10. 13:19-22. Jer. 25:10. Rev. 18:4-8, 21-24.)

V. 6. 'I have laid open my inheritance to the insults of idolaters, and suffered them to profane the city and sanctuary which was called by my name.' Lowth.—The Chaldeans, intent on gratifying their own ambition, rapacity, and indignant revenge, and perhaps enmity to the God of Israel, most cruelly entreated the Jews, when they got them into their power; not knowing or regarding the design of God, in thus giving his worshippers into their hands; so that, while they accomplished his righteous purposes without intending it, they brought down deserved judgments on themselves. (Notes, 10. 5-14. Jer. 25:12. 51:33-37. Hos. 1:4, 5. Zech. 1:4-17.)

V. 7-10. Notwithstanding these predictions against Babylon, the king and his nobles were confident that their dominion and prosperity were firmly and permanently established; they neither laid their own crimes, and the words of God, to heart nor considered what the end of their greatness would be. (Notes, Dan. 4:28-33. 5:18-24. 1 Thes. 5:1-3.) The inhabitants were given up to pleasures and dissipation; and *given to pleasures, that dwellst carelessly, that sayest in thy heart, I am, and none else besides me: I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the loss of children:

9 But *these two things shall come to thee in a moment in one day, the loss of children and widowhood: *they shall come upon thee in their perfection, *for the multitude of thy sorceries, and for the great abundance of thine enchantments.

10 For thou hast trusted in thy wickedness: *thou hast said, None seeth me. *Thy wisdom and thy knowledge, it hath *perverted thee; and thou hast said in thy heart, I am, and none else beside me.

11 Therefore shall evil come upon thee; *thou shalt not know from whence it riseth: and mischief shall fall upon thee; *thou shalt not be able to *put it off: and desolation shall come upon thee suddenly, which thou shalt not know.

12 Stand *h*ow with thine enchantments, and with the multitude of thy sorceries, wherein thou hast laboured from thy youth; if so be thou shalt be able to profit, if so be thou mayest prevail.

13 Thou art *w*earied, in the multitude of thy counsels. Let now the *a*strologers, the stargazers, the monthly prognosticators, stand up and save thee from these things that shall come upon thee.

14 Behold they shall be as stubble; the fire shall burn them; they shall not deliver them—selves from the power of the flame: there shall not be* a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it.

15 Thus shall they be unto thee with whom thou hast laboured, even thy merchants, from thy youth: *they shall wander every one to his quarter; none shall save thee.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

The Lord, foreseeing the obstinate idolatry of Israel, had foretold what he was about to do, that his works might not be ascribed to idols, 1-8. He promised to save his people, for his own name's sake, by his almighty power, and by raising up and prospering Cyrus, 9-15. He pathetically shows, how happy obedience would have rendered them, 16-19. He calls on the captives 'Jews' to leave Babylon, remembering how their fathers had been surprised in the wilderness; and declares that there is no peace for the wicked, 20-22.

arrogantly concluded that no city or empire ever had been, was, or would be, like their own; and they expressed this sentiment, in language similar to that by which JEHOVAH declared his own eternal Deity. (45:6.)—The loss of empire, and the destruction of the inhabitants, are, to cities possessed of dominion, like widowhood and loss of children. Babylon thought herself perfectly secure from these afflictions: but the Lord declared, that they would come upon her in one day, in a moment, most suddenly, and in their perfection, “for,” or notwithstanding “the multitude of her sorceries” and enchantments. The Chaldeans trusted much to these practices, and disregarded the all-seeing eye of Israel’s God; but the permanent prosperity, with which she was flattered by the sorcerers and wise men, would not be vouchsafed her. (Notes, 11-15, 19:2-4. Nah. 3:4-6. Rev. 18:4-8.)

V. 11. Neither the politicians, nor the soothsayers, of Babylon could discover, from what quarter evil would come upon them; nor when it approached could they retard it: nay, at last it would come on them suddenly, when they had no apprehension of it.—Cyrus surprised the city, when the inhabitants were asleep, or in their drunken revels, and entirely without fear of the impending ruin. (Notes, Dan. 5: 25-31.)

To put it off. “To expiate it.” Marg. The desolation, which is denounced as coming upon the New Testament Babylon, still more suddenly and awfully, shall not be expiated by any of the superstitious devices, or sacrifices of its priests and rulers. (Note, 1 Sam. 3:14.)

V. 12-15. (Note, 57:9, 10.) The Lord here challenged the Chaldeans to oppose their wisest counsels, or most powerful enchantments, against the execution of his predictions: let them persist in them, and do their utmost, and see whether they could prevail in the contest. Babylon had always been renowned for these arts, and the Chaldeans diligently studied and practised them. Even their wise men and counsellors were chiefly diviners and astrologers. (Notes, Dan. 1:17-20, 2:2-13, 4:4-7, 5:5-9.) They expected, or pretended to expect information and direction from the motions of the heavenly bodies; and supposed the stars to have great influence on the affairs of men, which they could discover by making observations on them; and they seem to have published every month their prognostications, as some almanac-makers now do their yearly predictions, about the weather and other matters. But the Lord declared, that they should all weary themselves in vain, in their counsels to secure Babylon; nay, themselves should be as stubble to the fire of his indignation, by which they should be totally consumed without any remains. And in this catastrophe, all those, who had before dealt with them for such information; or the merchants and hired soldiers from other countries, who had traded with them and helped them, would desert them, go to their respective habitations or employments, and leave them to shift for themselves. All these predictions, concerning Babylon, relate also to the New Testament-Babylon, the chief seat of Antichrist. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Jer. 51:9. Rev. 18:9-20.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord invariably abases the proud, in proportion as they exalt themselves.—Those who are most delicate and luxurious, and given up to self-indulgence and dissipation, are commonly most unfeeling, towards such as are subjected to them; often showing no respect to old age or infirmities, and deeming no hardship too great to impose on those who are cast able to endure them. But they may probably be recom-

posed by others, as severe and hardhearted as themselves: while labour and fatiguing usage, with scorn and cruelty, will be dreadful to them, in proportion to their former excessive effeminacy. (Notes, 3:16-26.)—Those distinctions in society, by which some are exalted above others, as if of another species, will be of short continuance: kings and nobles will not be such for ever: nor will God any more regard sex than rank, in those who rebel against him. But they, who are made “kings and priests unto our God,” shall be distinguished for ever: for “their Redeemer is the LORD of hosts, the Holy One of Israel:” and when the most honourable of the wicked shall be silent in darkness, or only vent their anguish in “wailing and gnashing of teeth,” the believer’s redemption will be completed.—God is often pleased to permit wicked men to prevail against his people, in order to correct and purify them by tribulation: and he permits his inheritance, his professed servants, to be polluted and treated as heathens in order to purge his church from hypocrites, and to warn others not to abuse their privileges. (Note and P. O. 1 Sam. 4.) But those who take advantage of these dispensations, to abuse their power, and to show their enmity against God, by cruelly oppressing his worshippers, will be punished with proportionable severity.—Pride renders men presumptuous in their wickedness and regardless of their latter end; so that they “lay not to heart,” either the warnings or the judgments of God; they expect impunity, notwithstanding his “wrath revealed from heaven” against their iniquities; and they are confident of permanent prosperity, until ruin comes upon them suddenly and in its perfection, and they can neither see whence it arises, nor how it may be avoided. Such as do not trust in God, buoy up their confidence by means of wickedness in one form or other, and they are ready to think, that no eye sees those secret crimes which man cannot detect. And whilst men will not believe the authenticated truths of God, because they contradict their pride and lusts; they often become the dupes of their own credulity, and of the vilest impostors; even of the meanest of such as pretend to gratify their curiosity by informing them of future events, and humour them with promises of great prosperity, without disquieting their consciences, or requiring them to renounce their sins. Hence the encouragement which sorcery, divination, astrology, and fortunetelling of every kind, have ever met with, in proportion as the holy truths and precepts of Scripture have been disregarded. But the Lord scorns, and abhors, such daring attempts to pry into his secret purposes, or to escape his threatened vengeance. However men may labour and weary themselves in these vain endeavours, they will never be able to prevail for others or themselves; they will shortly be destroyed root and branch, by the consuming fire of the Lord’s indignation: and it will appear, that they could neither foresee nor prevent the ruin to which they were exposed. But, if we simply and firmly believe the word of God, we may know assuredly how it will be with the righteous and the wicked to all eternity; we may learn how to “escape the wrath to come,” to glorify God, to have peace through life, and hope in death, and everlasting happiness beyond the grave: and surely we need desire no further information in these matters. Let us then stand aloof from all the delusions of men, and of the great deceiver; and learn to walk by faith, through the troubles of life and the vale of death, to the land of perfect light, joy, and felicity.

then all of them assemble, consider, and ask themselves, whether JEHOVAH, or some of their idols, had foretold these things; that they might ascribe the accomplishment unto him. (Notes, 41:21-26, 43:8-13.) He meant to show especial favour to Cyrus, (as a type of Christ,) in assigning him the honourable work of liberating his people. So that this prince would execute the Lord's pleasure, and be as his arm, in taking Babylon, and subduing the Chaldean monarchy: for God would call him to this arduous undertaking, and prosper him in it. (Notes, 41:27-29. 44:25-28. 45:1-6. 46:10, 11.)—The expression, "my called," (12) may refer to the call of Abraham, (Notes, Gen. 12:1-3,) and the nation of Israel in him, which was a type or emblem of the effectual calling of the elect people of God: (Notes, 41:2-4, 10-14.) but some explain it of the Israelites being called by the name of God, as a people peculiarly belonging to him.

V. 16. There is some appearance of difficulty in ascertaining the speaker in this verse: but if the prophet be supposed to speak, it must be as a type of the "Elect Servant of JEHOVAH," before predicted. (Note, 42:1-4.) From the opening of his ministry Isaiah had publicly spoken of those things which were coming to pass, and events had accorded to his predictions; he had from the first been at hand to declare the will of the Lord: and now the Lord God and his spirit had sent him to predict the captivity, and also the deliverance of the Jews from it; and it behooved them to come near and attend to his words.—This, however, seems not by any means to come up to the energy and full meaning of the passage: and "The Word, who was in the beginning with God, and was God," and by whom the mind and will of God have ever been declared to men, may properly be considered as the speaker. He had always addressed the nation in the most open manner, from the time when he appeared to Moses in the bush, and called himself, I AM THAT I AM: (Notes, Ex. 3:2-7, 14. Acts 7:30-36.) and He was constantly present with Israel as their Lord and Redeemer. And now the Father and his Spirit had sent him to effect their predicted deliverance: or the Lord God had sent Him and his Spirit; for so the words may be read, and the language accords better to the ordinary style of Scripture. The deliverance from Babylon seems to be predicted; yet as shadowing forth the incarnation of Christ, and the pouring out of the Spirit, to apply his redemption to the souls of men.—The foregoing part of the verse shows that the words are spoken by God: and since it is affirmed that the Lord God hath sent him, we can understand the words of none other but the second Person of the sacred Trinity: who was sent into the world by his Father, and was anointed to his prophetic office by the Holy Spirit. Louth. (Notes, Zech. 2:6-13. 4:8-10. 6:9-15. John 14:7-14.)—"Who is it that saith in Isaiah, 'And now the Lord hath sent me and his spirit?' in which, as the expression is ambiguous, is it the Father and the Holy Spirit, which have sent Jesus; or the Father who hath sent both Christ and the Holy Spirit? The latter is the true interpretation." Origin in Bp. Louth.

V. 17-19. JEHOVAH, the Redeemer and Holy One of Israel, continues to speak to his people, when in captivity. He had taught them profitable things, and had pointed out to them the way in which they should have gone; and he was ever ready to afford his effectual teaching to such as desired to profit by his word. This would have been far more agreeable to his holy will as revealed by his servants, than their rebellion and calamities; so that, speaking after the manner of men, he, as it were, wished that they would have hearkened to his commandments: for then their peace would have flowed with an even, uninterrupted course, like a river, the waters of which fail not: and he would have shown them how to obtain righteousness and salvation, vast as the ocean, and a permanent and inexhaustible source of blessings to their souls: their seed would then have been innumerable as the sand, and "gravel," or, as some understand it, the fishes of the sea; and their name would never have been cut off, or cast out. Whereas, for their sins they were reduced to a remnant, and to great distress and contempt. (Notes, Deut. 5:28, 29. 32:29. Ps. 81:13-16. Luke 19:41-44.)—Righteousness. (18) Notes, 45:22-25. 46:12, 13.

V. 20-22. The Lord here addressed the people, as if the time of the decree of Cyrus had been already come. They were summoned to go forth from Babylon, and flee from among its devoted inhabitants, singing praises to the Lord, and publishing his truth, power, and love, to the ends of the earth. (Notes, 51:9-11. 52:9-12. Jer. 50:7, 8. Zech. 2:6-9. Rev. 18:4-8.) When the Israelites passed through the wilderness from Egypt to Canaan, the waters gushed from the smitten rock to satisfy their thirst: and the Lord intimated that he would equally take care of the Jews in returning from Babylon to Jerusalem. (Notes, 35:5-7. 41:17-20. 43:19-21. Ex. 17:5, 6. Jer. 31:8, 9.) But as the language is too strong to have received a full accomplishment in any of the events, attending that deliverance; we may be assured that the Holy Ghost intended the spiritual blessings of redemption; and the wonderful interpositions, with which the rescue of the church from antichristian tyranny shall be accompanied, and especially the converted Jews and Israelites conveyed back to the promised land.—Whatever revolutions take place, the Lord also warned impetuous sinners, that no good would accrue to them; (Notes, 31:1, 2. 57:20, 21. Ez. 20:33-38.) for all that inward anguish and outward tribulation, which spring from guilt and from the wrath of God, must inevitably be their portion, throughout every period of their endless existence.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11. Men may have a sound creed, make an open profession of true religion, and with apparent devotion "mention the name" of God, value themselves on their relation to his people, and join with them in the most solemn ordinances; and yet be hypocrites in religion, and destitute of common honesty in their dealings with their neighbours! Nay, men may have strong confidence in the Lord, and verily think that all the blessings of salvation belong to them; when they are entirely deceived by Satan and their own hearts, and have no more than a worthless "form of godliness!" (Notes, Prov. 14:12. Gal. 6:1-5, v. 3.) Let us then be careful not to overvalue external distinctions, privileges, or observances: and not to stay our souls on any relation to families, or churches eminent for piety. Let us examine whether we be indeed sincere, in our own professed faith and devotedness to God; and whether these produce truth and equity in all our dealings with men. Let us remember that confidence without conscientiousness is presumption; and that those who cheat their neighbours, and varnish it over with a profession of godliness, will "receive the greater damnation." May the Lord search and prove us, and render us "doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving our own selves!" (Note, Jam. 1:22-25.)—The divine origin of our religion is abundantly demonstrated, in the coincidence observable between the prophecies of the Bible, and the dispensations of Providence; so that infidelity, impiety, and hypocrisy, will be left without plea or excuse: and this arrangement is purposely intended to leave every one without cloak for his sins. For the Lord knows how obstinate and daring men are in rebellion against his authority, and opposition to his truths. Indeed we are all by nature self-willed and presumptuous: we are ready to ascribe success to our own sagacity or good management, or even to that conduct which God abhors and when calamities overtake us, we deem them the result of chance, or lay the blame on the ill behaviour of others. Thus we studiously forget God, and aim to exclude him from the government of the world. But the whole scheme of prophecy is a standing confutation of these absurd principles, and this preposterous conduct: as things hidden from every created mind, and which must appear at the time improbable in the highest degree, have for ages been foretold in the sacred Scriptures, and are continually coming to pass accordingly. Yet how little is this attended to! how little are men disposed to receive instruction, and yield obedience to God! But hence arises another demonstration of the truth of the Scripture, which every man possesses in his own conscience. Contrary to our self-flattery, the Scripture declares that "every man dealth very treacherously, and is a transgressor from the womb." And is not this witness true? have not we each of us, violated our obligations to God? and was

CHAPTER XLIX.

The Messiah declares to the nations his appointment and qualifications for his work; complaining of all success among the Jews; and receiving assurance of being "the Light of the Gentiles," and the source of salvation and consolation to vast numbers, 1-13. Zion thinks he self forgotten of God; but is assured of his unchangeable love, and that kings and nations shall be her children, to show her honour and to do her service, 14-33. The redemption of sinners from Satan's power, and the church from that of Antichrist is predicted, with allusion to the deliverance of the captive Jews, 34-38.

LISTEN, O isles, unto me; and hearken, ye people, from far; The LORD hath called me from the womb; from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name.

2 And he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword; in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me, and made me a polished shaft; in his quiver hath he hid me; not our first thoughts, words, and works rebellious and unholy?—We have then nothing in ourselves to depend on, or to plead with God, as a reason why he should have mercy on us. Had he not deferred and refrained his anger we should have been cut off and destroyed long ago. But he has formed a plan, in which, for "his own sake," and "for the glory of his grace," he saves all that come to him for salvation. Thus sinners are encouraged to hope for his mercy. And he that "hath fled for refuge to lay hold on this hope set before him," and "holds fast that confidence," has the honour of God pledged for his security, that he shall never be cast off, or perish; for then would God's name be polluted, and his glory tarnished. But he will indeed refine his people in the furnace of affliction: but notwithstanding the alloy which remains after each visitation, he will yet confirm his choice of them; and frequently he first brings sinners acquainted with his grace, by casting them into this painful but salutary furnace.

3 And said unto me, Thou art my Servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified.

V. 12-22. The same power which upholds the world supports the cause of truth and righteousness; and it is a peculiar honour to be employed as instruments in the good work of making known the salvation of God to mankind. Yet even this (as well as many other instances of the loving kindness of God) has been sometimes vouchsafed to those who knew him not, by true faith and holy experience, to the salvation of their own souls. But the Lord Jesus alone has, in every respect, done the Father's "whole pleasure," and is the adequate object of his love: having prospered and finished his work, he invites sinners to draw near and hearken, whilst he proclaims the counsels of his love which have been from the beginning. As the Father has sent him, so has he sent his ministers, to publish openly his rich and free salvation. May he send forth more and more of them throughout the earth; and with them send forth his Spirit to prosper their labours; that "glory may be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost," throughout the earth, and through eternal ages.—Let us seek our holy Redeemer to "teach us to profit;" by all the means of instruction which we enjoy, and to "lead us by the way that we should go;" for blessed are they who hear his word and do it. Our sanctification and comfort are his will and delight; inward and outward peace are his legacy to his believing people; and those whom he justifies and sanctifies, have peace with God, peace of conscience, and an inward tranquillity "which passeth all understanding;" a peace, not transient and precarious, as the joys of this world are; but which flows on like a river through life and death, and to all eternity. The inheritance annexed to the righteousness which God bestows is immense as the ocean, its blessings unnumbered like the sand, and it is attended with "an everlasting name that shall not be cut off;" and with an entail of most important advantages to our posterity. Let then all who hear these words separate from the world, and break loose from their ruinous connexions; let them join themselves to the Lord with gratitude and joy; and let believers sing glad praises to the Redeemer, and declare to all around "what he hath done for their souls."—Though this world is a wilderness, in which many inconveniences await us, and nothing grows or springs forth suited to the wants and desires of the regenerated; yet from Christ, our smitten Rock, the consolations of the Holy Spirit flow forth abundantly to water all the camp of Israel, through all their wanderings; till each arrives at the Fountain-head above, and drinks abundantly of unalloyed felicity for ever. But this peace and joy are far from the wicked man; by an irrevocable decree, and by his character and the state of his unrenewed soul, he will be for ever precluded from them; and a tormenting conscience, a despairing heart, and furious, unrestrained, and malignant passions, will concur with the wrath of God, to render him as durably miserable, as the righteous is blessed in the favour, image, and presence of his God.

redemption has been predicted more obscurely, and with evident, and almost constant reference to the deliverance of the Jews from captivity in Babylon; but here another division of the prophecy commences; and henceforth we shall have Christ and spiritual redemption constantly before our eyes, and often entirely lose sight of types and shadows. We cannot in this chapter admit, that Isaiah spoke of himself, even as the type of Christ; the language can in no sense be applicable to him, or to any but the divine Saviour of sinners; for who else was ever given to be "a Light of the Gentiles, and the salvation of God to the ends of the earth?" (6)—Christ therefore here speaks in his mediatorial character, and as anticipating his incarnation. He opened his important instructions by demanding the attention of the most distant nations, as he was about to declare those interesting truths, those "deep things of God," in which they were all concerned. He had engaged to become incarnate for the redemption of mankind. That event had been purposed from "before the foundation of the world," and predicted from the first entrance of sin; and before his conception in the virgin's womb, "he was named Jesus, because he should save his people from their sins." (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, Matt. 1:20-23. Luke 1:26-33, v. 31.) The efficacy of his word to alarm, convince, and subdue the hearts of sinners to himself, and the energy of his denunciations to destroy his enemies, are denoted by "his mouth being like a sharp sword." His human nature would be secured from sin, (which alone could defeat the end of his incarnation,) by his union with the Deity; even as if it had been hid, or covered, under the shadow of the Almighty's hand. And he would be in every respect prepared and qualified for his work, by the immeasurable communication of the Holy Spirit; as a polished shaft or arrow, which the warrior carefully conceals and preserves in his quiver, till he has occasion to employ it, in obtaining some desired and expected victory. (Marg. Ref. d-f. Notes, 51:15, 16. Heb. 4:12, 13. Rev. 1:12-20, v. 16. 2:12, 13.)

V. 3, 4. The eternal Son of God willingly consented to "take upon him the form of a servant," that God might be glorified in saving sinners through him. (Notes, 42:1-4. 53:1, 12. Phil. 2:5-8.) He may be called Israel, as the Head of the body of the church, the true Israel of God; or because he wrestled and prevailed for the blessing of God upon his people, as Jacob prevailed for the blessing on himself and his posterity. That name, in its original design, and full import, can only belong to him, who contended powerfully with God, in behalf of mankind, and prevailed. Gen. 32:28. Bp. Louth.—The Redeemer, in the prospect of the general unbelief of the Jewish nation, intimated, that if the small remnant of that people should be all who obtained salvation by him, he should "labour in vain and spend his strength for naught, and in vain;" for though the salvation of one soul must vastly overpay all the labours and trials of any ordinary servant of God; yet the incarnation of his only begotten Son, and his labours, obedience, sufferings, and death, demanded a far more ample retribution. This he knew would be vouchsafed him: for his "judgment was with the LORD," the righteous Judge; and his work with his God, who was competent to estimate its infinite worth, and to recompense it in that way which he desired; namely, by rendering it effectual for the salvation of sinners, even multitudes which no man can number. (Notes, 40:9-11. 42:10-12. Heb. 12:2, 3.) This is spoken to the distant nations: it represents the Redeemer's undertaking, after the manner of men, as the result of a stipulation between the Father and the Son; and it forms an interesting introduction to the prediction of the calling of the Gentiles, that they might enjoy the blessings which the nation of Israel generally refused: for otherwise no adequate benefit would result from the coming of the promised Messiah.

V. 5, 6. JEHOVAH, in the person of the Father, here addresses the Son, as become incarnate, that is, in the Jesus and his Holy One, "to him whom man despiseth, to him whom the nation abhorreth, to a Servant of rulers; "Kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship, because of the LORD that is faithful, and the Holy One of Israel, and he shall choose thee.

8 Thus saith the LORD, "In an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee: and I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to testify the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages:

9 That thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, Show yourselves: they shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all high places.

10 They shall not hunger nor thirst, neither shall the heat nor sun smite them: for the heat

purpose and prescience. The primary or more generally declared object of his undertaking, was to bring back Jacob to the true service, and worship of God. (Notes, Matt. 10:5, 6, 15:21-24. Rom. 15:8-13.) Accordingly, the personal ministry of Christ, and the first labours of his apostles were confined to the Jews: and their national rejection of Christ was the occasion of the apostles at length turning to the Gentiles. So that it was the settled plan of God made known ages before, that though "Israel should not be gathered" to the promised Messiah, as his subjects and disciples; yet should he be "glorious in the eyes of the LORD," and be glorified by him; and God would be his Strength to render his gospel successful. Thus when Christ was about to ascend into heaven, he said to his disciples, "All power is given unto me in heaven and earth. Go ye, preach the gospel to all nations." (Notes, Matt. 28:18-20. Mark 16:15, 16. Luke 24:44-49. Acts 1:4-8.) So that, compared with the full effects of his mediatorial work, the conversion of a small remnant of the Jews, who were preserved from the national unbelief, would be a small matter: (Note, Rom. 11:1-6.) nay, the conversion of the whole nation would have been a light thing; for he was given to be the great and all-sufficient Source of spiritual knowledge and illumination, and "the Salvation of God," ever "the Author of eternal salvation" to the nations of the earth: in general. (Notes, Acts 5:4-7. Luke 2:25-32, v. 30-32. John 1:5-9. 8:12. Acts 13:42-48, v. 47. 26:16-18, 19-23, v. 23.)

V. 7, 8. The Father is "the LORD, the Redeemer of Israel and his Holy One," as sending the Son to be the Redeemer: he created the worlds, and he redeemeth the church by the Son, and without him was not any thing created or redeemed. (Notes, John 1:1-3. Tit. 3:4-7.) The Father here addresses the incarnate Son, as he, "whom man despised, and whom the nation of Israel abhorred;" and whom their rulers, as well as Pontius Pilate and Herod, treated as a slave. This decisively marked out the person intended, when he appeared on earth; as every one must perceive, who compares these expressions with the history of our Lord's condemnation, and crucifixion by the general demand of the Jewish nation and their rulers, and with every circumstance of scorn and abhorrence. (Notes, 50:5, 6, 53:2, 3. Zech. 11:7-9. Matt. 26:63-68, 27:19-25, 37-44. Luke 23:6-12.) This humiliation was, so to speak, the stipulated price of that glory which was to follow. For certainly kings would behold his glory, and rise up to acknowledge his supreme authority: they would fall down before him, submitting to him as their King, yea, worshipping him as his God! (Notes, 22:3, 60:1-3, v. 3, 10-14, 15-22, v. 16. Ps. 72:8-11, 138:4, 5. Rev. 21:22-27.) The faithfulness of JEREMIAH was engaged to accomplish this promise; and the Holy One of Israel, being "well pleased in him," as his beloved Son and righteous Servant, would choose him to be his "King upon his holy hill of Zion." (Notes, Ps. 2:7-12.)—When the Roman Emperors embraced Christianity, this part of the prophecy began to be accomplished: it has been verified in many instances already, and will be far more signally hereafter.—When he undertook our cause, his requests were presented "in an acceptable time, and in a day of salvation," and the Father readily acceded to them. The prayers that he offered "with strong crying and tears," in the days of his flesh, were also accepted, and answered by his resurrection and exaltation; and his intercession is always presented in an acceptable time, and every thing is granted which he intercedes for. (Notes, Acts 4:7-12, v. 11. 2 Cor. 6:12. Heb. 5:7-10, v. 7. 7:23-25, v. 25.)—Being thus preserved, and raised to the mediatorial throne; he was given as the Surety of the new covenant to sinners at over the earth, to establish it in the knowledge of God and true religion; and to cause all believers to inherit that heritage, from which as sinners they had been expelled, and which lay desolate; as the land of Judah did during the captivity, until the restoration of the Jews established the land, and caused them to inherit their desolated heritages. (Marg. Ref. Note, 51:15, 16. P. O. Ps. 75: Note, 10:13-22.)

V. 9-13. The conversion of the nations is here promised, under images taken from the deliverance of the captive Jews, and their return to Jerusalem. At the word of Christ, the prisoners of Satan, who were confined in the dark dungeons of ignorance, idolatry, and vice, would be set at liberty, come forth, and show themselves among his redeemed subjects. (Notes, 61:1-3. Zech. 9:11, 12. Luke 4:16-19. Acts 26:16-18.) Through his ordinances he comfortably feeds the souls of these his sheep all their journey through life: (Notes, Ps. 23:) no place is found so mountainous, as not to yield pasturage for them; or their pastures are situated on high places, inaccessible to their enemies. They are not incommoded by hunger or thirst; or left to endure persecution, temptation, or affliction, without shelter, support, and consolation; for their merciful Redeemer conducts them, where the waters of life abound for their refreshment and consolation. (Notes, 12:1-3, 25:3-5, 35:8-10, 41:17-21, 43:14-21. Jer. 31:9. Rev. 7:13-17.) Even the loftiest mountains are made a highway: and a causeway or pavement is prepared over the low places, that nothing may discourage or obstruct them in their journey.—The Lord then speaks, as if companies of converts, flocking into the church, appeared in sight; and points them out to the spectators, some of them coming from the north, others from the west, and others from the land of Sinim; by which some province in Egypt, or some district in Arabia, seems to be meant. All this denotes the clear instructions, unnumbered invitations, encouraging promises, and abundant outpouring of the Spirit, which would combine in rendering the gospel successful, especially in the primitive ages; as they will again, when "the fulness of the Gentiles shall be brought in." In the prospect of events so merciful and comfortable to God's afflicted people, the heavens, and the earth, and their respective inhabitants are called upon to break forth into songs of joy and praise. (Notes, 44:23, 55:12, 13.)—"The Hebrew word mesillah, (translated highways), signifies such ways as are raised with stone in low and marshy grounds. So the sense is exactly parallel with that of 40:4. "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain shall be brought low." Lowth.—That, however, relates to the change wrought in men's dispositions, preparing them to welcome the salvation of Christ; this, to the preparations made the gospel, for believers passing safely and comfortably through this evil world to heaven.—Mr. Faber, interpreting the whole of the future restoration of Israel, understands the words, "Say to them that are in darkness, Show yourselves," or, "Be discovered," or the ten tribes, which have been lost hitherto. (27:13.) But the close connexion of the passage, with Christ being "the Light of the Gentiles," seems to render this exclusive application inadmissible.

V. 14-16. (Notes, Lam. 5:19-22. Hos. 11:8-11, v. 8, 9.) The Jewish church during the captivity, or the Christian church as groaning under antichristian superstition and tyranny, is here introduced, as ready to faint and despond apprehending from appearances, that JEREMIAH, her Lord and King, had "forsaken" her, and even "forgotten" her and her concerns: that is, the remnant of believers in such circumstances should be tempted to think, that God would suffer her enemies to prevail against his cause. But he inquires of Zion, whether a tender mother can forget the infant, for of my hands; thy walls are continually before me.

17 Thy children shall make haste; thy destroyers and they that made thee waste shall go forth of thee.

18 [†]Lift up thine eyes round about, and behold: all these gather themselves together, and come to thee. [‡]As I live, saith the Lord, thou shalt surely clothe thee with them all, as with an ornament, and bind them on thee, as a bride doeth.

19 For thy waste and thy desolate places, and the land of thy destruction, shall even now be too narrow by reason of the inhabitants, and they that swallowed thee up shall be far away.

20 The children which thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the other, shall say again in thine ears, 'The place is too strait for me: give place to me that I may dwell.

21 Then shalt thou say in thy heart, Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate, a captive, and removing to and fro? and who hath brought up these? Behold I was left alone; these, where had they been?

22 Thus saith the Lord God, Behold I will lift up my hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders.

23 And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers: they shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet; and thou which she hath endured much pain and sorrow, and which she is accustomed to nourish at her breast; and so forget it, as without compassion to leave it to perish by hunger and neglect. But though this is the strongest of all natural affections; yet some mothers do neglect their offspring to indulge themselves, and suffer them to perish for want of proper attention; nay, some murder them to conceal their own shame! It was therefore requisite, in order that Zion might "have a strong consolation," to add, that the love of God to his church admits of no such exception: the affection of a most tender mother forms but a faint emblem of his unchangeable love to his people, and he will never forget them. (Notes, Rom. 8:32—39. Heb. 6:16—20.) In allusion to customs then in use, of artificially marking upon the hands, such objects as those concerned wished continually to remember, he declares that he had "graven Zion on the palms of his hands, and that her walls were continually before him." As the architect is continually mindful of the plan of his intended building, even whilst the rubbish is removing, in order to lay the foundation; so the Lord has the whole plan of his church, in its most flourishing state on earth and in heaven, always before him, during all the corruptions and tribulations which she passes through: and he will in the appointed periods, fulfil all his purposes, predictions, and promises to that effect. (Notes, Dan. 9:24—27. Rev. 21:10—21.)—Zion. (14. Note, Rev. 14:1—5.)

V. 17. Thy children, &c. Or, "thy builders," as in the old translation, with a trivial change in the punctuation. Those who were appointed to build the city and walls of Zion, would speedily begin and accomplish their work; and they, who had destroyed and wasted her, would speedily depart from her. Thus Cyrus hastened to take Babylon: and, having accomplished that design, when he succeeded to the kingdom, he hastened to give orders for rebuilding Jerusalem and the temple: the dominion of the Chaldeans, the destroyers of Zion, was at once terminated, and they departed, as unable to retard her returning prosperity. The speed and success with which Nehemiah rebuilt the walls of Jerusalem, notwithstanding the opposition of the enemies, may also be adverted to.—But the deliverance of the church from antichristian oppressors; and the final and universal prevalence of true religion, are doubtless especially intended.—"They, that destroyed thee, shall soon become thy builders; and they, that laid thee waste, shall become thine offspring." Bp. Louth. This interpretation does not well accord either to the type or the Antitype. The Chaldeans did not restore Jerusalem; but were conquered by Cyrus, who ordered it to be built: and antichristian powers are to be destroyed, in order to the future deliverance of the church. (Notes, 24—26. Rev. 18:19.)

V. 18—21. Zion is here addressed in the character of an afflicted widow, bereaved also of her children. She is directed to look up, and behold great numbers approaching her from every quarter; and the Lord most solemnly assures her, that they come in order to be a comfort and honour to her; and that instead of the disconsolate attire and appearance, which had hitherto befit her condition, this great accession to her family should render her adorned and cheerful as a bride. (Notes, 61:10, 11.) The desolate and waste places of the land also would soon be so replenished that there would not be room for all the inhabitants; who would no more be annoyed or alarmed by those enemies, who had before swallowed them up. So that, after Zion's former desolations, her children should be so numerous, that they would earnestly demand more room.—The destruction of the Jews by the Chaldeans, and afterwards by the Romans, and the rejection of the nation for unbelief, were to that church as the loss of children: the state of the Jews during the captivity, and that of the Christian church during the reign of Antichrist; and especially that of the nation of Israel for almost eighteen hundred years, has resembled a desolate widow in captivity, wandering from place to place, without prospect of having or bringing up children: and the replenishing of the church after these desolations, might seem as the resurrection of her children from the dead, or their return to her after they had been supposed dead. It would be like the case of a poor forlorn widow, to whom many show the respect and affection of children, for whom she has suffered no pain, and bestowed no labour: and she could not imagine whence these children came, or where they had been during her destitute and wandering condition.—After the captivity, the Jews were very much increased: they not only filled the land of Judah, but multitudes inhabited the adjacent cities and countries; and many were proselyted to their religion, and became Zion's adopted children. Yet, the context and the expressions lead us rather to interpret the prophecy of the enlargement of the church, by the breaking down of the partition-wall, and by the conversion of the Gentiles to Christ; which has already diffused the worship of the true God far more widely than of old; and which, after the recall of the Jews into the church, shall at length fill the whole earth with the knowledge of his glory. (Notes, 54:1—5. Jer. 31:15—17.) The restoration of Israel, and the reunion of Judah and Israel, may be included in these general terms; but cannot be exclusively predicted.

V. 22, 23. JEHOWAH here further explains how this increase of Zion's family would be effected. By the death of Christ and the preaching of the gospel, his hand was lifted up to summon the nations, and his standard erected for them to resort to. The numerous converts, made from among the Gentiles, are represented under the idea of many nations at once bringing Zion's sons and daughters home to her, with the greatest care and tenderness; especially as they employed their ability to promote the cause of the gospel. (Note, 66:19—23, vs. 19, 20.) Even kings would become foster-fathers, and queens nursing mothers to the children of Zion; (Note, Num. 11:11—15, v. 12.) accounting it their honour and privilege, to use their influence and authority to promote the success of the gospel: rendering the most profound respect for the church and its faithful and consistent pastors and rulers; not attempting to have dominion over her faith, but promoting by all proper means her comfort and prosperity, and showing her honour, for the Lord's sake, proportioned to the contempt and indignity with which she had been treated. (Note, 66:10—11.) Then would it appear more than ever, that the immutable truth, power, and love of JEHOWAH were engaged in behalf of his people; and that those who wait for him shall never be put to shame.—Cyrus, Artaxerxes, and other Persian monarchs, showed signal favour to the Jews; and Esther... saved the nation from utter destruction: but the prophecy was more remarkably fulfilled, in the favours which Constantine... and other Christian princes and princesses have showed to the church? Louth.—There can, however, be no dispute, but the grand accomplishment of these predictions is yet future. (Notes, 60:10—14. Ps. 72:9—11. Jer. 16:19—21. Mic. 7:14—17. Rev. 3:8, 9.)

With their face toward the earth. (23) 'It is well known that the expressions of submission, homage, and reverence, always have been, and are still, carried to a great degree of extravagance in the Eastern countries... (Gen. 42:6.)... The expressions therefore of the prophet are only general poetical images taken from the manners of the country, to denote great respect and reverence.' Bp. Louth.—Lick up the dust, &c. Mic. 7:17.—The prophecy certainly implies, that a time will come, when kings and princesses will improve their important talents, in a very reverential, humble, zealous, and diligent manner, to promote genuine Christianity by all scriptural means; counting this their privilege, honour, and pleasure, and specially honouring the consistent ministers of Christ, and Christ in them; and using their influence to give weight and acceptance to their labours. And why should not this be the duty of princes, at all times; whether they will or will not attend to it? (Notes, 2 Chr. 17:9—9, 30:12.)

Chaldeans for their sins; thus they became the prey of the mighty. It was also just in God thus to punish them, and they might in many respects be deemed "lawful captives;" and could it be expected that the victors would release them, or that they would be rescued from them? In answer to this objection, the Lord engaged, that he would take them out of the land of their terrible and powerful oppressors, contending with them, and saving Zion's children from them; yea, retaliating their cruelties with most terrible vengeance.—Sinners are justly given up for their crimes to be slaves and captives of Satan; but Christ, having paid their ransom, delivers them from his power, and avenges their cause on this great enemy, and on his angels and servants.—But I apprehend, that under the shadow of the destruction of the Chaldean Monarchy, to make way for the deliverance of the Jews; or of the Pagan Roman empire, by means of their mutual discords, to make way for the establishment of Christianity; the dreadful judgments, which remain to be executed on the antichristian Roman empire, in order to the liberating of the church, and the restoration of Israel, are especially predicted. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6. We should here be all attention: for the Lord Jesus speaks to us, who inhabit these distant isles, in accents of love, united with wisdom, authority and truth; informing us of what he has undertaken and performed for our salvation. The dignity of his person, the depth of his humiliation, the immensity of his love, the extremity of his agonies, the unsearchable riches of his grace, and the suitableness of his whole character, offices, and salvation to our ruined condition, unite in warning us, "not to refuse him that speaketh;" but they equally encourage the poor trembling sinner to draw near, and intrust his soul into his gracious hands. For the Son of God became incarnate, and "obedient even to the death upon the cross," that he might be "able to save to the uttermost all that come to God through him." The salvation of sinners of every nation, to the glory of God the Father, was the recompense which he required when he undertook his arduous work; and which the Father was equally willing to grant him. For love to us, when enemies, moved him to give us "his only begotten Son, to be the propitiation for our sins;" whose human nature was formed in the Virgin's womb by the power of the Holy Ghost, and preserved through life holy and undefiled, that it might be an acceptable and an all-sufficient atonement for sin: he was also carried through his sufferings, raised from the dead, exalted to the throne of glory, and perfected in every thing, which might make him "the Author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him." "The sharp sword" of his mouth, his quick and penetrating word, is employed in slaying the lusts, as well as the enemies, of those who trust in him; but it will cut off all those that persist in their enmity and disobedience. His sharp arrows wound the conscience: but when the sinner submits, and supplicates mercy, he heals the wounds which he had inflicted, and the transient pain makes way for durable joy: but these arrows will rankle for ever in the consciences of those who persist in refusing to become his subjects.—It will not in the event appear a light thing, which he has effected on earth: innumerable multitudes of the tribes of Jacob, and of the Gentiles, have been raised up from the depths of guilt and misery; and, through him, their "Light and Salvation," have now arrived at the realms of bliss, and before the throne are celebrating his praises. Numbers are continually enlightened and saved by him, in the most remote regions, whence daily accessions are made to the church triumphant: and he will be more and more the Light and Salvation of the Gentiles, till "all kings shall fall down before Him, and all nations shall do him service;" "because of the Lord that is faithful, and the Holy One of Israel who chooseth him."—These considerations may encourage and instruct his ministers. We should not despond, because of the contempt, reproach, or ill success with which we meet. We should rather be made more instant in prayer, and more diligent in using every means, by which we may be rendered as polished shafts, and suitable instruments, for his work. If we seem to "labour and spend our strength for nothing;" we should remember that comparatively our labours are of small value, and easily overpaid: that they may prove more useful than we suppose; and that "our judgment is with the Lord, and our work with our God." And if there should be no gathering of sinners to Christ through our ministry; yet the Lord will honour those that honour him, and welcome them at length, and say to each of them, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." He will also be our Strength and our sure Protector: and if we employ us in rescuing a few souls from destruction, and contend with him that contendeth with thee, and I will save thy children.

26 And I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; and they shall be 'drunken with their own blood as with 'sweet wine: 'and all flesh shall know that I the Lord am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the Mighty One of Jacob.

in leading them to Christ for light and salvation; we ought to count it a great thing: though we should diligently labour and incessantly pray to be made more extensively useful.

V. 7—15. Even the Redeemer, who spake as never man spake, seemed often in his personal ministry, "to labour in vain and to spend his strength for naught;" and his sufferings and death will eventually increase the condemnation of numbers who hear his gospel. He was, and still is, despised and abhorred by the nation, to which he was sent, and by mankind in general; and many rulers have opposed or new modelled his gospel, and made his truths and ordinances subservient to their political purposes; as if he were indeed their Servant, instead of their Lord! Yet is he glorious, and shall be glorified: all judgment is administered by Him, and all power is in his hand to fulfil his great designs. The Father "heareth him in an acceptable time, and in a day of salvation;" and he has said, "Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession;" and whilst some are broken to pieces with his iron rod; others, even kings and princes, shall arise to behold him, and fall down to worship him, as given "for a Covenant to the people, and to establish the earth." We also, whom he employs as "workers together with him;" while "we beseech our fellow-sinners, not to receive the grace of God in vain," "giving no offence in any thing, that our ministry be not blamed;" may assure them that now, (when the Gospel is preached to them,) is "the accepted time and the day of salvation;" (Notes, 2 Cor. 6:1—10.) seeing we speak in his name, who ever lives to intercede effectually for all that come through him to the mercy-seat of our forgiving God. (Note, Heb. 6:23—25.) In the persevering use of these means, we may hope at length to have our prayers answered; and that the Lord Jesus will himself speak to the prisoners of Satan, and say, "Go forth, show yourselves;" and that many of them will appear in the way to Zion, and learn to feed, as they go forward, upon the spiritual provisions of his gospel. Then our business will be carefully to prepare food for them, by the faithful preaching of the word, and by duly administering his ordinances; and to cast up, and make plain his highways, and remove all stumblingblocks out of them. But let those, who are setting out in this heavenly pilgrimage, remember, that if "they follow on to know the Lord," (Note, Hos. 6:1—3.) he himself will both feed and guide them, by the springs of grace and consolation: and then they will neither hunger, nor thirst, nor miss their road, nor be tempted above what they are able; but arrive safe at their journey's end. And, whilst heaven resounds with joy over sinners from every quarter, brought to repentance and faith in Christ; surely we on earth also should join in their songs of praise, anticipating, in the midst of our afflictions, the comforts prepared by our merciful God for his church and people. (Notes and P. O. Luke 15:1—10.)

V. 16—26. Alas, through sin and unbelief, and by means of sore conflicts, temptations, and distresses, we are often disposed to complain and despond, both respecting our own concerns, and those of religion at large. This is both dishonourable to God and uncomfortable to ourselves, and we are very criminal in yielding to it. The strongest love of the most indulgent mother bears no comparison to the everlasting love of Christ to his church, which he has purchased with "the travail of his soul," and to whom he gives "his flesh to be meat indeed, and his blood to be drink indeed." As far as we have scriptural evidence that we belong to this ransomed flock, we may be as sure that he will never forsake us, as that he will never forget his Zion. Our names are engraven on his hands and on his heart; and he has not only assured us, that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against his church," but that none shall ever pluck his sheep out of his almighty hands. Let us then give diligence to make our calling and election sure, and "rejoice in the hope of the glory of God."—And let us wait and pray, and use our whole influence, and concur earnestly with those, who having more influence, employ it in using proper means for promoting the fulfilment of all these glorious prophecies. By faith and in hope we may lift up our eyes, and behold multitudes from every land, gathering together to replenish and adorn the church. We may view the whole of those nations, where Christianity is professed, (which at present are in many places very "desolate, and a land of destruction,") filled with true believers: we may behold these bounds of the Redeemer's kingdom broken down, in answer to the prayers of Zion's children complaining that "the place is too strait for them:" we may imagine the despoiled and forlorn condition of the church exchanged for such liberty, prosperity, light, holiness, and honour, as baffle description. We may hear the signal given, the ensign erected,

CHAPTER I

THE LORD Messiah shows, that the Jews were rejected through their obstinate wickedness and unbelief; declares his power and fitness for his work; and speaks of his voluntary humiliation and patient sufferings, as assured of being delivered, justified, and rendered victorious over all enemies, 1-9. He encourages afflicted and tempted believers, and denounces the ruin of presumptuous transgressors, 10, 11.

THUS saith the LORD, Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement, whom I have put away? For which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away.

2 Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? when I called, was there none to answer? Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? behold, eat my rebuke I dry up the sea. I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst.

3 I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering.

the sons and daughters of the church brought in from every quarter; and kings, and queens, and all the nobles of the earth, vying with each other, who shall show most honour to true godliness, and do most service to the cause of Christ their Lord. We may view Satan, that mighty and terrible one, deprived of his prey, seized, bound, cast into the bottomless pit, and not allowed to "deceive the nations any more;" (Note, Rev. 20:1-6.) and all those powers, that have combined to enslave, corrupt, and persecute the church, made to "feed on their own flesh, and to be drunken with their own blood," by his power, who will contend with all that contend with his people, and avenge them upon their enemies; that all the earth may know, that our Saviour and Redeemer is JEHOVAH, the mighty One of Jacob.—Let us therefore seek for ourselves complete redemption from the power of Satan, "the god of this world;" then we may rejoice both in the hope of our own final salvation, and also of the final victory on earth, of that cause which we favour. And we may consider every effort that we make, to rescue our fellow-sinners, as in a small and remote degree, helping to bring forward that great revolution, which will cause increasing joy in heaven to holy angels, and to "the spirits of just men made perfect."

NOTES.—CHAP. I. V. 1-3. The preceding chapter concluded with predictions, which refer to the recovery of Israel from their present dispersions, as well as to the deliverance of the church from antichristian tyranny. (Notes, 49:18-23.) This relates to the cause of that dispersion. The Lord had espoused the church of Israel, (the mother of the individuals of that nation,) by the covenant ratified with her at mount Sinai; but she has long been like a divorced woman; especially since the nation "crucified the Lord of glory." The law required him who put away his wife, to give her a bill of divorcement, assigning the causes of her dismissal, which frequently were very frivolous. (Notes, Deut. 24:1-4. Jer. 3:1.) But if the Jews should produce the bill of their mother's divorcement, it would appear that she was not put away on trivial pretences; but for her violation of the covenant, for her idolatries and iniquities, especially for crucifying the promised Messiah, and obstinately opposing his gospel, and persecuting his disciples. It was also customary, on some occasions, for children to be sold into slavery, by the parent's consent to satisfy his creditors, or by a judicial sentence. (Marg. Ref. b. Notes, Ex. 21:2-11. 2 Kings 4:1. Neh. 5:1-5.) Thus the Jews were sold into the hands of the Romans, and have been enslaved and oppressed ever since: but it cannot be imagined that the Lord had sold them on any such account: indeed they were punished as criminals for their iniquities, and had none to blame but themselves for their miseries. For when the Lord came, even the eternal "Word, who from the beginning was with God, and was God," to his own people, "his own received him not;" (Notes, John 1:1-3, 10-13.) when he called them to follow him, they answered him not. And wherefore were they thus regardless and disobedient? because they expected a mighty temporal prince and conqueror; and he appeared "in the form of a servant," to be their spiritual Redeemer: whence they concluded, that he was not able to deliver them, or to defend them against the Romans. But could they behold his unparalleled miracles, and think that his hand was so shortened that it could not redeem? or that he had no power to deliver? (Note, 59:1, 2.) These proved him to be the same JEHOVAH, and to possess the same power, which had formerly dried up the Red Sea, and desolated the rivers of Egypt, turning their waters into blood, and causing the fish to die and putrify: the same power, which caused the tremendous plague of hail, and the more tremendous plague of darkness; and which was able at any time to repeat or vary these miracles and to clothe the heavens with darkness and make sackcloth their covering. This may refer to the darkness which covered the land during Christ's crucifixion; as that was an apt emblem of the dreadful vengeance, about to be poured out on his crucifiers. (Notes, Matt. 27:45. Mark 15:33.) The power which rebuked the tempestuous winds and waves, extorted obedience from legions of unclean spirits, and called the dead out of their graves, was evidently adequate to effect any deliverance, and to equal and exceed all which had been done for Israel by the Lord, from the beginning to that day.

V. 4. In the preceding verses, it is here supposed that Christ spake as JEHOVAH; here he speaks as Mediator: for there is not the least intimation of any change in the Speaker; and the things spoken in the following verses are inapplicable in many respects to Isaiah; for they refer to distant events, and evidently accord to Christ. (Note, 5:6.) If indeed we believe Jesus to be God and man in one person, we shall not be surprised to find him sometimes speaking, or spoken of, as the Lord God, and at other times as Man, and the Servant of JEHOVAH. This is frequent in the New Testament, and there are undeniable instances of it in the Old. (Notes, 40:9-17. 42:1-4. Zech. 2:6-9.)—The encouraging nature and tendency of our Lord's ministry, his condescension, and his unrivalled qualifications as a Teacher, rendered the obstinate unbelief of the Jews inexcusable. He was especially qualified and commissioned by the Father, to declare those truths, which give seasonable comfort to the broken heart and wounded conscience, and to those who are weary of sin, or harassed with temptations and afflictions. (Notes, 61:1-3. Matt. 11:28-30.) This characterized his ministry, and the gospel-dispensation. And as "the Spirit of the Lord God was upon him," that he might "speak as never man spake," so the same divine influence wakened him morning by morning, to pour out his prayers, to preach the gospel, and to receive and deliver the whole will of the Father, with that exact attention which the learner pays, or he that is learned has paid, to the voice of the teacher.

V. 5, 6. How far Isaiah, as the type of Christ, was exposed to these indignities, we cannot tell, as nothing of the kind is recorded concerning him. (Note, 1:1.) But the history of Jesus compels us to explain the whole of him exclusively.—Spitting in any one's presence has, in the East, been always considered as an intolerable expression of contempt: how much more to spit in a man's face! Before the high-priest, chief priests, and rulers, the servants and others repeatedly spat in the face of our adorable Redeemer. (Notes, Matt. 23:63-68. 27:27-31.)—The perfect holiness of the Saviour disposed him to open his ears to every commandment of the Father, and to render absolute obedience, through difficulties, temptations, and sufferings, even to the death upon the cross. (Notes, Ps. 40:6-8. Heb. 10:5-10. 12:2, 3.) So that he turned not back, but willingly submitted to repeated scourgings, and to the insults of the officers of the high-priest, and of the soldiers of Herod and Pilate, who plucked off his beard, and spat in his face, as the utmost expressions of their scorn and derision. (Marg. Ref. p.)

V. 7-9. Our blessed Saviour steadily went through his complicated and most intense sufferings, by faith in the promises of the Father. He was assured of support and deliverance, and that he should effect the purpose for which he suffered, and not be confounded by disappointment. Therefore he "set his face like a flint," in immovable constancy and intrepidity. (Notes, Jer. 1:17-19. 15:19-21. Ex. 2:6-8. 3:4-11. w. 8:9.) He knew that his cause was good and his righteousness perfect, and that all his accusers would be found liars; for the Lord was at hand to justify him. Who then would dare to contend with him, or to lay any thing to his charge? Let them come forward and stand together before Him, whose right it was to decide the cause: for he knew, that God would not condemn him; and who else could? Every one therefore that attempted it would soon lose all his credit and distinction, and become contemptible as an old moth-eaten garment.—This was verified in the resurrection and ascension of Christ, and by the pouring out of the Spirit upon his disciples; in the entire abolition of the authority of the Jewish high-priest and council, who first condemned Christ; and in the subversion of the Roman empire, by whose authority he was delivered up to be crucified.—The justification of Christ, our Surety, was an earnest of the justification of that whole body which he represented; and every true believer may on this ground give a similar challenge to all his enemies. (Notes, Ps. 143:2. Rom. 8:35-39.)

V. 10, 11. The darkness of temptation, and the anguish of body and mind, through which the Redeemer passed to his glory, forms a proper ground of consolation to his suffering people. (Notes, Heb. 2:16-18, 4:14-16.) He here addresses especially the Christian church, or the Jewish converts, in the midst of the calamities which befell them, about the time when Jerusalem was desolated: but the words are equally applicable to afflicted and distressed and tempted Christians in every age. They fear the Lord, and obey the voice of Christ, his elect Servant, (Note, 42:1-4.) as made known to them by his word and ministers; and accordingly repent and believe, and follow after holiness: yet they often walk in darkness; they may be exposed to continued afflictions, and unkind treatment from the world; and experience distressing temptations, conflicts, fears, and discouragements; and not be able to obtain the light of prosperity or consolation. But let them trust in the mercy, truth, power, and wisdom of the Lord; and stay themselves upon him as their covenanted Friend, for direction, support, and deliverance; let them wait for him, and he will not fail their expectations. "This shows, that it is a rare thing, that any should obey aright God's true ministers, though they labour to bring them from hell to heaven."—On the other hand, those who amuse themselves with their own devices; who rely on their own wisdom, strength, or righteousness; who exult in worldly prosperity, or sensual pleasures; or who are pleased with schemes of infidelity, hypocrisy, superstition, or enthusiasm; refuse the light of the divine word and kindle a fire of their own in its stead. They compass themselves about with their sparks, and walk by the glimmering light of its blaze: but these will soon be extinguished together; and, by the power and wrath of Christ, they will lie down in sorrow, outer darkness, and despair.—More particularly, as Vitrina explains it, it may mean the designs of the turbulent and factious Jews, in the times succeeding those of Christ; who in pursuit of their own desperate schemes, stirred up the war against the Romans, and kindled a fire which consumed their city and nation." Bp. Lowth. (Notes, John 11:49-53. Rom. 9:30-33, 10:1-4.)—Walk in, &c. (11) Notes, 1 Kings 18:17,27-29. Ec. 11:9,10. Ez. 20:39. Am. 4:4,5. Matt. 26:42-46, v. 45.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It will appear, in the great day of account, that the destruction of sinners was chargeable upon themselves alone. God never deprived any of his rational creatures of their advantages, except for sin.—This was the cause of angels being cast out of heaven, and man out of paradise; and it is the only source of all the miseries which we feel or fear. For this we are, as it were, sold into slavery to Satan and our lusts, and "sin reigneth unto death." (Marg. Ref. b, c.) But, after all our violations of the divine law, we shall yet be happy if we do not reject the gospel: for he, who might have come with irresistible power to execute vengeance upon us, has graciously appeared, in our nature and as our Brother, to save sinners; and he calls upon each of us to believe and follow him. Wherefore then are men so backward to hear and obey his call? Has he not power to save and to destroy? Did not his miracles proclaim his authority over all nature and all creatures, even during his humiliation on earth? The darkness and prodigies, which attended his sufferings and death, proclaimed that "truly this was the Son of God," and anticipated the evidence of his glorious resurrection. Has his exaltation to the throne of glory at all shortened his hand that he cannot redeem, or deprived him of power to deliver? and cannot he, who shall shortly raise the dead, destroy by fire this visible world, and destroy the wicked with everlasting

CHAPTER LI.

God encourages his people, by the example of Abraham, to trust in him; and promises them comfort, 1-3. He contrasts the certainty and perpetuity of his righteousness and salvation, with the short continuance of the visible creation, and the feebleness of persecutors; and warns his people against the dread of reproach, 4-8. The Church calls on God to remove his wonderful works in her behalf; and receives assurances of comfort and prosperity, with a rebuke for her unbelief and fear of man, 9-16. Israel in past and present distresses, is assured of deliverance, and of the punishment of her oppressors, 17-23.

HEarken to me, ye that follow after righteousness, ye that seek the Lord: look ing perdition; make up to us all we can lose, and support us under all we can suffer for his sake?—His mercy and condescension also are equal to his power and majesty. He received from the Father those encouraging words, which he once spoke in person, and now delivers to us by his ministers. Still he calls "the weary and heavy laden to come to him, that they may find rest to their souls;" his word affords seasonable cordials for the mourning, the tempted, and the discouraged; he knows how to apply them to their hearts by his comforting Spirit: and he is ready, from day to day, to hear their prayers and alleviate their distresses. In many of these things, he is the pattern for his ministers to follow. They should seek to the Lord God to "give them the tongue of the learned that they may know how to speak" seasonably to the afflicted and broken-hearted: they must "awake morning by morning," that they may study and learn, and then teach the word of God, and become "workmen that need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Their ear also must be opened to hear, and their heart prepared to obey, the commandments of God, that they may become examples to the flock. And, as the incarnate Son of God was not rebellious, and shrunk not back from obedience in his arduous undertaking, which required him to endure pains, shame, and agonies unknown; surely we should be willing to endure hardship as his soldiers, and not decline any obedience as too self-denying, or any suffering as too sharp, to which he calls us. "Let us then go forth with him out of the camp, bearing his reproach;" and if we trust in his righteousness, copy his example, and suffer for his sake, the Lord God will help us too; and we may "set our faces as a flint," assured "that God will justify" and deliver us, and confound all our adversaries and persecutors. Let then the Christian, "who feareth the Lord, and obeyeth the voice" of his beloved Son, take courage, even "if he walk in darkness, and have no light;" let him confide in God to conduct him through every gloomy scene of affliction, temptation, and disconsolation; and through the vale of death, to the everlasting light and joy of heaven. But as for those who oppose, neglect, despise, or pervert this great salvation; their prosperity, confidence, and joy will be only as the expiring blaze, and the vanishing sparks of a fire of thorns; and their boasted illuminations will light them down to the regions of darkness and despair. (Notes, Prov. 4:18,19. Ec. 7:2-6, 11:9,10.)

NOTES.—CHAP. LI. V. 1-3. This evidently continues the subject of the former chapter. Messiah here again returns to "speak a word in season" to his discouraged people. (Note, 50:4.) Some suppose the captives at Babylon to be intended; but the scene appears to be laid in after times, and that captivity merely to have given occasion to the address; and the deliverance of the Jews from Babylon was a shadow of far more extensive and important blessings. The desolations of Jerusalem by the Romans, the massacres of Jews which attended and succeeded it, and the rejection of that nation, must needs cause great heaviness to others of the Jewish converts to Christianity, as well as to St. Paul; and they might conclude that the Lord's choice of Israel was finally vacated. (Notes, Rom. 9:1-3, 11:1-6.) The ten persecutions in the first three centuries were very trying to the faith and patience of the primitive Christians. The long continued oppressions, under which the church has laboured from antichristian persecutors; and the prevalence of superstition, idolatry, impiety, infidelity, and every kind of iniquity to this day, in nations professing Christianity; have been, and are, very discouraging, to all those who love truth and holiness. There is also a time approaching and very near, when the dispersed of Israel will need some ground in their own Scriptures, to encourage their hope of redemption into the church; and consolatory topics, suited to these several purposes, are here suggested.—Those "who follow after righteousness and seek the Lord," are addressed; they have begun to desire and seek the knowledge of God, and expect happiness in his favour; and they are using the appointed means of obtaining righteousness, (i. e. of being justified and sanctified,) in order to it. Persons of this character are called upon to hearken to the voice of God, and to recollect the rock and the quarry, so to speak, whence the first stones of the whole building of the nation of Israel were taken. God called Abraham an idolater, when advanced in years, with only Sarah his wife to attend him: and, when it was become contrary to the ordinary course of nature for him to have children by her, the Lord, according to his promise, blessed them

So that he could, and certainly would, recover his church from the lowest condition: he would comfort the remnant of believers, by reviving true religion in those places which had been waste and desert; and by planting them, like the garden of Eden, with every beautiful, excellent, and useful production; and this would cause joy and gladness, and thankful songs of praise, to abound. (Notes, 35:12. 41:17-20. 49:9-13. 55:12, 13. 61:7-11. Jer. 31:10-14. 33:6-11. Ez. 31:3-9. Rev. 19:1-7.) The conversion of the Gentiles, to fill up the places in Zion which were desolated by the rejection of the Jews; the revival of evangelical religion, after it had lain long buried under the rubbish of popery: the restoration of the Jews into the church, and her subsequent purity and enlargement, may all be predicted under these images.

V. 4-6. Here God our Saviour speaks to Israel, and calls on them to attend, and carefully notice his words: for he would promulgate his laws, establish his ordinances, and declare his truths, among other nations; who, being instructed by his holy word, would become his subjects and obey his commandments. (Notes, 2:2-5. 42:1-4.) His righteousness, as imputed to believers for justification, and his grace as imparted for sanctification, and the performance of his ancient promises, were now brought near; the glad tidings of his complete salvation were gone forth; (for the scene is laid in the primitive times of Christianity; his "arms," or his universal authority and almighty power, would execute just judgment among the nations; and the most remote regions would learn to wait on him, and trust in him as alone able to save them. He would not fail, or be discouraged, till this had generally taken effect: for his salvation, and the righteousness connected with it, would continue, not only after the ruin of successive generations of persecutors and opposers; but even after the heavens and the earth were grown old and vanished, and all their inhabitants were destroyed like the meanest insects: yea, they should never be abolished to all eternity. (Notes, 7:8. 34:3-7. 45:20-25. 46:12, 13. Ps. 102:25-28. Matt. 24:32-35. Heb. 1:10-12. 2 Pet. 3:8-13. Rev. 20:11-15.)—To rest, &c. (4) "To break forth." Bp. Louth.

V. 7, 8. There seems to be here an advance, in describing the character of the persons addressed; perhaps intimating, that they "who follow after righteousness, and seek the LORD," will "know righteousness," and obtain "the full assurance of hope;" that "being justified by faith they have peace with God," and enjoy his favour: having his law written in their hearts, loving it and delighting to obey it. (Notes, 1-3. Ps. 37:29-31. 40:6-8. Jer. 31:33. A Rom. 7:22-25. Phil. 3:8-11. Heb. 8:7-13. 10:5-10.) This confidence would be peculiarly desirable, and almost necessary, in order to their victory over the fear of man, ness, the people "in whose heart is my law; be ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings.

8 For the moth shall eat them up like a garment, and the worm shall eat them like wool: but my righteousness shall be for ever, and my salvation from generation to generation.

especially in times of persecution; and they are encouraged not to fear the reproaches or revilings of those, who "spake all manner of evil against them falsely for Christ's sake," and then made their calumnies the pretext for their cruelties. (Notes, 12-14. Matt. 5:10-12. Heb. 11:24-26, 35-38. 13:9-14. 1 Pet. 4:12-16.) For all their persecutors would soon decay, and perish like a moth-eaten garment: but the righteousness and salvation of the LORD would maintain their ground on earth through all generations; as well as continue for ever the felicity of the believer, who here suffered for adhering to them. (Notes, 4-6. 45:15-17. Jer. 23:5, 6. Dan. 9:24. 2 Thes. 2:16, 17. Heb. 5:7-10.)

V. 9-11. The church, encouraged by these most gracious assurances, calls upon her great Redeemer to awake and exert himself for her deliverance. She calls him, "The Arm of the LORD," or his power; and Christ is the Power, as well as the Word and Wisdom, of God. (Notes, 53:1. 1 Cor. 1:17-24.) She entreats him to "put on strength, as in the ancient days," and as in the former generations of Israel: for was he not the same almighty King, who had destroyed Egypt and Pharaoh, and weakened that formidable power of which the dragon was an emblem? (Notes, 27:1. Ps. 74:13-17.) Was not he the same, who had divided the Red Sea, that his redeemed people might pass over? (Note, 63:11-14.) In this confidence the church rests assured, that the people, whom he has now redeemed with his blood, as well as by his power, will obtain a joyful deliverance from every enemy.—As the Jews of old returned from Babylon to Zion with songs of joy and praise: so will that nation be again received into the church, and restored to the promised land; and the whole church shall long rejoice and prosper freed from those enemies, oppressions, and corruptions, which have so long harassed her; and enjoy such peace, and purity and light, and felicity, as shall render her earthly state almost like heaven, where alone these expressions can be fully answered. (Notes, 25:6-8. 35:8-10. Jer. 30:19-22. 31:10-14. Zeph. 3:14-17. Zech. 10:5-12. Rev. 19:1-7. 20:1-6.)

V. 12-14. The Lord here engages to be the Comforter of his church; and in that case, what occasion had she to fear wretched, dying men, who are cut down and wither as the grass? (Notes, 40:6-8. 50:7-9.) It must therefore be the effect of unbelief, forgetfulness of the Lord her Maker, and of the power engaged on her side, that she was continually terrified by the fury of oppressors, as if they were about entirely to destroy her; whereas their fury would speedily vanish, and be no more found. (Notes, Dan. 3:16. 18. Matt. 10:27, 28. Acts 12:1-4, 20-24.)—But she complained and was alarmed, like a person who is exiled or in captivity, and was in great haste to be set at liberty, lest she should perish in the dungeon, or by famine.—"He marcheth on with speed, who cometh to set free the captive, &c." Cyrus, if understood of the temporal redemption from the captivity of Babylon; in the spiritual sense, the Messiah.' Bp. Louth. 'The Hebrew runs plainly thus: "The captive exile shall be quickly delivered: he shall not die in the pit," (or prison) "neither shall his bread fail." Louth. Either of these renderings contains simply an encouragement, and not a reproof: but the context leads us to think, that this also was implied; and that the persons concerned, while earnestly waiting and seeking for deliverance, were in a measure impatient, and weak in faith, and ready to conclude that the blessing, so long delayed, would never be vouchsafed, though expressly promised in the sacred Scriptures. Thus pious Christians, who have always grieved over the corruptions of he church, and longed for deliverance from the spiritual captivity of Antichrist, and for the predicted millennium; have been tempted, by the failure of many zealous attempts, to which they foreboded full success, and by the delay of an answer to their earnest prayers, to conclude that such a time will never arrive; and that superstition, ignorance, false doctrine, and wickedness, will prevail to the end of the world.—'The captive must starve and die in his dungeon, if not hastily liberated.' (Marg. Ref. a.)

V. 15, 16. The church, or the prophet, had called on the Lord, who had divided the Red Sea; and he here answers to that call. (Note, 9—11.) He was still the same omnipotent Protector of his people, as when he brought Israel out of Egypt.—But the latter verse must be addressed, either to Israel or to the Messiah whom he predicted, and in some respects typified. The Lord had put words in the prophet's mouth, which he delivered to Israel, to encourage the faith and direct the prayers of his people; and he had preserved him, as under the shadow of his hand, that with the converts made by his ministry, he might "plant the heavens," as with "trees of righteousness," and "establish the earth," or the land, which had been greatly shaken in the reign of Ahaz. It is, however, obvious, that this interpretation falls exceedingly short of the energetic language employed; which nothing can fully answer, but the glorious effects of the Messiah's coming into the world, being carried through his labours and sufferings, advanced to the mediatorial throne, and sending his gospel to all nations, with the Holy Spirit to render it successful; thus replenishing heaven with holy inhabitants, establishing the moral state of the earth, and owning the despised church, as a people near and dear to him. (Notes, 15:18,19. 49:1—16. 50:4. 59:20,21. 60:15—22. 61:1—3.)—Plant the heavens. (16) "Stretch out the heavens." Bp. Louth. This rendering needs an entire change in the Hebrew text, without the least authority. Besides, the "stretching out the heaven," was past, but the "planting of the heavens," was the special future work of the Messiah.

V. 17—20. The Lord here seems to address the Jews in their present dispersions. Jerusalem, the mother of that people, had indeed drunk the cup of the Lord's fury, and wrung out the very dregs of it. The terrible effects of his indignation against that devoted city, are represented by those of a poisoned or medicated potion, which a criminal was obliged to drink off; and which produced rage, despair, and anguish, or trembling and fainting. (Notes, 49:24—26. Ps. 60:1—3. 75:8. Jer. 25:15—17. Zech. 12:2—5. Matt. 26:36—41.) In this condition none of her children were at hand, or were able to lead, uphold, or take care of her. That is, the most desolating and stupendous judgments would be poured out upon Jerusalem, by pestilence, discord, famine, and the Roman sword: and none of the neighbours would sympathize with the poor Jews, or attempt to comfort them; but would rather insult over their miseries and increase them. Nor among themselves would any of Jerusalem's sons be able to help themselves, or defend their city: but they would lie fainting and dying in multitudes at the head of every street: and, continuing unhumiliated and untamed, they would resemble the wild bull, when taken in the hunter's toils, furiously struggling to extricate himself, and only entangling himself the more. Thus would they suffer by the furious rebuke of the Lord, for rejecting and crucifying their promised Messiah.—This seems to relate immediately to the taking of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the miseries which attended that awful event. But the calamities of the Jews continue to this day; and they yet remain unhumiliated under them; which circumstance shows that they, and not persecuted Christians, are here primarily intended.—'Two things: (19) that is, desolation by famine, and destruction by the sword.' Bp. Louth.

V. 21—23. The afflicted Jews, who have been so long made drunken by temporal and spiritual judgments, "more than with wine," or in a more stupefying manner, are here encouraged to expect deliverance. (Note, 23:9—12.) Mercy is yet in store for the nation of Israel, for their fathers' sake. (Note, Rom. 11:25—32.) The Lord will yet plead their cause, and punish their oppressors, who have so long treated them with equal cruelty and indignity; trampling them down as the mire in the streets, and attempting to domineer over their souls as well as their bodies.—It is well known, that in those countries where the inquisition is established, numbers of Jews dissemble their religion to escape its cruelties; yet they abjectly submit to be thus trampled on, for gain by traffic there: and this forms a remarkable accomplishment of the prophecy. (Notes, Deut. 4:25—28. 28:64—67. Josh. 10:24,25.) Neither the obstinacy, nor the sufferings of the Jews at Babylon, were in any measure equal to what they have been since the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans: the scene of the prophecy leads us to this interpretation; and those popish countries, where they have been most grievously oppressed, will hereafter be punished with similar severity. (Notes, 34: 63:1—6. Ez. 39:17—29. Hos. 3:4,5. Mic. 7:16—20. Zech. 12:2—8. Rev. 18: 19:)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8. The consolations of the gospel are proposed to men, not by name, but by character; and from the first dawns of divine life in the soul, till its completion in glory, the true believer, and he alone, "follows after righteousness and seeks the LORD." (Note, Hos. 6:1—3. Phil. 3:12—14.)—As it is profitable to consider from what small and unpromising beginnings the blessing of God has increased and enlarged the church hitherto, and revived pure religion when it appeared almost expiring; so it is very useful for believers to consider frequently, "the rock whence they were hewn, and the hole of the pit whence they were digged." We should frequently and deeply reflect upon our natural depravity, guilt, and misery; upon the enmity and hardness of our hearts, the rebellion of our wills, the pollution of our imaginations and desires, and the crimes of our lives past: we should recollect the bad habits which we had contracted, through an early entrance and a long continuance in sin; the ungodly connexions which we had formed, the prejudices that we had imbibed, and all the circumstances peculiar to us which tended to aggravate our guilt, and to render our conversion improbable: and we should often recall to mind how we struggled against conviction, and would gladly have quieted our consciences without parting with our sins, or without accepting the salvation of Christ. These reviews, when duly made, powerfully tend to keep the heart humble, and the conscience awake and tender; they repress boastings and complaints, and excite thankfulness to him who has made us to differ: they are suited to satisfy the discouraged believer that a saving change has taken place, and to animate his hopes and prayers, for all which yet remains to be done in and for him; they render Christ and his love and salvation more precious to our souls; and give energy to our attempts and prayers for the conversion of ungodly relatives, and for that of sinners all around us. Let us then frequently thus review our life past, that we may renew our repentance, our joyful praises, and our earnest supplications; that our souls may become like "the garden of the LORD," being filled with all the "fruits of righteousness, which are through Jesus Christ, to the glory of God;" and that we may be as it were in miniature, what the church on earth will shortly become: and possess an internal evidence of the power of our God to effect that glorious and stupendous change in the state of the visible church and of the world; as well as an earnest of that further change, which must yet take place in our bodies and souls, previous to our full enjoyment of the "Paradise of God," where only "joy and gladness shall be found, thanksgiving and the voice of melody;" and from which "sorrow and mourning shall flee away."—Our meditations should also be extended to the former condition of this our most favoured nation: blessed be God that the gospel of Christ has come, and does rest among us for the light of our souls: "his righteousness is brought nigh, his salvation is gone forth" in the midst of us; he is revealed as our Lawgiver and Judge, and he is become the Righteousness and Salvation of those who trust in him and wait for him. Let us then rely on his merits, his grace, and power, and receive the law from his hands, as the rule of our obedience: and thus we shall be safe and happy, when the earth and all its works shall be burnt up; for "his salvation shall be for ever, and his righteousness shall not be abolished." But if we would expect that solemn season with comfort, and have confidence in death and judgment; we must press forwards in the ways of God, that, having his "law in our hearts," we may know our interest in his righteousness. Then we need fear no enemy or catastrophe: our reverential fear of God, and our holy dread and abhorrence of sin, will arm us against the ensnaring fear of man: and it is our infirmity and fault if we fear the revilers or rage of any man or set of men, who despise and hate us for the sake of Christ and his righteousness; seeing he is our ever-present and all-sufficient Protector. We can indeed expect no other than reproach in this wicked world: but our persecutors will soon die and perish. Should we be cut off by their rage, or die before them, we shall soon be out of their reach: and if we be spared, they will soon lose their power of molesting us.—The cause of Christ survives one generation of opposers after another: and the believer will survive all his revilers, and enjoy his portion whilst they are in "outer darkness." Let us then strive against our fears, and give up ourselves unto prayer: and let us take courage in reviewing the wonders which God performed for his church of old.

V. 9-23. Christians may not only plead with God, that he divided the Red Sea, and destroyed the Egyptians to deliver Israel: but may advert to the more glorious triumphs of his grace, at the day of Pentecost, and afterwards in the conversion of unnumbered multitudes to Him, whom they just before had crucified, and who, being risen again and ascended into heaven, poured out his Spirit to work the astonishing change. Compared with those glorious days, "the Arm of the LORD" seems now to sleep; but he only waits to be awakened by our fervent prayers. He will yet "put on strength as in ancient days;" he will destroy the power of antichrist, and bind up the old dragon, who has hitherto deceived the nations. Then "the redeemed of the LORD" shall be delivered from captivity, Zion shall resound with songs of praise, and the gladness of believers on earth shall form a sweet antepast to the everlasting joy of heaven. Our lot indeed is not cast in that happy period; yet the Lord is our comforter, if true Christians; and should we then think ourselves so defenceless, as to fear a man that shall die! Surely this must arise from our unbelief, and forgetfulness of "the LORD our Maker, who hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth;" and we are very reprehensible, if we be "solicitous continually every day," because of the prevalence of infidelity and impiety, as if the enemies of godliness were ready to complete its ruin.

The case is far otherwise: they are compassing their own perdition, and ere long their place shall know them no more. Let us then make haste to escape the confines of sin, and to return from our state of distance and banishment from God, but let us wait patiently our time of deliverance from oppression and calamities, assured that the Lord will hasten it in due season. If we be saved by Jesus from the pit of hell, he will not let us perish in any other pit; and if we have learned to feed upon "the bread of life," our bread even for this life cannot fail: our bondage and exile on earth will soon end; our souls will be rescued from the prison of our sinful bodies; and our bodies at length redeemed from the bondage of corruption, and "so shall we be ever with the Lord." Let us then rest our souls on his word; that, having been "planted as trees of righteousness" in his courts below, we shall at length be transplanted to heaven, there to flourish for ever in that garden of the Lord. (Note, Ps. 92:13-15.) Nor should they despair, who have here drunk the deepest of "the cup of the Lord's indignation;" for his severest judgments often introduce his tenderest compassions. Yet, as long as men are hardened, stupified, or rendered outrageous and desperate, by afflictions, there is little appearance of a happy event.—When the wrath of God rests upon transgressors, no children or friends can comfort them; and all their efforts to extricate themselves involve them in deeper guilt and misery. Let sinners then remember these things, and learn by their present sufferings to submit to God, to confess their crimes, to acknowledge his justice, and to seek his mercy. Let us all recollect, that our rebellious murmurs tend only to increase and prolong our sorrows. Let us look on the poor Jews with compassion, and endeavour to administer to their comfort, and not add to their miseries; and above all, let us seek and pray for their conversion. And let those powerful tyrants, who lord it over that people, or any others of the human race; who enslave their bodies, or usurp authority over their consciences, remember, that the Lord will plead their cause, and punish their impenitent oppressors, with greater misery and contempt, either in this world, or in that which is to come.

NOTES.—CHAP. LII. V. 1. The latter part of the preceding chapter describes the desolations of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the miseries of the Jews to this day; more exactly than either those inflicted by the Chaldeans, or those which they endured under Antiochus Epiphanes, which were of short duration: and this chapter is evidently a continuation of the subject. There can therefore be no good reason to restrict the interpretation to the deliverance of the Jews from Babylon.—The sacred writer indeed treats his subject as a prophet and a poet, and not as an orator or historian: yet some degree of method, and some order in the series of his predictions, may be expected, as well in his writings, as in those of the other prophets. He had spoken of the deliverance of Jerusalem from Sennacherib; and then of the return of the Jews from Babylon: intermingling predictions of more spiritual and generally interesting events. But nothing can be supposed more interesting than the future restoration of Israel to the church and to their own land: no event is more evidently predicted in Scripture: and the Jews generally expect the termination of their present miseries; though they think that it will be effected by the advent of the Messiah, whom they suppose not yet come. This restoration is far more intimately connected with those things which relate to the person and work of Christ, than the deliverance from Babylon was: and it is so agreeable to the context, that I apprehend it ought not to be overlooked in explaining this passage.—The church had called upon her Redeemer, "as the Arm of the LORD," to "awake and put on strength" for her deliverance: (Note, 51:9-11.) here she is called upon to awake, and to "be strong in the LORD," that she may apprehend that liberty which was preparing for her. She is represented as a sorrowful woman, and called Zion, "Jerusalem, the holy city;" but she is exhorted to put on her beautiful garments as a rejoicing bride; being assured that the uncircumcised and unclean should no more enter into her, as the Chaldeans had done. (Notes, 1:25-27. 60:1-3, 15-22. Ez. 48:30-35, v. 35. Zech. 14:20, 21. Rev. 21:22-27.) But with what propriety could this be addressed to Jerusalem after the captivity? Antiochus Epiphanes soon profaned the city and temple, by every method which his impious cruelty could devise: after that event Pompey, the Roman general, took possession of the city, and committed many profanations, and even entered into the holy of holies: and at length the city and whole nation, as unclean, were given up into the hands of the uncircumcised Romans, to be utterly profaned and desolated. (Note, Dan. 9:26-27, v. 27.)—The New Testament church therefore must chiefly be

3 For thus saith the LORD, ^aye have sold yourselves for naught; and ye shall be redeemed without money.

4 For thus saith the Lord God, ^bMy people went down aforetime into Egypt to sojourn there; and the Assyrian oppressed them without cause.

5 Now therefore, what have I here, saith the LORD, that my people is taken away for naught? They that rule over them make them to howl, saith the LORD; and my name continually every day is blasphemed.

6 Therefore my people shall know my name: therefore they shall know in that day that I am he that do speak: behold, it is I.

intended, and probably with especial reference to its last and purest ages: for there are clear predictions given, that after the termination of the antichristian tyranny, the restoration of the Jews, and the bringing in of the fulness of the Gentiles; the church shall continue in permanent peace and purity, till the eve of the general judgment: then indeed some apostacies will take place, and the apostate nations shall make war upon the city of God; but they shall fail of success, and perish in the attempt. (Notes, Rev. 20:1—10).

V. 2, 3. Jerusalem, or Zion, is here represented as a captive in chains, trampled in the dust; (51:23.) but she is called upon to arise and shake herself from her dust, to sit down as a queen upon a throne, and to divest herself of all the badges of her former servitude. The Jews indeed had been sold into bondage for those sins which could in no sense profit them, and they might be said to have "sold themselves," or "to have been sold for naught;" (Note, 50:1—3.) and all the calamities of the Christian church have been righteous visitations for her sins: but the Lord was about to redeem them by his power, without paying their oppressors any ransom for them. Cyrus extorted the power over the Jews from their oppressors, and then freely liberated them: and this may perhaps be an exact prefiguration of the future deliverance of the church and restoration of Israel.—The price paid by our Redeemer for our salvation, was "not silver, or gold, or corruptible things, but his own precious blood." (Notes, 45:13, 14. 1 Pet. 1:17—21.)

Arise, and sit down, &c. (2) "Ascend thy lofty seat." When sitting is spoken of (in the east) as a posture of more than ordinary state, it ... means sitting on high, on a chair of state, or throne: for which a footstool was necessary. ... Chairs, (saith Sir John Chardin,) 'are never used in Persia but at the coronation of their kings. The king is seated in a chair of gold set with jewels, three feet high. ... This proves the propriety of the style in Scripture, which always joins the footstool to the throne. 66:1. 2 Chr. 9:18. Ps. 110:1.' Bp. Lowth.

V. 4—6. The Egyptians ungratefully and unjustly enslaved the Israelites, when they went down to sojourn among them; and the Assyrians and Chaldeans afterwards grievously oppressed them without any provocation; but the Lord pleaded their cause and rescued them: (Notes, 47:5, 51:21—23.) and thus he will save his church from all unrighteous persecutors; and avenge Israel on all those who oppress them. He did not authorize these cruelties; nor had he any profit from their sufferings. Those, who from age to age ruled over his people, have made them to howl by their cruel oppressions, and have then insulted them, and blasphemed the name of their God, as if he could not deliver them. (Notes, 48:9—11.) Therefore his own glory required him to interpose; and he would let his people know his power, truth, and love; and that He, even JEHOVAH himself, had spoken all these predictions, (of which under their anguish of spirit they had been led to doubt,) and was ready to perform them.—Perhaps some intimation is here given, that the Jews shall in the day of their restoration know, that he, who spake to them as their Messiah, and whom they despised and crucified, was indeed their God and King. (Notes, Zech. 12:9—14. Matt. 23:37—39.)

V. 7, 8. (Note, Nah. 1:15.) The proclamation of Cyrus circulated by messengers into every place, and notified by signals, and by the voice of the watchmen, on the tops of the mountains, was but a feeble emblem of that grand event, to which the apostle appropriates this passage; namely, the preaching of the gospel to the nations of the earth. When men know their own real character and situation, and that of the world around them, in respect of God and eternity, "the veil" of those who bring these good tidings, appear beautiful; that is, the meanest of them: it may also intimate their holy walk and conversation. (Note, Rom. 10:12—17 v. 15.)

They announce the glad tidings from heaven of pardon, peace, and salvation; and "say to Zion, Thy God reigneth." (Notes, 40:6—8. Luke 2:9—14.) He rules the world with invincible power, who is Zion's God and Saviour. The watchmen may be the same as the messengers of glad tidings; evangelists, or such as wait to receive and circulate the joyful sound. Whilst they cry aloud, that all may hear, they join glad hallelujahs with their invitations: and the divine light then shines so clear, that they "see eye to eye," with open face, as of one mind and judgment, and very distinctly. (Notes, Jer. 32:39—41. Acts 4:32—35, v. 32. Phil. 2:1—4.)—I apprehend this is not to be restricted to any particular period; but is a general declaration of the means, by which all the predicted events, as far as they relate to spiritual redemption, are to be accomplished. In proportion as the faithful preaching of the gospel is vouchsafed, true religion will be diffused and flourish.—The ideas ... are in their full extent evangelical: and accordingly St. Paul has, with the utmost propriety, applied this passage to the preaching of the gospel, Rom. 10:15. The joyful tidings here to be proclaimed, "Thy God, O Zion reigneth," are the same that John the Baptist, the messenger of Christ, and that Christ himself published: "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." Bp. Lowth. (Note, Matt. 3:2.)

Thy God reigneth. (7) Notes, Ps. 93:1, 2. 197:1. 99:1—3.—Watchmen. (8) Notes, 56:9—12. Ez. 3:17—19.—Shall bring again Zion." "When Jehovah returneth to Zion." ... God is considered as having deserted his people during the captivity, and at the Restoration as returning himself with them to Zion, his former habitation. 46:9. Ps. 68:1.' Bp. Lowth. V. 9, 10. The incorporation of the Gentile converts with the believing Jews, in the primitive times of Christianity, replenished the waste places of Jerusalem, and caused great joy to all the faithful servants of God. Thus "the LORD made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations," to subject the worshippers of idols to himself; but when the whole visible church shall be full of true religion, the emphasis of this passage will be more completely answered, and this will make way literally, for "all the ends of the earth to see the salvation of our God." (Notes, 49:5, 6. Ps. 22:27—31. 98:2, 3. Luke 3:4—6. Rev. 11:15—18.)

V. 11, 12. Here the return of the Jews from Babylon is alluded to; but greater things are evidently prefigured. When leave was given them to return, the Lord with emphatical repetitions commanded their departure; and that no attachment to any object, in that unclean and devoted city, should detain them. (Notes, 48:20—22. Jer. 50:7, 8, 51:6. Lam. 4:13—16. Zech. 2:6—9.) And those, who carried back the sacred vessels, were required to be peculiarly careful not to contract ritual or moral uncleanness. (Ezra 8:24—30.) They ought not by any means needlessly to delay their departure; yet neither should they improperly hasten it, as if they were fleeing from their enemies: (Notes, 28:16. Ez. 12:9.) for they would have full liberty to return home, and the Lord would guide and protect them on every side: through the whole journey he would both march, as it were, in the front of them, and also gather and protect those, who formed the rear of the company.—St. Paul applies part of this to the separation of sinners from idolatry, and all worldly connexions or attachments: (Note, 2 Cor. 6:14—18.) and a similar command and caution are given to believers, to come out from the New Testament-Babylon. (Note, Rev. 18:4—8.)

V. 13—15. These verses introduce another subject, and properly belong to the next chapter. "The deliverance of the Jews from the captivity of Babylon; the deliverance of the Gentiles from their miserable state of ignorance and idolatry; and the deliverance of mankind from the captivity of sin and death, ... are subordinate to one another; and the two latter are shadowed out under the image of the former. They are covered by it as by a veil, which, however, is

CHAPTER LIII.

The unbelief of the Jews predicted, 1. The meanness of Christ's external appearance, and the contempt and sufferings which he would endure, 2-3. He would suffer as a sacrifice for the sins of his people ; but in perfect holiness and patience, 4-7. Several circumstances predicted, which attended his death, burial, resurrection, and glory ; and his success in justifying and saving sinners as his spiritual progeny, 8-10. As a recompense of his sufferings, and the fruit of his intercession, he should rescue a numerous people from Satan's bondage, and rule over them as his willing subjects, 11, 12.

He תְּשׁוּבָה fulfil his whole undertaking, with consummate wisdom תְּשׁוּבָה complete success ; so that his exaltation in heaven, and his glory on earth, would be very high. Yet his previous abasement would be proportionately deep : many would behold his sufferings with astonishment, and be offended by them. His visage would be marred by sorrow and shame, with wounds and blood, by being spit upon and crowned with thorns, and treated with indignity, more than any man's ever was ; and he would appear more base than any of the human species. (Marg. Ref. p.) Opposing kings would at length be silenced by fear and astonishment, or won over to the faith ; for they would see and consider such things, as they before had never heard of, or been acquainted with. (Notes, 49:7, 8, 22, 23. 60:1-14.)—^a This is the King Messiah, who shall be exalted above Abraham, and extolled above Moses, and be high above the angels of the ministry.' Misdrach-Tenetuma, an ancient Jewish gloss on this passage.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6. The promises of God should invigorate our efforts to obtain the proposed blessings ; and to promote that purity, peace, and enlargement of the church, which they teach us to expect.—^a Whilst we call on the Lord to "awake and put on strength," for our help and salvation ; we should attend to his exhortation to bestir ourselves in doing our duty. At his call the sinner awakes from the fatal sleep of sin, and delusive dreams of earthly felicity, and discovers his abject, wretched, and enslaved condition : by his help he arises from the dust, shakes off his sloth and dejection, breaks his fetters, puts off the old corrupt nature, and puts on Christ for righteousness and sanctification. Then he appears before God in his beautiful garments ; (Notes, Zech. 3:1-4. Rom. 13:11-14. Gal. 3:26-29.) his holy conversation shows him to men also, to be "a new creature ;" and "being delivered from the bondage of corruption," "sin shall no more have dominion over him."—Multitudes indeed of the "uncircumcised in heart and unclean" in life, in every age and place, have been within the visible church : (Notes, Jer. 9:25, 26. Acts 5:51-53. Rom. 2:25-29, vv. 28, 29.) but none of them are citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, not one of them can find admission into the holy city of our God above. We should therefore be diligent in "cleansing ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." The freeness of his salvation gives us abundant encouragement, in pursuing this path : and when we consider how unprofitable, yea, how pernicious to our temporal comfort those sins are, by which men incur condemnation and enslave their souls, we shall the more value that redemption, which Christ has made, "not by corruptible things, as silver and gold, but by his own most precious blood." We should also seek complete victory over every sin ; recollecting, that the glory of God as much requires the sanctification of every Christian, as it does the deliverance of his harmless people from those oppressors, who harass them and blaspheme his holy name. And when the Lord's promises are performed to us, we obtain an additional assurance that he indeed spake them, and an experimental knowledge of his mercy and truth, and of all his glorious attributes. (Notes, 2 Pet. 1:19. 1 John 5:9, 10, 20, 21.)

V. 7-15. All blessings come to us sinners, by means of the gospel : we should therefore value and be thankful for that distinguished advantage, above all temporal good. The meaneast faithful minister, who brings the joyful tidings of peace and salvation, should be welcomed and respected ; his footsteps should be marked and followed, and his doctrine attended to. Ministers should proclaim in the most open manner their joyful message ; and endeavour so to walk, as to show the holy tendency of their doctrine. As those who "watch for men's souls," they should cry aloud, and be very earnest in circulating the gospel of salvation ; and their contented, thankful frame of mind, ever disposed to praise and rejoice in God, should make it plain, that they are happy, and earnestly desire to render their neighbours happy with them. They should also pray continually for a more abundant supply of the Spirit of wisdom and love, that they may all "see eye to eye ;" and that unnatural divisions, and acrimonious disputes, may no longer disgrace the gospel of peace. It behooves all of us to pray continually, that many such messengers of salvation may be sent forth, and welcomed by the nations of the earth ; that Zion's God, who reigns on "the throne of grace," may be made known and served by them ; that "the waste places of Jerusalem may rejoice," and the church be redeemed from thralldom ; that so "the LORD may make bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations ; and that all the ends of the earth may see the salvation of our God." In the mean time, those who are favoured with the gospel are called on to depart from sin, to separate from the world, to renounce every kind of idolatry and superstition, and to "touch no unclean thing ;" and those who minister in sacred things should be peculiarly watchful against "all appearance of evil." These things must not be thought impracticable ; for no power, on earth or in hell, can obstruct our escape from the dominion of sin and Satan, to which we heartily long and endeavour to return to God, and to become his redeemed servants. He will be our Guide and Guard, and our way will be safe, and made plain before us.—Yet we must expect to meet with some of the difficulties, through which our Forerunner passed to his glory. He dealt prudently, and prospered, and heaven and earth are, and will be, filled with his glory : but who was ever so despised, so abased, insulted, and cruelly entreated as he ? (Note, Heb. 12:2, 3.) Yet having once shed his blood for sinners, its efficacy still continues : may it be sprinkled on our consciences, that we may enjoy inward peace ; and may his grace flow into our hearts to make us meet for his glory ! (Notes, Ex. 36:25-27. Tit. 2:4-7.) May all kings and nations cease from their blasphemous or haughty opposition to Christ, and be made partakers of the blood of sprinkling, and the baptism of the Holy Ghost ! and becoming acquainted with those glorious mysteries, which are now hid from them ; (Note, 1 Cor. 2:6-9.) may they delight in honouring and obeying him, and in celebrating the riches of his glorious salvation !

NOTES.—CHAP. LIII. V. 1. This chapter declares the circumstances of our Saviour's sufferings so exactly, that it seems rather a history of his passion, than a prophecy. And it is so undeniable a proof of the truth of Christianity, that the bare reading of it, and comparing it with the gospel-history, hath converted some infidels. Lowth.—The prophet goes on, from mentioning the great success of the gospel among the Gentiles at the close of the preceding chapter, to predict the unbelief of the Jews. (Note, 52:13-15.) Apostles and evangelists, in the primitive times, may be considered as complaining of this ill success among their countrymen, and wondering at it : or the prophet, as a Jew and speaking in his own name and that of the other prophets, anticipated, with astonishment and sorrow, this conduct of his nation. When John the Baptist, Jesus Christ himself, his apostles, and others, proclaimed the interesting report, that the long expected Messiah was come ; though he most exactly answered to the types and prophecies of the Old Testament, and authenticated his mission by most stupendous miracles ; yet very few in comparison truly and practically "believed the report," and they were generally of the lowest and most despised persons in the nation. For this "Arm of the LORD," which was employed to redeem his people, was not revealed to them, even when he lived among them : (Note, 51:9-11.) because they were blinded by prejudice ; and, for their sins, judicially left destitute of that powerful operation of God's Spirit upon their minds, by which believers were enabled to see the Saviour's glory, "as of the only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." (Notes, John 1:5, 14. 3:19-21, 5:39-47, 12:37-41, 16:8-15. Rom. 10:1-17, v. 16, 2 Cor. 4:4-6.)

2 For ^{he} shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: ^{he} hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, ^{there is} no beauty that we should desire him.

3 He is despised and rejected of men; ^a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and ^{we} hid as it were ^{our} faces from him; he was despised, and ^{have} esteemed him not.

4 Surely ^{he} hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: ^{yet} we had esteemed him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.

5 But ^{he was} wounded for our transgressions,

V. 2, 3. The wickedness and carnal prejudices of the Jews induced them to reject Christ; but various circumstances proved occasions of it. They expected the Messiah to spring from the avowed and acknowledged heir of King David, and to be openly known as born and educated at Bethlehem; and to come forth in a splendid manner, as a King and a Conqueror. (Notes, Matt. 11:2-6. Mark 6:1-4. John 7:40-53.) But he was the Son of a poor unnoticed virgin, and the reputed Son of a carpenter, who were not generally known to be descended from David: he was brought up at Nazareth, and his birth at Bethlehem had either been unnoticed, or was forgotten; he grew up and lived a long time in obscurity, probably working as a carpenter; he then appeared as a poor man, "who had not where to lay his head," and attended by a few poor fishermen; and he was an itinerant teacher, unauthorized by the priests and scribes. Thus instead "of a Plant of renown," (Note, 11:1. Ez. 34:23-31, v. 29.) he grew up before God, in such a manner that he appeared as a tender shoot, whose root was in a dry ground, where it was never likely to come to any thing. So that, notwithstanding the wisdom and grace of his words, the power of his miracles, and the holy beauty of his character, the Jews could perceive no form or comeliness in him, for which they should desire and welcome him as their Messiah. (Note, Hag. 2:6-9.) He was therefore generally despised and rejected by them; this contempt and reproach further confirmed the prejudices of the people against him; and every thing concurred in rendering him "a man of sorrows" and intimately "acquainted with grief." The people hid their faces from him, as ashamed to own him; until at length his disciples denied or forsook him, and the Jews, as with one consent, preferred a murderer to him. Or he hid his face, as one covered with confusion, or as concealing his glory from them under this external abasement: so that, in every way, he was deemed undeserving of notice or estimation. (Marg. Ref.)—From this text, Justin Martyr, Clemens Alexandrinus, Tertullian, and others of the ancient fathers, concluded our Saviour's person to have been deformed, an opinion in my judgment not at all probable: in the fourth and following centuries, a quite contrary notion was advanced, . . . that Christ was a person of extraordinary comeliness. (Ps. 45:3.) . . . From these two contrary opinions we may conclude, that the making or setting up the image, or the picture of Christ, was no part of religious worship in the early ages of Christianity? Louth.

V. 4-6. The prophet, in the name of all believers, in every age and nation, here breaks forth in admiration of the love of Christ, and the mystery of his vicarious sufferings. As every kind of disease and misery springs from sin; so when Christ endured hardship in alleviating these miseries, by healing men's diseases, it might properly be considered as a fulfilment of this prophecy, and a part of his general design. (Note, Matt. 8:16,17.) He endured our griefs and sorrows, becoming a sufferer to redeem us from eternal sufferings: and this, which should for ever endear him to mankind, caused the Jews to mistake his character, and to suppose that he was smitten of God, because he was a most atrocious sinner; as Job's friends construed his calamities into a proof of his undetected guilt; and numbers, who have at length become his disciples, were once of the same opinion. He was indeed "wounded," but it was not for his own, but for our transgressions: he was crushed with most intense agonies of body and soul, but it was "for our iniquities." To make our peace with God, he who was Holy and Beloved consented to bear our punishment, as if it had been a fatherly chastisement; (Note, John 18:10-14, v. 11.) and his stripes avail for the pardon, and healing, or sanctification of our souls. (Note, 1 Pet. 2:18-25, vv. 24,25.) All the elect people of God are brought to confess, and the whole company of the redeemed in heaven will confess, that they had wandered from God, as sheep from the fold, and must have been devoured by Satan, the roaring lion, if the good Shepherd had not come to seek them; every one of them has turned into that devious path which was congenial to his depraved inclination; but he was "bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace ^{was} upon him; and with his stripes we are healed."

6 "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all."

7 He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth.

all had added the guilt of rebellion, to the folly of forsaking their only protector. (Notes, Ps. 23:1-3. 119:176. Ez. 34:11-16. Zech. 13:7. Matt. 18:12,13. Luke 15:1-7.) So that the justice of God must be satisfied, before the criminals could be again received into his favour and under his care; and therefore JEHOVAH laid, or "caused to meet," upon Christ the Surety, not the punishment only, but the iniquity, of them all, imputing it to him, and requiring of him satisfaction for it. (Note, 2 Cor. 5:18-21, v. 21.)—The word (rendered carried) signifies properly to have iniquity laid upon one as a burden, which is the same with undergoing the punishment of it. So it is used Lam. 5:7. "Our fathers have sinned and are not, and we have borne their iniquities," that is, we have been punished in their stead. See 11. Louth. The modern Jews, to evade the arguments for Christianity deduced from this chapter, explain it, as speaking of Israel, and his oppressions and sufferings: but it is evident on the most cursory reading, that three distinct persons, or companies, are adduced. One the innocent holy sufferer; another the guilty, whose punishment he endured, whose burden of guilt was laid upon him; and the other, the oppressors and despisers of the holy sufferer, by whom he was persecuted, sacrificed, and finally rejected.

V. 7. More literally "It was exacted, and he answered." Bp. Louth. Our debt was exacted of our Surety, and he became answerable for it. And therefore he opened not his mouth to plead for himself, but stood speechless before man's tribunal, that we might have a prevailing plea before that of God. (Notes, Matt. 26:63-68. 27:11-18. John 19:8-12.) He was led, patient, gentle, and innocent, like a lamb to be slaughtered for the food, or sacrificed for the offences, of others; and like a sheep when deprived of its flocks, of others may be clothed with it. (Note, Acts 8:32-35.)

V. 8. The chief priests and scribes did not cast our Lord into prison, and then after a time give him a fair trial, according to law and custom: but without delay, they delivered him to Pilate, and urged his immediate execution. Thus "he was taken from prison," (being in confinement only a few hours,) "and from judgment; and who shall declare his generation?" The ancient fathers generally interpreted this of his miraculous conception, or his eternal generation. Who shall declare his descent from David, and his birth at Bethlehem the city of David? Who shall show, that he was not only the Son of David, but the only begotten Son of God?—But the original word for generation, is seldom, if ever, used in this sense: so that modern interpreters generally dissent from the ancients; and some render it, "His manner of life who shall declare?" None was called, or admitted, to bear witness to his character, as it was customary in criminal causes. But, as the word, rendered "generation," means the time during which an individual, or a number of contemporaries, live; the passage may mean, "Who shall declare how long his age shall last?" "Though he died for sin, yet after his resurrection he shall live for ever." "I am he that liveth, and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore, Amen: and have the keys of hell, and of death." (Notes, 9:10. Rev. 1:12-20, v. 18.) Other kings and priests finished their course by death; but he is a King and a High-Priest for ever. Yet, who stood forward, previous to his crucifixion, to declare this? For it pleased God that he should "be cut off out of the land of the living," in a violent and illegal manner; because, "for the transgression of his people," "the stroke," or punishment, "was on him."

Louth.* If so, it has, 'in this place' a signification, which it bears in no other text of the Hebrew Bible.

V. 9, 10. "A grave was appointed for him with the wicked; but he was with a rich man at his death, because he, &c." As our Lord was crucified between two thieves, it was he was 'cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was 'he stricken.

doubtless intended, that he should be buried with them. Thus "his grave was appointed with the wicked;" but Joseph of Arimathea came and asked for his body, and Pilate readily granted Joseph's request. Thus "he was with a rich man at his death," that is, till his resurrection; and his burial took place, contrary to the intention of his enemies, "because he had done no violence, &c." for otherwise Joseph would scarcely have requested Pilate, and probably Pilate would not have consented, to deliver up the body of a crucified malefactor.—The designed obscurity of the prophecy renders its exact accomplishment the more remarkable.—Some connect the latter clause with what follows, and render it; "though he had done, &c. yet it pleased the LORD;" he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth; so that Pilate, when he delivered him to be crucified, declared that he found no fault in him: "yet it pleased the LORD to bruise him." The Father who was well pleased in him, took pleasure in bruising him with anguish of spirit; because this was for the display of his own glory, and the honour of his law. So that, he not only permitted his enemies cruelly to insult and torment him; but he put him to grief by his own hand, and made "his soul exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death." Thus "his soul," or life, was "made an offering for sin;" not only was his blood shed, as that of the sacrifices used to be; but he endured the feeling of the wrath of God due to our sins, which the fire from heaven, consuming on the altar the inwards or bodies of the sacrifices, typified. In consequence of this, it was foretold, that he would see a numerous spiritual offspring, the fruit of all his toil and pain: (Notes, 8:18. 59:20, 21. Ps. 22:30, 31. Heb. 2:10-15. 1 Pet. 2:3, 10.) for he would rise again from the dead, and "then prolong his days;" and "the pleasure of the LORD," in converting and saving sinners, would prosper in his powerful and gracious hands.—This is a prediction of his resurrection and subsequent glory, equally clear with that of his sufferings. (Note, John 12:23-26, v. 24.)—The interpretation of the clause, "It pleased the LORD to bruise him," as given by many expositors, has been objected to; because the Septuagint does not use the same word in translating this passage, with which the Evangelist records the voice from heaven, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." But when it is duly considered, that the Hebrew word is frequently used for the highest kind and degree of satisfaction; the objection must vanish. (Gen. 34:19. Num. 14:8. Mic. 7:18. Heb. Notes, 42:21. 62:1-5.)—עַבְדֵּךְ notes the highest content that may be, to wit, delight; . . . it is the same with עֲבָדְתָּ. Leigh. The noun, directly formed from it, is used in the concluding words, "The pleasure of the LORD, &c." (Eph. 1:5, 9. 2 Thes. 1:11. Luke 12:32. Gr.)

In his death. (9) "Was his tomb." Bp. Louth.—The original word may be formed from another root, and mean an elevated place, as sepulchres generally were in those ages and places. The variation does not at all alter the meaning.

V. 11, 12. JEHOVAH here declares that the Messiah should see such abundant effect of his agonies and death, "the travail of his soul," that he would be fully satisfied and rejoice in it. His gospel would make known his person, love, righteousness, atonement, and salvation; and thus "by the knowledge of him, he would justify many." (Notes, John 17:1-3. Phil. 3:8-11.) "having borne their sins in his own body on the tree." "Because he had poured out his soul unto death," and, though perfectly righteous, had submitted to be "numbered with transgressors," or malefactors, and to "bear the sins of many," that he might become their Intercessor; therefore the Father would surely grant unto him an immense multitude of sinners to be saved and ruled by him, who before were the slaves of Satan, and must have continued to belong to that potent enemy of God and man; and he should have "all power in heaven and earth," to enable him to rescue all who had been given to him, and to complete their salvation. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 49:7, 8, 24-26. John 6:36-40. Eph. 1:15-23. Col. 2:13-15. Rev. 7:9-12.)—This prophecy, delivered at least seven hundred years before the birth of Christ, and coinciding so exactly with the history of his sufferings and death: the design and object of them, as recorded and assigned in the New Testament; and the effect of them, as it has been evidently produced for almost eighteen hundred years, constitutes a most unanswer-

11 He shall 'see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: 'by his knowledge shall 'my righteous servant 'justify many; for he shall 'bear their iniquities.

12 Therefore 'will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath 'poured out his soul unto death: and he was numbered with the transgressors; and 'he bare the sin of many, and 'made intercession for the transgressors.

able demonstration, not only of the truth of the Scriptures, but also of the great doctrines of the gospel. Nor is this in the least invalidated by the infidelity of the Jews, who, deeming this to be the word of God by Isaiah, can see nothing of Jesus in it; but adopt the grossest absurdities imaginable, in order to make out some other interpretations: for "the veil is upon their hearts; but when they shall be turned to the Lord, it shall be taken away." (Note, 2 Cor. 3:12-16.) Indeed their unbelief also is most expressly predicted, at the opening of the chapter; so that it may "turn to us for a testimony."—It has lately been publicly declared by a Jew who professed and preached Christianity, that the Rabbies forbid the people to read this chapter, with dreadful denunciations; and the assertion has not been publicly and explicitly contradicted.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. Whilst every vague, unimportant, and improbable report is greedily drunk in by the absurd credulity of mankind; the most interesting and completely authenticated report of salvation for sinners, through the incarnate Son of God, is almost universally rejected or disregarded! We have to this day lamentable cause to complain, and to wonder, that so few believe it; and we may profitably inquire, who they are that do so. Not many of the noble, the wealthy, the learned of the world; not all, who are called by the name of Christ, and profess his religion; not the covetous, the sensual, the dissipated, the proud and ambitious, the cruel and oppressive; but a small company, who are "poor in spirit," mourning for sin, renouncing the world, devoted to God, following after holiness, meek, peaceable, forgiving, inoffensive, and benevolent; yet despised, and reviled as their Saviour was. To them, "Christ, the power of God and the Wisdom of God," has been made known; his Spirit has enlightened their minds, and humbled and changed their hearts; and thus they have seen his glory, and supremely value his salvation. To others the whole appears contemptible; "the preaching of his cross is foolishness;" and a life of obedience to his precepts is madness or preciseness, a want of taste and spirit, the result of bigotry and fanaticism, and a certain indication of a weak understanding and a narrow mind. They "see no form or comeliness" in the character of Christ; as delineated in Scripture, and exemplified by his true disciples; nor is there "any excellency in him, that they should desire him" and seek after him. He is still despised in his people, and rejected of men as to his doctrine and authority; and in very many companies of professed Christians, even in the most respectable circles, an open declaration of our faith in Christ, and love to his name and cause, would excite disgust and scorn. We may indeed well endure our lighter sufferings, if he have taught us to esteem all things but loss for him, and "to love him who hath so loved us." He willingly bare our griefs when we were enemies, and shall we repine at bearing our cross for the sake of such a generous Friend? Should we be treated as the vilest of mankind, and counted the peculiar objects of the divine abhorrence; let us remember him, who "endured the contradiction of sinners against himself, lest we be weary and faint in our minds." (Note, Heb. 12:2, 3.) Let us often retire, in contemplation, to Gethsemane and Golgotha: and, whilst we survey the sufferings of the Son of God, let us review our long catalogue of former and later transgressions, and consider him as scourged, wounded, bruised, insulted, and crucified; as agonizing, bleeding, and dying, under the load of our guilt. Thus we shall learn to hate and to mortify sin: we shall understand our obligations to our gracious Friend, and be constrained by love to live to his glory. (Notes, 2 Cor. 5:13-15. Gal. 6:11-14, v. 14.) In this we are all concerned; for we have all gone astray from God, though in different ways; and we must all have perished, had not the good Shepherd come to seek and save us; and willingly borne the load of our iniquity, which would have been far too heavy for us to bear, and under which we must have sunk for ever, as all unbelievers most certainly will. Our debt was "exacted of him," and he paid "the uttermost farthing;" and, in doing this, "he was led as a lamb to the slaughter;" and shall we, who deserve the final wrath of God, be impatient, "like a wild bull in a net, under our light afflictions?" Let us then pause, that we may on his atonement alone, by copying his example of meekness and submission; however we may be chastised of God, or oppressed and despised by men.

V. 8—12. We may comfortably leave all the circumstances of our death to the merciful Saviour: he has sanctified every way of dying and every place of sepulture, whether we make our grave with the wicked, or be with the rich and honourable in our death. However we may suffer with evil-doers; yet if we “do no violence and speak no guile,” nothing can hurt us. (Notes, 1 Pet. 3:13—18. 4:12—16.) If it should please the Lord to prove our faith and patience, by grievous and complicated distresses, or to cut us off by sudden or violent death: the Redeemer’s atoning sufferings will secure a happy event to us, and to all those who bear his image and partake of his Spirit. Being now risen from the dead, and ever living to carry on his work and plead our cause; “the pleasure of the Father prospereth in his hand.” Here is laid the firm foundation on which the trembling sinner may rest his soul; for he beholds the true penitent, who humbly ventures nigh, to seek the benefit of his atoning blood by faith in his name, with that affection and complacency with which the tender mother eyes her new-born infant, the fruit and recompense of all her anguish; he then “sees of the travail of his soul and is satisfied.” These are the trophies of his victory, the purchase of his blood, the monuments of his grace: for this he “poured out his soul unto death,” and “was numbered with transgressors” for this he continually intercedes and prevails; thus he destroys the works of the devil, and rescues the prey from the hands of that mighty one. Let us bless the Lord for the knowledge of Christ, by which numbers in every age are justified; let us pray and endeavour, that it may be extended to all our fellow-sinners: and let us think no labour, hardship, or expense too great, by which we may promote that cause, for which the Redeemer shed his blood. Thus we shall prove ourselves partakers of his salvation, and make an acceptable return of gratitude for his unspcakable love.

NOTES.—CHAP. LIV. V. 1. “In the foregoing chapter the prophet described the sufferings of Christ, and here he prophesies the increase and glory of the church, which should follow; . . . which indeed were to commence from the time of Christ’s passion, but would not be completed till . . . after the Jews were again restored to God’s favour.” Louth. The connexion and language of the chapter necessarily lead our thoughts to the times of the gospel, with very little reference to previous deliverances. The church of Israel is here represented as a married woman, who, like Sarah, had long continued barren. Comparatively few real believers, the children of God and of the church, had been raised up in the nation. And about the time when Messiah should come, Pharisaical formality, Sadducean infidelity, and open impiety, would become almost universal. This was a subject of grief to the small remnant of believers: but the coming of Christ, and his sufferings, death, resurrection, and ascension, would introduce better times. Though the nation in general rejected him, and were cast off; yet numerous children were born unto the church: the Gentile converts were adopted into her family; and those nations which had been destitute of ordinances, and “strangers to the covenants of promise,” produced a far larger increase of true believers, than the nation of Israel, which had been married to the Lord, by their national covenant and distinguished advantages had ever done. As these were all the true children of the church, she was called on to break forth into loud songs of joyful praise; notwithstanding the unbelief and rejection of that nation, of which her family had hitherto chiefly consisted. V. 2, 3. The church is still addressed as a matron, who with her small family resided in a tent; but this tent would soon be found incapable of containing all her children. She must therefore prepare to occupy more room, and make much larger curtains and longer cords: and, as perpetuity, as well as enlargement, was to distinguish the Christian dispensation, she must also “strengthen the stakes” on which the curtains were suspended. (Note, 49:18—21.) And she need not fear making too large preparations: for immense accessions might be expected; and her family would be so increased, that it would spread abroad on every side, and at length occupy the countries and cities, which had been the most given up to idolatry, and strangers to the name and worship of JEHOVAH. (Notes, Zech. 8:20—23. Mal. 1:9—11, v. 11.)

V. 4, 5. The church, (or nation of Israel,) in her youth, had been basely enslaved in Egypt; and afterwards she had been greatly defiled by idolatries and debased by grievous oppressions. She also lay under the reproach of barrenness, and had been put away, as if rejected for unfaithfulness: but, by the introduction of the gospel-dispensation, and by that purity and prosperity which were intended and foretold, these reproaches would all be wiped off and forgotten; and she need no more fear being put to shame and confounded, by the reproach of being left forlorn and destitute as a widow. (Notes, 6—10, v. 6. Lam. 1:1, 2.) For “the Lord of Hosts,” the Creator of the world, and of the church, would avow his relation to her as her Husband; and afford her all the protection, and show her all the kindness, which that endearing relation implies. He had all along been spoken of as “the Redeemer and the Holy One of Israel;” but he would at length be acknowledged and worshipped, as “the God of the whole earth.”—Christ is the Redeemer and the Bridegroom of the church; and he is her Creator, and “the God of the whole earth.” (Marg. Ref. Notes, Zech. 9:9, 10. 14:6—9, v. 9. Rom. 3:29—31.)

V. 6—10. The church of Israel had been in the condition of a woman forsaken by her husband and “grieved in spirit,” having been espoused in her youth, and afterwards rejected with dislike for her misconduct: but the Lord was about to recall her into a state of more comfortable and intimate communion with him. (Notes, Hos. 3:1.)—The abominable idolatries and atrocious iniquities of Israel and Judah, the low estate of religion among them, and the repeated triumphs of their enemies, as if God had quite cast them off, and the grief that these things occasioned to believers, are here intended: probably with reference to the calamities and oppression of the Christian church, during the prevalence of antichristian corruptions and oppressions, and the state of the nation of Israel unto this day. But this frown and hiding of God’s countenance, and the consequent affliction of the church would be momentary, compared with the duration of her peace and prosperity: his little wrath, or wrath of very short continuance, would soon be pacified; and he would gather her and her increasing multitude of children, with everlasting kindness and abundant mercies. (Note, Ps. 30:3.) His engagements to this effect were as irrevocable as the covenant made with Noah, and confirmed with an oath, that he would never more drown the world; (Note, Gen. 9:9—17.) for he had also sworn by himself never to rebuke and be wroth with his church, as in times past, or so as to cast her off: for his covenant of peace, the result of his tender mercies, would be more durable than the mountains, and abide in full force, and in its glorious and happy effects, when they shall remove and be seen no more.—This may also relate to the calling of Abraham, and the covenant made with him and his posterity. (Notes, 11:16—12: 56:8 66

sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee.

10 For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee.

11 ¶ O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted! behold, I will lay thy stones with sapphires, and lay thy foundations with sapphires.

12 And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones.

13 And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children.

V. 11—14. The church is here again considered as a woman in great distress; as a person at sea in a storm, and in danger of being shipwrecked; or as dwelling in a tent, which was ready to be overturned by a furious tempest; and in short, as bereft of every comfort. All the persecutions, afflictions, and discouragements of believers, seem to be intended.—But she is assured, that all these will end in great felicity and honour. Instead of her mean, uncomfortable tent, the Lord promises to build her a most glorious city or palace, whose foundations, windows, walls, and towers, should be formed of precious stones, most beautiful and durable. These are emblems of the light, purity, and prosperity, which the church on earth shall at length enjoy, resembling those of heaven. (Notes, Rev. 21:9—27.) 'These seem to be general images to express beauty, magnificence, purity, strength, and solidity, agreeably to the ideas of the eastern nations; and to have never been intended to be strictly scrutinized, or minutely and particularly explained, as if each of them had some precise moral or spiritual meaning.' Bp. Louth.—Numbers of the children of the church had in past ages been uninstructed, or ill-instructed; but it is promised, that all her "children shall be taught of the LORD," by his Spirit, and according to his word. (Notes, Jer. 31:31—34. John 6:41—46, v. 45. 60—65, v. 65. 1 John 2:20—25, v. 20. 26—29, v. 27.) This may be understood of the true Israel, as distinguished from Israel according to the flesh: yet it seems to relate especially to those glorious times, which are to succeed the tribulations of the church. Then her children will have great peace, both outward and inward: she shall be established in righteousness, and delivered from oppression, and even from the fear of it. (Notes, 60:15—22. 66:10—14. Jer. 23:5, 6. Ez. 34:23—31. 37:15—22. 39:23—29. Rev. 2:10—6.)

V. 15—17. This may be considered as a general promise to the church, through successive ages. Many assaults would combine against her; but, the Lord being on her side, they would, without exception, "fall for her sake." The Redeemer of the church is the Creator even of those who forge weapons of war, yea of the great destroyers of mankind, and persecutors of his people; both are in his hands, and employed or restrained at his pleasure: and he engages to take care that no weapons formed against her should prosper, and that all her accusers and enemies should be condemned. This full security and final victory were to be considered as the heritage of each of the faithful "servants of the LORD," as well as of the whole collective body: (Note, Ps. 125:1.) while the righteousness in which they are justified, and the grace by which they are sanctified, are the gift of God, and the effect of his special love. (Notes, 10:5—11. 45:23—25. 50:7—9. Ps. 24:3—6, v. 5. Zech. 3:1—4. Rom. 5:15—19, v. 17. 8:28—39. Rev. 12:7—12.)

Shall fall for thy sake. (15) 'Or, "Shall fall to thee;" ... "shall come over to thy side." ... Whosoever comes against thee; instead of continuing thy enemy, shall become thy convert, as St. Paul was at the beginning of Christianity.' Louth. Bp. Louth also gives the same translation.—This indeed has been, and will be the case, as to numerous individuals; but it cannot possibly answer to the general language of the passage. (Notes, Ez. 38: 39; Joel 3:9—17. Zech. 14: Rev. 19:11—21.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—5. All who love God and man will rejoice and be thankful when sinners are converted; for then the prayers of the church are answered, and the sufferings of Christ are made effectual to his glory in the salvation of souls. (Notes, and P. O. Luke 15:1—10.)—Frequently those places and congregations, whose means and appearances of religion most abound, are wretchedly destitute of the life and power of it; the Lord has often many more children in places comparatively desolate; and the gospel is commonly most successful where it has newly been sent.—When sinners repent and believe, they are numbered among the children of God and of the church; and should be received by us as brethren, even though they belong not to our party.—Though very great multitudes have accepted of the invitations of the gospel, there is yet room for immensely more in the kingdom of Christ: and we should expect large accessions to the church under the Christian dispensation; and be instant in prayer, that her seed may inherit the nations, and replenish all the dark and desolate places of the earth. Much has already been done, in fulfilling these predictions, for which we should praise the Lord: but we are still called on to enlarge the place of Zion's tabernacle, to "stretch forth her curtains," and with vast expectations, to "lengthen her cords and strengthen her stakes;" assured that she shall yet "break forth on the right hand and on the left," till the earth be filled with truth and righteousness.—Ministers, rulers, merchants, wealthy persons, and every description of men, will find very much to do in this important concern, if they improve their talents and watch for opportunities: and we need not fear but that God will accept our prayers and second our endeavours, when they are regulated by his precepts and promises. The believer also should endeavour to rise superior to those fears, which originate from reflecting on his evil nature, or from reviewing "the shame of his youth," or those former instances of unfaithfulness, of which he now humbly repents. The Lord will blot out his transgressions, and wipe away his reproach, and he will never forsake those who trust in his mercy: nay, he will receive them into the most honourable and happy relation to himself; "their Maker the LORD of Hosts, the God of the whole earth," will become their Husband and Redeemer. (Notes, John 3:27—36, v. 29. 2 Cor. 11:—6, v. 2. Eph. 5:22—27. Rev. 19:7, 8.) We never can sufficiently admire this condescension, or estimate this privilege: we cannot expect too much from his love, confide too entirely in his protection, glory too much in this honour, or take too much delight in communion with this our loving Friend. To form this union and to encourage our confidence, he dwells in human nature, and is called Immanuel: he shed his blood for our ransom, and endows us with all his unsearchable riches; he will cleanse us from all our sins: adorn us with suitable decorations, and shortly take us to himself, to rejoice for ever with him in this sacred union. Let us then walk in simplicity of heart with him, centering all our affections on him, and expecting all our happiness from him alone.

V. 6—17. Even real Christians often give cause of jealousy to their gracious Lord; and then he frowns, hides his face, and seems as if he would reject them according to their deservings. Then they fear being forsaken, and are "grieved in spirit;" but when duly humbled they seek his face, he recalls them into his presence, and renews the tokens of his love. And to all, who really love and trust in him, his absence and frown are momentary, but his mercies and kindness are infinite and everlasting. He has promised never to leave nor forsake his people; he has formed that promise into a covenant of peace, and has ratified and sealed it; and he has confirmed it with an oath for our more complete satisfaction. He will indeed correct and rebuke his people; but he will not cast them off, any more than he will again drown the world for the sins of men: and the experience of more than four thousand years evinces, that their crimes cannot provoke him to violate that irrevocable engagement. Let this encourage us to "give diligence to make our calling and election sure;" that when we are afflicted and tempted, we may know, and be comforted by, our interest in these promises; and be assured, that our "light and momentary afflictions are working for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."—But let us not forget that all the genuine children of the church are "taught of the LORD;" they desire, seek, and depend on that teaching; and they are taught by him to hate sin, to believe in Christ, and obey him; and thus they find rest and great peace to their souls. The more assured they are that "their labour will not be in vain in the LORD," the more "steadfast and immovable" they are in his work.—Those who are thus taught of God need fear no enemy: except so as to watch, and pray against temptation. Many may attempt to injure them, but God is their Protector; many may reproach them, but God is their Justifier. They are his servants and his children; and he is not only their Lord and their Father, but their Husband; and who can rise up against them with impunity? Let us then seek that "righteousness of God, which is unto all and upon all that believe;" (Note, Rom. 3:21-26,) let us beseech him to sanctify our souls, and employ us in his service; and thus we may disregard both the wasters who destroy the nations, and the weapons that are formed against the church; and enjoy the present privileges, and expect the future heritage, of the redeemed servants of the Lord.

NOTES.—CHAP. LV. V. 1-3. The sufferings and subsequent glorious exaltation and glory of the Redeemer, and the security and happiness of his church, having been fully declared; (Notes, 53:54:) here follows an invitation to the sons of men to come and share the invaluable blessings. The prophet seems to personate the first preachers of the gospel, when they went forth in the name of the Lord to "compel" men to come in to the marriage-supper, even from the highways and hedges: but Christ himself then spake, and still speaks, the same things by his word and ministers. (Notes, 12: Prov. 1:20-23. 8:1-4, 31-34. 9:1-6. Matt. 11:29-30. John 4:10-15. 7:37-39. Rev. 21:5-8. v. 6, 22:16, 17.)—"The blessings before mentioned were 'the heritage of the servants of the LORD:'" (54:17.) but here men in general are called on by proclamation, to approach and partake of them, as men come to the waters to draw for themselves. All who thirst for pardon, grace, and salvation, are invited to come to God through Christ for them; nay, all who thirst for happiness are exhorted to seek it from Him. The blessings which he bestows are abundant like the waters; but they are precious, pleasant and exhilarating, as wine and milk, or the most nutrimental and delicious food; (Note, 25:5-8,) and though freely bestowed, "without money or price," to accommodate those who desire them, but are conscious that they have not wherewith to purchase them; yet they are too valuable to be bought with money; at the same time they cannot be secured, except by parting with whatever comes in competition with them. (Notes, Prov. 23:23. Matt. 13:44-46. Phil. 3:8-11. Rev. 3:17-20.)—The Lord then expostulates with the sons of men, who waste their lives, misemploy their powers, and weary themselves for such things as are "not bread and cannot satisfy;" who bestow immense pains and sacrifice every valuable consideration, for the sake of such acquisitions, as can neither add to their present comfort, nor prolong their lives, nor save their souls. (Notes, 28:20. 44:19, 20.) This equally applies to the votaries of this vain and vexatious world; and to those who devise and are very earnest about false and worthless schemes of religion. If nothing better could be had, such men might have some show of reason for their conduct: but as the Lord invites them to come, and partake of substantial good and satisfying happiness, in his favour and service; they are most unreasonable, as well as criminal, in their worldly courses and neglect of the gospel. They are therefore exhorted diligently to hearken to the Lord, to attend to his doctrine, and embrace his salvation; and thus the everlasting covenant of grace

3 "Incline your ear and 'come unto me: 'hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even 'the sure mercies of David.

5 Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and 'nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee, because of the LORD thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; 'for he hath glorified thee.

Louth.* The Messiah was the grand blessing intended by "the sure mercies of David." He had appointed him to publish his will, attest his truths, and ratify his covenant; he was given to be a Leader and Forerunner of his people, to guide men into the ways of peace and holiness, and to lead them to victory and liberty; and to be their Commander, their Captain, Lawgiver, Judge, Ruler and Protector (Notes, Dan. 9:25-27. Heb. 2:10-13. Rev. 1:4-6.)—JEHOVAH then addressed the Messiah himself. The nation of Israel would generally refuse to have him for their Witness, Leader, and Commander: but at the call of his gospel "a holy nation" would be formed under his government, who had not before been known by him as the worshippers of God: yea, many nations, which had been strangers to him would hasten to him and become his subjects; as ardently desiring the favour of the Lord God of Israel; who had raised him from the dead, exalted him to his right hand in heaven, and sent forth his Holy Spirit with his apostles, to give success to the gospel; and thus had glorified him, whom man despised. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 42:5-7. 49:5, 6. 52:13-15. v. 13. 53:9-12. Luke 12:23-26. v. 23. 27-33. v. 28. 17:1-3. v. 1. Acts 3:12-16.)

V. 6, 7. Whilst the gospel was preached to the Jews, God was near to them, and might be found by them: but he was about to withdraw, and then they would be left to judicial blindness. (Notes, Luke 13:22-30. 19:41-44. John 12:34-36. 2 Cor. 6:12. Heb. 3:7-13.) The exhortation however is equally given to others.—"God is in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." Jesus is "Immanuel, God with us;" "God manifested in the flesh." Through him the Lord may be found on a throne of grace, and in his holy ordinances: he is near those who hear his gospel, and he often strives with their hearts by his Holy Spirit: but the means of grace may be withdrawn, or that influence which gives efficacy to them withheld; and life must soon terminate: and then God will no more be found by any wicked man, or be graciously near to him. Let then all who hear, seize the opportunity, and seek the knowledge and favour of God without delay, by faith and prayer. All who are not righteous, according to the tenor of the gospel, are wicked, and need this conversion and salvation; and the most criminal and unrighteous may yet obtain forgiveness: but then they must repent, and forsake all sins, especially those to which they have been most habituated, "every one to his own way." (53:5.) They must also forsake their evil imaginations, desires, counsels, and devices; and no longer expect happiness in wickedness, or salvation from themselves, or in their sins: they must "return to the LORD," by ceasing to rebel against him, and becoming his loyal subjects; and thus they may be assured, he will have mercy on them, and multiply pardons to them, even as they have multiplied sins against him: nay, continuing to pardon their daily trespasses, as long as they live on earth; they still persevering in the same course of humble repentance and believing prayer. (Notes, 1:16-20. 43:22-25. v. 25. Mic. 7:18-20. Matt. 6:12, 14, 15. P. O. Luke 17:1-10. Note Rom. 8:1, 2. 1 John 1:8-10. 2:1, 2.)

'unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.

8 ¶ For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord.

9 For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.

V. 8, 9. The thoughts and ways of the Lord, in his dealings with sinners, are wholly different from those of men, and often contrary to them: and they are as far above them, as the heavens are above the earth. (Notes, Ps. 25:10, 103:11-13.) His wisdom and love, in giving his only begotten Son to be the sacrifice for the sins of men when rebels and enemies, and thus glorifying his justice, holiness, and law even in showing mercy to the most atrocious criminals; his method of justifying the ungodly by faith in the righteousness of Christ, and of sanctifying the unholly by his new creating Spirit; his way of teaching men to live sober, righteous, and godly lives, by the preaching of that free salvation, which the wise men of the world suppose to tend to licentiousness; his plan of hiding these things from the wise and prudent, and revealing them to babes; his constant readiness to pardon and save all who come, to supply all their wants, to enrich them with all blessings, and fill them with "peace and joy in believing," notwithstanding former provocations; his rule of not "calling the righteous, but sinners to repentance;" and formerly, his calling of the Gentiles and rejection of the Jews: these things, and numberless others, show the thoughts and ways of God to be widely different from the ways of man, and infinitely more excellent. (Notes, 2 Sam. 7:19. Matt. 9:10-13, 11:25, 26, 21:28-32. Rom. 4:4, 5. 5:10. 1 Cor. 2:6-9. Eph. 3:9-12, v. 10. 1 Tim. 1:12-16. Tit. 2:11, 12. 1 Pet. 1:10-12. 1 John 3:1-3. 4:9-12.) Men are apt to think the unworthiness of the object a bar to their kindness; and to reject those who are beneath them, or have been provoking to them, or who have been often before relieved, or have brought their troubles on themselves, or are likely to be further burdensome. They despair of many descriptions of sinners, and excuse their neglect of them, by the pretence that they are wholly incorrigible. It is well that the Lord does not deal with them by such rules; but that his ways and thoughts are infinitely superior to all these limitations. (Notes, Rom. 5:20, 21. Eph. 1:3-8.)

V. 10, 11. The Lord sends the rain and snow to water the earth, and to make the seed sown in it to vegetate; and thus to produce food for man, and seed to sow again for a future crop. (Note, 2 Cor. 9:8-11.) and he does not withhold or recall his bounty, because many abuse it; nor can their perverseness prevent this appointment of the weather, and course of the seasons. Thus the unbelief and opposition of the Jews, or any others, should not prevent the success of the gospel: God would perform his promises and purposes: he would accompany the gospel with the Holy Spirit, and cause the seed to take root and grow, and produce its effects, in the conversion of sinners, and preparing for the benefit of future ages. In short, his "word should not return void, but accomplish" his great designs, in defiance of all opposition. (Notes, 46:10, 11. 2 Thes. 1:11, 12.)

That which I please, (11)-I desire, "That it when I delight." Not merely accomplishing the purpose of God, but "the good pleasure of his will" in the conversion of the nations: "for he delighteth in mercy." (Notes, 53:9, 10. Eph. 1:5-8, 9-12, vv. 9, 11. 3:9-12, vv. 10, 11.)

V. 12, 13. Here may be some distant allusion to the return of the Jews from Babylon; but far greater events are evidently intended. The poor prisoners of Satan, set at liberty from their noisome dungeon, through the Redeemer's grace, by means of the gospel preached to them, would go out with joy, and be led forth with peace in the way to heaven. (Note, 49:9-13.) Joyful praises would on that account resound on every side: as if the mountains, hills, and forests were animated, to unite with saints and angels in heaven, and saints on earth, in exulting thanksgivings. (Notes, 42:10-12. Ps. 98:10-13. 98:7-9.) When the grossest idolaters, and the most wicked and mischievous of sinners, became true Christians, holy persons, worshippers of God, and useful to mankind; then the stately and useful fir-tree came in the place of the worthless thorn; and the beautiful fragrant myrtle, in that of the entangling brier, or singing nettle. These blessed effects of the gospel are highly honourable to the name of God: and the continuance of Christianity on earth to the end of time, and the happiness of the believer in heaven for ever, form an everlasting monument or trophy of his power and love; the continuance also of this work of new creating grace, through successive generations, even to the end of the world; has been, is, and will be, an everlasting sign, a supernatural evidence, that the gospel is "the power of God unto salvation;" "never to be cut off," even when miracles finally ceased in the church. Luke 2:8-14, v. 14. 2 Thes. 1:5-10.)—The conversion of the Gentiles is evidently predicted by these emblems: and likewise the restoration of the dispersed Jews and Israelites.

12 For he shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands.

13 Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree: and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle-tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-5. All are welcome to the blessings of salvation, to whom those blessings are welcome. Sinners should therefore be loudly and earnestly invited to come to Christ, and exhorted to use diligently and perseveringly the means of grace: that those who thirst for these waters of life, but fear lest they should be excluded because of their aggravated and numerous crimes, may be encouraged; and that the proud, the sensual, and scornful may be left without excuse.—We cannot too highly recommend the rich provisions made for our perishing souls: it is our interest on any terms to make them our own. But where shall we, whose best services merit condemnation, find "money or price" with which to purchase such invaluable blessings? Sin and misery are all we can call our own: our bodies and souls always were the Lord's just due, and every service which we can possibly perform. We already owe an immense debt, and cannot pay one farthing; our inheritance is forfeited, and we have merited condemnation: our wants are innumerable, and we have nothing with which to supply them. (P. O. Luke 7:36-50.) But the Lord Jesus has purchased for us every blessing: he freely bestows on every believer whatever can conduce to his present comfort or everlasting felicity; and on all those who come to ask them, with the additional favour that he would take them as his servants, and make them what he would have them to be. But though none, except those who hunger and thirst for spiritual blessings, will thus "come, buy, and eat, without money and without price." (Note, Matt. 5:6., yet all should be invited; because God in this way generally first excites such desires in the hearts of men. All seek to be happy; (Note, Ps. 32:1, 2.) yet most men "spend money for that which is not bread, and labour for that which satisfieth not;" with such we may expostulate; and, while we show them the folly of their present conduct, we may exhort them diligently to hearken to the Saviour's voice; we may persuade them to read and meditate on his sacred word; and to seek the teaching of his Holy Spirit; to observe his directions, to accede to his invitations, and to make trial of his easy yoke. (Note, Matt. 11:28-30.) Then, and not before, they will "find rest to their souls;" thus, and in no other way, they "will eat that which is good, and their souls will delight themselves in fatness." Inclining our ears to his instructions, and coming to him for salvation, we obtain life and the blessings of "the everlasting covenant" through the blood of its great and gracious Surety: he then becomes our Teacher, Leader, and Ruler; by him we have access to the Father and fellowship with him; and through him our services are accepted, and our happiness secured. He calls those who hitherto have been strangers, nay, enemies: through grace they obey his call, and run to him to share the privileges of his redeemed people; and in their conversion and holy conversation he is glorified, and the Father is glorified in him: and the calling of the Gentiles into the church, has brought us in this distant island and period of time, to experience those invaluable blessings. May they be communicated to all the nations of the earth, and may Britons be prospered abundantly, in all their efforts for this purpose, with all, in every land, who concur in the glorious design.

V. 6-13. While the word of God proposes to us eternal salvation "The Lord is near us, and may be found:" let all therefore who read or hear of this salvation, seek him and call upon him without delay; and let none trifle with his plenteous mercy, or pervert it into an encouragement to sin; but let the wicked call on him to help them, that in his strength they may forsake their ungodly ways, and exclude their polluting thoughts and desires; and let them "return to the LORD" by penitent faith and prayer, that they may obtain an interest in his abundant mercy and multiplied pardons. And let none of us limit him by our rules, as if there were any sinners too hardened to be converted, or too criminal to be forgiven; or as if any of them might properly be left without refuge and hope. Let the discouraged penitent remember, that "where sin hath abounded, grace much more abounds;" and let ministers and Christians observe, that "the things which are impossible with man, are possible with God." We should therefore use every means to reclaim the most desperate offenders, and to do good to those who are most distant from us, or have been most injurious to us: for the LORD's thoughts and ways are not as ours, but immensely above them, and more excellent than they.—Assuredly the word of God, when faithfully preached, will answer the ends which he has purposed, and will always in some instances be blessed to bring sinners to repentance; and who can describe the happy change which then takes place in their state and character? Delivered from the wrath to come, and from the bondage of sin and Satan; justified by faith, and reconciled unto God, the converted sinner begins to experience sweet peace in his conscience; hope animates and gratitude enlarges his heart, and love constrains him to devote himself to the service of his merciful Redeemer. Instead of a profane, contentious, selfish, or sensual wretch, the grief or temptation of all around him; behold him now patient, meek, humble, blameless, upright, benevolent, and peaceable; a kind relation, a faithful friend, a compassionate neighbour, a spiritual worshipper, a follower of Christ, an example to others, a useful member of society, and an instrument of God, to diffuse the knowledge of his salvation around him, and to transmit it to the next generation, and thus to glorify his name! In such converts, indeed, the LORD will be everlastingly glorified, and many will be unspeakably benefited by them. Well then may there be joy in heaven and in earth, when one sinner thus repents. (Notes and P. O. Luke 15.) How should the hopes of being instrumental in so good a work, animate our endeavours to spread the gospel of salvation; and our prayers, that such trophies of the Redeemer's victories may every where be multiplied! And, how should we endeavour to be living demonstrations that this is the genuine tendency of the gospel; and to "let our light so shine before men, that they may see our good works, and glorify our heavenly Father!"

NOTES.—CHAP. LVI. V. 1, 2. The prophet doubtless was guided to write his predictions, in that way which might render them useful to the Jews in his own time, as well as in after ages, and to the church to the end of the world. We may therefore consider this as an exhortation to the Jews under any of their calamities, or when captive at Babylon, to wait and prepare for deliverance, by attending to the precepts and ordinances of God. As, however, it here stands, it seems to be equivalent to the call of John the Baptist: "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." (Note, Matt. 3:2.) The attention of the Jews, about the time of Christ, was taken up, almost exclusively, with trivial observances, to the neglect of "the weightier matters of the law;" and their formality, hypocrisy, iniquity, and presumptuous confidence in external privileges, led them to reject his salvation, of which they neither perceived the necessity, nor understood the nature. The sermon of Christ on the mount, and the general tenor of his preaching, were very similar to this address; and, by showing the spiritual nature of true religion, both tended to discover to them their need of mercy and grace, and to lead them to follow after holiness.—The LORD here assures the Jews, that his salvation approached, his promises were about to be fulfilled, and his righteousness revealed, by their expected Messiah. But, as these were spiritual blessings; they would not be welcome to the carnal heart; and therefore it behooved them to prepare for the reception of them, by repentance, attention to justice and equity, and attendance on his ordinances. For, though such as trust in their supposed good works are far from the kingdom of heaven; yet all who believe the Scriptures, and wait for salvation according to the promises of God, "repent, and do works meet for repentance;" they do justice, and are conscientious in their various duties. And happy is he "who does this," laying hold of it as a man in earnest, keeping holy the Sabbath-day, and withholding his hand from doing any evil for such are "not far from the kingdom of God;" and the LORD will show them his salvation, seeing he has taught them thus to wait for it. V. 3-7. Strangers and eunuchs lay under several disadvantages, according to the Mosaic dispensation: (Notes, Deut. 23:1-8.) and it was deemed a peculiar misfortune, and even disgrace, among the Jews, to be childless. (Note, 4:1.) But the gospel abolishes all these distinctions: and such declarations as this implied, that the shadows of the old dispensation were about to vanish, and that a brighter day was dawning. The Gentile could not in any case be admitted to the full privilege of an Israelite, without circumcision, and an exact observance of the ritual law; and in some cases, he would after all lie under several disqualifications. But, without at all mentioning these particulars, the LORD assured strangers, who came to "join themselves to him, to love his name and be his servants," to "hallow his sabbath, and take hold of his covenant" of grace and mercy: (Note, 55:1-3.) that he would introduce them as spiritual worshippers on his holy mountain, make them joyful in his courts, and accept their sacrifices equally with those of the Jews: for he purposed that his temple should "be called a house of prayer for all people," or "all the peoples." (Note, Matt. 21:12, 13. Mark 11:15-21.) This was an encouragement to the Gentiles to come and worship God at his temple; and it implied that the spiritual sacrifices of praise and prayer, springing from faith and love, were the most acceptable to him: (Notes, Ps. 50:7-15, 22, 23.) but it especially and most expressly predicted the conversion of the Gentiles to Christ, and their admission into the Christian church, which were typified by Mount Zion and the temple.—"What Calvin saith upon the place, . . ." The prophet uses such expressions with relation to the gospel-times as are taken from the usages of his own time; . . . is a good rule of explaining the idioms of the prophetic writings.¹ Louth.—The LORD also assured the eunuchs, who laid hold of his covenant and were obedient to his word, that he would admit them into his family, and give them an everlasting name and place in heaven, far preferable to the feeble satisfaction, which men enjoy from the hope of being remembered after death, in the children which they leave behind them. (Note, 1 Sam. 1:8.)—The repeated mention of keeping the sabbath, in this place, which evidently gives a decided preference to spiritual worship and holiness of life above all external observances, and refers to the time when the ceremonial law would be abrogated, strongly implies the obligation of the Christian sabbath. (Notes, 58:12, 13. Matt. 12:7, 8.)—Cut off, &c. (5) Note, 55:12, 13.

V. 8. JEHOVAH, who "gathered the outcasts of Israel," (Marg. Ref. z.) here promises to gather more unto him, than had already been gathered. (Notes, 11:11-16. Gen. 49:10.) This predicts the conversion of the Gentiles to Christianity in far greater numbers, than they ever had been proselyted to Judaism: but it may also look forward to the future

8 The Lord God, which gathereth the outcasts of Israel, saith, *Yet will I gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him.

V. 9-12. Under the terms "watchmen," and "shepherds," both the priests, and scribes, and civil magistrates seem to have been intended; the teachers and rulers of Israel, especially the former: but this severe rebuke was probably expressed in general terms, that it might equally apply to similar characters in other ages and places. There might be many such in the prophet's time, whose likeness he delineated; and still more, before the captivity, who resembled them: but it was most generally and exactly verified in the character of the chief priests, scribes and elders, in the days of Christ, and just before the destruction of the city and temple by the Romans. The nation in general was given up to wickedness; but the chief blame belonged to the corrupt teachers and rulers. (Notes, Jer. 5:20-31. 23:13-15.) Through their supineness and profligacy, the nation was exposed to ruin; and the Roman armies were summoned to execute vengeance upon it, under the figure of the wild beasts of the forest being called on, to come and devour a neglected flock of sheep. (Notes, Jer. 12:7-9. Ez. 39:17-20. Rev. 19:17-21.) The watchmen were so blinded and ignorant, that they saw no danger. The shepherd's dog could bark when the wolf came; but they were "dumb dogs, and could not bark;" they were neither capable of instructing the people, nor inclined to do any thing towards it; for they were lazy, drowsy, and utterly insensible. But, though they did not copy the faithfulness and vigilance of the dog; yet they were more greedy than that animal, and their rapacity could not be satisfied. They did not understand their duty as shepherds: but they were sufficiently quick-sighted and attentive to their interest; and every one was looking out to see what lucre he could acquire in his peculiar station and connexion, by any means whatever. They were likewise equally luxurious and intemperate; and expected a perpetuity and an increase of prosperity and self-indulgence, when they were upon the brink of ruin! (Notes, 28:1-8. Ez. 22:24-31. Hos. 4:7-11. Mic. 2:11. Matt. 24:45-51. Luke 12:15-21, vv. 18,19. 21:34-56.)—Alas! how many, in every age of the church hitherto, might have, as in a mirror, have recognised their own likeness, if they had not been blind! And how many might do it, at this day, not only in Popish, but in Protestant countries, were it not for the same reason. (Note, Jam. 1:22-25.)—Sleeping. (10) Marg.—Dreaming; Ευνοία ο κοιμητο.? PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. We cannot indeed be justified by our own works; but we cannot be saved in our sins: they therefore who, "through the Spirit, wait for the hope of righteousness by faith," will be found walking in the ways of holy obedience. (Note, Gal. 5:1-6.) There can be no piety without honesty, or acceptable honesty without piety. He then is the happy man, who lays hold of the precepts, as well as the promises, of God's word; who follows the day, and attends on the ordinances of the Lord; who "abhorreth that which is evil, and cleaveth to that which is good;" and who thus "waits for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." (Notes, Ps. 1:1-3. 15:1-5. P. O. Notes, 24:3-6. Jude 20,21.) Thanks be to God, we are none of us at present separated from him or his people by any thing, unless it be 'y wilful sin and unbelief; and if we come "to join ourselves unto him, to choose the things that please him, and to take hold of his covenant; to love his name, and his servants;" we shall be sure of acceptance, through the one oblation of our great High Priest. We are now "come to mount Zion, and to the city of the living God;" (Notes, Heb. 12:18-25.) and may expect to be made joyful in the house of prayer, while our spiritual sacrifices are acceptable morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant.

CHAPTER LVII.

The disregarded yet happy death of the righteous a token of approaching Judgments, 1, 2. Idolaters, hypocrites, and wicked men, cited before God's tribunal, convicted, and threatened with destruction, while none could help them, and while those who trusted God would be saved, 3-14. Promises to the broken-hearted; excuse of the sufferings of God's professing people; and the free grace of the gospel, from which the impenitent are excluded, 15-21.

THE righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart: and merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come.

2 He shall enter into peace: they shall rest in their beds, each one walking in his uprightness.

to him through Jesus Christ. (Notes, Heb. 13:15, 16. 1 Pet. 2:4-6.) And should any of those, who are interested in these blessings, be childless, or afflicted with bodily infirmity of any kind, they need not disquiet themselves: "the comforts of religion will counterbalance all external trials;" "a name and place" in the family of God are far preferable to a numerous offspring; and his everlasting mercies far better riches than the treasures of this world. Let us then seek all our felicity from the God of salvation, and walk with him "in all his commandments and ordinances blameless;" and let us rejoice in the assurance, that he, who has gathered us poor outcasts into his family, will gather others besides those, and more, immensely more than all those, who have hitherto been gathered to him.

V. 9-12. Alas! the visible church has hitherto been very grievously corrupted, through blind watchmen and ignorant teachers, who like dogs can bark at the sheep, and bite, nay greedily devour them; but seem at league with the wolf and lion, from which they ought to defend the fold: who cannot through ignorance, or will not through slothfulness, preach the truths of God to the people, to warn them from the wrath to come, and will not permit others, if they can help it: who are ever in pursuit of preferment, and after having added one source of emolument to another, are yet dissatisfied: who are asleep and dreaming of worldly pleasure, when they should be preaching and praying; but are awake, and keep a sharp look out, when "filthy lucre" from any quarter can be obtained: who never study, and do not understand, any part of their pastoral duty, but know very well how to fleece the flock, and to make the most of their incomes: who are as lavish and luxurious in spending, as they are rapacious in getting; wasting those benefices in intemperance, or magnificence and the pride of life; or employing them in enriching and aggrandizing their families, which were given to be used in charity and hospitality! and, who are often encouraging each other in sensuality, filling themselves with strong drink, and presumptuously expecting that "to-morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant;" when they, and those that blindly mistake such hirelings for shepherds, are about to "fall into the ditch together." From such pastors, O Lord, deliver thy church: open the eyes of those to whom any part of this character belongs, to see their guilt and danger, that they may escape them! teach those, "who have the rule" over thy people, to set their faces against such abuses, and to exclude such blind guides, such dumb, greedy dogs, such covetous and sensual watchmen, from the sacred function; and to oppose them by a contrary example, as well as by authority. And oh! send us pastors after thine own heart, to feed thy people with knowledge and understanding: that we may rejoice in thy holy name, and that believers may be daily added to thy church: even so be it, Lord Jesus thou good and chief Shepherd of the sheep. Amen.

NOTES.—CHAP. LVII. V. 1, 2. This chapter and the next are written in so general a manner, that they may accord to several different periods of the Jewish history. But they are equally applicable to the state of the Christian church, during the prevalence of papal idolatry and superstition: and, if we may suppose any order or connexion in this part of the book, we must conclude, that they refer to those times: for we shall soon find the prophet speaking, in the most evident manner, of the glorious events which will succeed the fall of every antichristian power.—In the conclusion of the preceding chapter, the extreme wickedness of the rulers and teachers of the church was pointed out, as one sign of approaching judgments: here the disregarded removal of the righteous is mentioned as another. They are said to "perish," not with reference to themselves, but to the irreparable loss sustained by their survivors: though none were duly affected by it, or considered that the Lord took the righteous away in mercy and love, that they might not be involved in those calamities, which their prayers, labours, and example could no longer retard. But ¹he enters into peace ²his soul being removed to heaven, his body sleeps as in a bed till the resurrection: and this is the case with every one, who has walked before God in integrity and uprightness. The death of Josiah, who was taken away before vengeance was poured out on the Jews, may be predicted as an illustration of this general truth. (Notes, 2 Kings 22:15-20. 23:29, 30.) ³The soul of the righteous shall be in joy; and their body shall rest in the grave, unto the time of the resurrection: because they walked before the Lord. ⁴Taken away. V. 3-6. JEHOVAH here summons apostates and hypocrites to appear before him. They are not the genuine children of Abraham, or the sons of God and the church; but the sons of a sorceress, the increase of adultery and whoredom: ¹the seed of the adulterer, and of her who commits whoredom ²they were descended from parents, who had been guilty of these crimes, and they resembled them in their conduct. They were more properly ³the synagogue of Satan, than the church of God, and Babylon's children rather than Jerusalem's. ⁴Men are in Scripture called the children of those, whose practices they imitate. John 8:39, 41, 44. Louth.—By whoredom and adultery we may understand idolatry; and idolaters are represented as the offspring of the adulterous church and her paramours. (Notes, Jer. 3:1-11. Ez. 16:15-22. Hos. 1:2, 3. Matt. 37-10. 16:1-4. Jam. 4:4-6. Rev. 17:1-6.) They are charged with having derided the servants and children of God, expressing their scorn by every contemptuous gesture; and diverting themselves by mocking them: not considering that they despised God in his people. This they did to be revenged of the prophets, who reproved them for their sins: but could they deny, that they were children of disobedience, and hypocrisy? Being eagerly bent upon idolatry, they performed their worship under every green tree: and, whilst they adored proud, ambitious, revengeful, cruel, intemperate, and licentious deities; the imagined characters, pretended exploits, and abominable rites of these idols, inflamed them with every diabolical and sensual lust: so that they even sacrificed their children, in lonely valleys, and in the caverns of the rocks. (Marg. Ref. n-p. Notes, Lev. 18:21. 20:2-5. Hos. 4:10-14.) They were accustomed to take stones from the brooks, to set them up, and to anoint them with oil: and whenever they met with a stone of this kind, they paid a stupid worship to it, with drink-offerings and meat-offerings, as if it had been their god and portion! And indeed they were likely to have all the happiness, which such deities would allot them, and no other: for could they suppose that the Lord would take pleasure in idolaters, or even endure them? Can I see these things with acquiescence? ⁷Bp. Louth. ⁸Shall I not, therefore, be angry at these things? ⁹Sept.

Smooth stones. (6) ¹Arnobius ²gives an account of his own practices in this respect before he became a Christian. Si quando conspexeram lubricatum lapidem, et ex olivi ungine sordidatum: tanquam inesset vis presens, adularar, affabar, et benedictum posebam, nihil sentiente de trunco. (If at any time I saw a smooth stone, and rendered sordid by the oil of olive: as if some power had been present, I worshipped, I addressed it, I asked benefits, not at all thinking of the trunk.) ... ³Accordingly, Theophrastus has marked this as a strong feature in the character of the superstitious man: ... ⁴Passing by the anointed stones in the streets, he takes out his phial of oil, and pours it on them, and having fallen on his knees, and made his adorations, he departs. ⁵Bp. Louth.

V. 7, 8. Here the idolatrous church is represented as a woman, who has violated her marriage-covenant, and is grown impudent in her adulteries. The idol-temples, (which were as the adulterous bed,) were built upon the highest mountains, to which the worshippers openly ascended to offer sacrifice. Yet they had in their own houses, behind the doors and on the posts, miniature pictures, or small images, of their deities, to put them in remembrance of that public solemnity. (Notes, Deut. 27:15. Acts 19:23-31, v. 24, 25.) Thus they shamelessly violated their covenant with God, by worshipping idols; they multiplied the objects of their abominable worship and solemnly covenanted with them, as if enamoured of them at first sight. (Notes, Ez. 16:15-29. 23:3)

V. 9, 10. The kings and people of Israel, and even of Judah, often paid court, and made presents, to the idolatrous kings of Egypt or Assyria; and, entering into confederacy with them, they conformed to their customs, and worshipped their gods: and thus debased themselves to the lowest degree of infamy. (Notes, 30:6, 7. 2 Chr. 28:20-33. Hos. 12:1, 2.) They sent their ambassadors also to a great distance; and wearied themselves in long journeys. And they would not despair of help in this way, though often rebuked and punished for it: for they allayed their present fears, and shifted off present dangers, by such expedients; and therefore they were not grieved, or did not faint, on account of the trouble and hardship attending them.—Many of the preceding expressions accord to the idolatry of the Jews: but the self-imposed austerities, the laborious and multiplied superstitions, and the expensive observances of popery, seem also to be described. The antichristian worship of images, and of saints and angels; the pilgrimages, penances, and indulgences of papists; their dispensations, and oblations, or legacies to the priests, that by masses and prayers, they might deliver souls out of purgatory; far better answer to this passage, than any idolatries practised by the Jews: and the king before mentioned seems to point out the head of the antichristian church, to whom, during many ages, men flocked with presents and tributes from every part of the western world; debasing themselves even to help by their abject submissions. And, though wearied with the burdens imposed on them, yet they persevered in their way, deeming obedience to the Romish hierarchy ¹the life of their souls ²expecting to merit heaven by these works of their own hands, and not grieving at any labour or expense, to soothe their consciences and buoy up their confidence.

V. 11, 12. The Lord here inquires of this corrupt company, of whom they had been afraid, that they falsely professed to pay any regard to him, or that they had broken their covenant with him? for had they truly feared him, they would have avoided and abhorred their abominations. so that their hypocrisy was a needless sin. They did not really remember him and his law, or lay to heart the important concern; and his patience and silence for a long time, as if he had not regarded them in their crimes. (Notes, Ps. 50:16-21. v. 21. Ec. 8:11-13.) But he would show openly the nature of their righteousness and works, and prove them to be worthless and unprofitable.—This seems peculiarly applicable to that church, which holds the doctrine of the merit of good works, in the most exorbitant sense; and yet sets the highest value upon unmeaning forms and worthless superstitions, observance of the rules of this or the other founder of a monastic order, may often on acts of idolatrous worship: and the Lord left that church for many ages to go on, as if he had taken no notice of her; which was never the case with the nation of Israel: nor did the Israelites suppose, that they merited, and should be justified, by their idolatries.

V. 13. The idolaters are here supposed to be in extreme terror, and crying to the Lord for deliverance; but they are sent to their companies of idols, and idolatrous connexions, for help. (Notes, Judg. 10:13-16. 2 Kings 3:13, 14. Jer. 2:26-30.) Yet they and their confidences would be alike carried away by the wrath of the Almighty, as by a vehement wind, into utter ruin.—This also is applicable to the destruction of antichristians, notwithstanding their companions of mediators, and of tutelary saints and angels: while those, who trust in the Lord according to his word, will be owned as his true people; and he will dwell among them, as in Canaan, and on mount Zion, with his ancient church.

V. 14. Or, "One shall say," or, "I will say:" for so it may be rendered merely by altering the vowel-points. The Lord will say, or send one to say, "Cast ye up, &c."—It is, however, the word of God to his ministers and servants, to prepare the way for those who trust in him, and for sinners to return to him. They are commanded to level the road, and make it straight, casting it up as a causeway, and removing every thing which might cause the weak or inadvertent to stumble. (Notes, 40:3-5. 62:10-12. Heb. 12:13, 13.) There may be some allusion to the return of the Jews from Babylon: but the prophecy evidently relates to the return of sinners unto God, and the walk of believers through this world to heaven. The preparation for this is made, by clearly stating the truths, and proclaiming the invitations and promises, of the Gospel; by showing the love of Christ, and the way of acceptance and of holiness; by obviating difficulties, answering objections, guarding against dangerous errors and extremes, and detecting the snares and wiles of Satan and of wicked men. But it may also relate to the interpositions of Providence, in removing those stumbling blocks, which are thrown in the way, by the corruptions, errors, wickedness, and contentions, which prevail within the church. (Note, Matt. 18:7-9.) The occasions of idolatry were carefully removed after the captivity: the apostles and faithful ministers in every age, have obeyed this command: but the ruin of Antichrist's kingdom, and the removal of those enormous scandals and abuses, which have so long obstructed the promulgation of the gospel, seem especially predicted.

V. 15, 16. The Jews, even when addicted to idolatry, gloried in their magnificent temple and worship: the Christian church has been greatly corrupted by an attachment to splendid externals: and few of the human race have judged properly, of that simplicity and spirituality, which are the excellency of divine worship; (Note, John 4:21-24.) or of the value of a broken heart, above all notions, forms, gifts, visions, or revelations. These lessons are here inculcated. The Lord declares his essential glory and majesty in the sublimest language: "The high and lofty One, who inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy." As eternity is the habitation of his immutable existence, and holiness is his nature; so "the high and holy place of heaven" is his special residence, in respect of his sovereign and universal government, and the immediate manifestation of his glory. But he has also a habitation on earth, in which he peculiarly delights, (even more than in the temple on mount Zion, except as it typified the human nature of Christ;) and that is, the heart which is broken down under the sense of guilt and unworthiness, and deeply humbled before him; which is crushed, as it were, in self-abasement, and broken off from self-confidence, self-exaltation, and self-preference. (Notes, 66:1, 2. 2 Kings 22:15-20. Ps. 51. 7. Ez. 9:3, 4. Matt. 5:3. 1 Pet. 3:1-4.)

'and he went on 'frowardly 'in the way of his heart.

18 I have seen his ways, and 'I will heal him; I 'will lead him also, and 'restore comforts unto him and 'to his mourners.

19 I create "the fruit of the lips; "Peace, peace to him that is far off, and to him that is near saith the LORD; and I will heal him.

20 But the wicked are like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt.

21 There is 'no peace, saith my God, to the wicked.

With such persons the Lord will dwell, in order to revive their drooping spirits, and comfort their dejected hearts, and give them life eternal. (Notes, John 14:18-24.) For though he alarms, convinces, and distresses them, by showing them his majesty, justice, and holiness, and their own guilt and depravity; and for a time contends with them by frowns, and rebukes, and corrections; yet, the end being answered, he will cease to contend, and to be wroth with them; lest they should be driven to despair, and incapacitated for serving him; as no creature can endure his perpetual frown and indignation. (Notes, 27:2-6. Ps. 30:5. 61:1-3, 88:36, 39. 103:9-18. 125:3. Jer. 10:23-25. 2 Cor. 2:5-11.)

V. 17, 18. The people are here stated to have imitated the covetousness of their rulers and teachers: (Note, 56:9-12.) and this covetousness was connected with iniquity, fraud, oppression, or extortion: therefore the Lord smote Israel, or Judah, and hid his face from him. Under these rebukes he went on frowardly, in the way of his own perverse heart. But though the Lord saw his wicked ways and hated them; yet of his own mere grace he intended to convert and heal him, to take him under his tuition and guidance, and to comfort him, and those who lamented and mourned over his calamities.—This may be understood of the conduct of Judah previous to the Babylonish captivity, and during that calamity; and of the freeness of God's mercy in his restoration. (Notes, 43:22-25. 44:22. Jer. 31:18-20. Ez. 36:31, 32. Hos. 2:6-17. Rom. 5:20, 21.)—But the nation of Israel was more peculiarly addicted to covetousness in the time of Christ, and previously to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; their strictest professors of religion "devouring widows' houses, and for a pretence making long prayers." For this and other sins the Lord was wroth, and smote them, and they have ever since gone on "frowardly in the way of their own hearts," and covetousness has all along been the characteristic of the nation, even to a proverb. Yet the Lord will surely convert and save Judah, and become again his Guide and Comforter, for his own name's sake. This seems the more immediate meaning of the prophecy: yet the avarice of the church of Rome, her enormous exactions, and her infamous traffic for indulgences, dispensations, and other scandalous impositions, must occur to the attentive reader's mind; and also the promises of God to recover his church from this corrupt state, into which it has been so long sunk.—By covetousness, in Scripture, we must generally understand the inordinate love of lucre, whether to hoard, or to lavish in luxury and indulgence.

V. 19. (Note, Eph. 2:14-18.) This verse points out the method, by which God revives, purifies, and comforts his church. He raises up faithful ministers to preach his word; he qualifies them for their work, and gives them their message; he creates in their hearts that zeal for his glory, and compassion for souls, which produce earnest and constant preaching of the gospel, "the fruit of their lips;" by which peace of every kind is proclaimed to Jews and Gentiles, far and near, and thus numbers are converted and healed. (Notes, Matt. 10:11-15. Acts 2:37-40. 10:36-43. 2 Cor. 5:18-21.)—In this way religion was revived among a remnant of the Jews, and the Gentiles were called into the church: thus that nation shall be again converted, the fullness of the Gentiles shall come in, and all Zion's wounds and breaches shall be healed. The text may also refer to the mercies through the gospel bestowed on multitudes, the gratitude excited in their hearts, and the spiritual worship rendered by them: for the Lord "creates the fruit of the lips," by teaching and exciting sinners, having embraced the message of salvation, to offer unto him the spiritual sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving. (Notes, Hos. 14:1-3. Heb. 13:15, 16.)

V. 20, 21. Wicked men cannot share that inward peace, which springs from the mercy and grace of God. Their turbulent passions, polluting lusts, and inquiet consciences, render them like the tempestuous restless ocean, when ceaseless dashings against the shore cast up mire and dirt."

so that, whatever external changes take place, "there is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked." The promises before given therefore must not be so explained, as to encourage men to expect reconciliation to God, and peace of conscience, without "repentance and works meet for repentance;" but to excite them to believe and hope and pray, that he would give them repentance, and forgiveness of sins, through the promised Redeemer, and according to the gospel: as all the impenitent and unconverted would be given up to final destruction. (Notes, 3:10, 11. 48:20-23. Acts 3:19-21.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. The death of the righteous is the greatest gain to themselves, and the greatest loss to others, which can be imagined. They are exempted from the evils that are impending over guilty nations and churches; but their removal portends, and makes way for divine judgments: yet alas, this is seldom attended to, and scarcely ever duly laid to heart.—In all events true believers are safe and happy: and even their graves are quiet beds, in which they sleep in Jesus, and from which he will shortly awake them to everlasting joy and felicity. (Notes, 1 Thes. 4:13-18. Rev. 14:12, 13. v. 13.)—The enormous wickedness of those, who are favoured with the word and ordinances of God, is a lamentable demonstration of human depravity. The spurious brood, which hypocrisy, superstition, and fanaticism have engendered, within the visible church, will easily be distinguished, notwithstanding names and splendid pretences, from her genuine children; and be punished with more marked severity than any other transgressors. We ought then neither to be disconcerted, nor exasperated, if they treat us, as Ishmael did Isaac, with mockery and derision in every form. (Notes, Gen. 21:8-12. Gal. 4:21-31.) Scoffs and calumny are their weapons, when more destructive instruments are placed out of their reach. Yet they little think against whom they sport themselves, when they ridicule and mock the humble and faithful servants of the Lord: but he will shortly convict and expose them, through their mockery and boastings, and show them to be "children of transgression, a seed of falsehood."—Men naturally love a religion, which inflames and authorizes their unholiness; and there is no absurdity so palpable, nor cruelty, even to their own children or bodies, however horrid, of which they are not capable, if seduced into an opinion, that it will atone for their crimes, and purchase indulgence for the favourite lust; if it can be made subservient to the gratification of their pride and ambition; or if it will quiet their consciences, and aid them to hope for happiness, without Christ, or without holiness. This develops that "mystery of iniquity," namely, of idolatry, Pagan, Jewish, or Antichristian: the whole has been suited to one or other of these purposes. And so entirely does Satan blind the minds of numbers, that they expect that God should delight in, and reward them for, such observances as he has expressly forbidden and utterly abhors!

V. 9-14. The zeal which men show in false religion, the boldness with which they avow their absurdities; their diligence and constancy in public and private superstitions; the alacrity, with which they weary themselves in burdensome services, or severe penances; the pertinacity, with which they hold fast their delusive hopes and labour to "establish their own righteousness," should remind us, who have a better cause, how earnest, constant, patient, and diligent we ought to be. The very devotees of superstition and idolatry avow, that religion is the grand concern; that it should be our main employment and satisfaction; that every thing should be sacrificed to it; and that no labour, loss, or hardship should here be regarded. But we ought at the same time to remember, that except our earnestness be regulated according to the word of God, it will be at best wholly unprofitable. It is vain to dissemble, or to pretend to fear God and seek his glory, if we do not: those who really remember him, will be universally conscientious; and such as allow themselves in known sin, act from some sinister motive which the Lord will detect; and then he will show the corrupt nature of "their righteousness and works," and manifest the reason of his rejecting them. His silence and patience encourage the presumptuous hopes of transgressors; but when he shall arise to judgment, the infidel and profane, the pharisaical and superstitious, the hypocritical and enthusiastical; and all the advocates for vice, or for false religion, will discover their danger: but it will then be too late to cry for help; nor will any of their companions or kinsfolk avail them; for they will all be driven into destruction. But those who trust and love our God and Saviour, will "inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world."—It should therefore be our first care to learn the ways of God ourselves; and then, in our several places, to make them plain to others, and to remove every stumbling block, which obstructs the path. In this respect we have much to do, and much to pray for.—The absurd and wild opinions, which are propagated; and the crimes which are committed, by men professing the doctrines of the gospel, the multiplied controversies acrimoniously agitated among them, the horrible injustice and profligacy of men called Christians, in every quarter of the globe; the corrupt state of almost the whole visible church, in doctrine, discipline, and practice; and the idolatry, imposture, and enormous covetousness of the church of Rome, have long been stumbling blocks to infidels, Jews, Mohammedans, and Pagans all over the world. The Lord calls upon Christians and ministers to remove these scandals as much as they possibly can; and we should unite in constant and earnest prayer to him to raise up instruments who may do it effectually.

2 Yet they seek me daily, and delight to know my ways, as a nation that did righteousness, and forsook not the ordinance of their God: they ask of me the ordinances of justice; they take delight in approaching to God.

V. 15-21. While numbers stumble, and fall, and perish, through the offences which every where abound, it is by their own pride, unbelief, and enmity to God and holiness. "For this high and lofty One, who inhabits eternity, whose name is holy, who dwells in the high and holy place," delights in those who are "poor in spirit" and broken-hearted, mourners for sin, and supplicants for mercy and grace. He will make his abode with those, whose hearts he has thus humbled, in order to revive and comfort them; "he will not contend for ever" with the penitent soul; he will not drive the contrite to despondency, nor leave him to perish under his frown. Let then no trembling suppliant give way to discouragement, or hard thoughts of God: but let him continue to wait and pray, and ere long he shall be comforted. But though the Lord employs corrections to bring sinners to repentance, and to recover backsliders; yet they are not of themselves effectual. Even believers sometimes go on forwardly for a season, when smitten for their iniquity, and under the hidings of God's countenance: (Note, Ps. 32:3-5.) and many who seem to be religious in this way, become mere thorny ground, that brings forth no fruit to perfection.—Covetousness is idolatry, and it almost always produces dishonesty and iniquity likewise; yea few are much aware of its malignity. (Notes, Luke 12:15-21. Eph. 5:3, 4. 1 Tim. 6:6-10. v. 9, 10. 2 Pet. 2:12-16.) But if we have been delivered from this snare, or are recovered from the state here described; we must acknowledge it to be the mere grace of God. He saw us, when we were "walking forwardly in the way of our own hearts," and graciously determined to heal us by his sanctifying Spirit: thus he began to teach and guide us, and to bring us into the ways of holiness and consolation: (Note, 42:13-17. v. 16.) and he has repeatedly recovered us, when we were departing from him; causing us to renew our godly sorrow, and restoring our comforts. The gospel was sent to us when "far off" from God; the influences of the Holy Spirit, by which we were brought near, and that new heart from whence grateful praise, "the fruit of our lips," originates, are alike his gift. Our salvation, with all its fruits, hopes, and comforts, is his work; it comes from him, and to him belongs all the glory. But the destruction of the wicked is from themselves; their hearts cast up filthy imaginations and desires, and empty themselves in wicked words and works: (Note, Jam. 1:13-18.) their selfish and malignant passions, and constant disappointments and vexations, with anxious forebodings as to the future, exclude them from peace, and as death for ever fixes a man's character; so those who die in sin will be left eternally proud, revengeful, envious, full of enmity against God and man, and given up to the torments of conscience and the rage of despair. (Note, Prov. 14:32.) Were there no other hell, the thoughts of such a condition are enough to harrow up the soul with consternation. Such men are, as it were, turned out of this hospital incurable; because they pertinaciously refuse to be healed, or to use the means of healing. "There is no peace, saith my God, for the wicked;" but "let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return to the Lord, and he will have mercy on him, and to our God, and he will abundantly pardon." (Note, 55:6, 7.)

NOTES.—CHAP. LVIII. V. 1. (Notes, 57:15-21.) The prophet, while he protested vehemently against all wickedness, was required especially to "cry aloud" against the crimes of God's own people; not sparing to reprove them sharply, out of respect to friends, fear of enemies, or regard to interest. He must spend his strength, venture reproach and persecution; and "lift up his voice like a trumpet," in giving an alarm to the people, and in exposing their hypocrisy. The Lord primarily addressed this command to Isaiah; but it is equally obligatory on the ministers of religion in every age: the prophet might intend his warnings for the hypocrites of his own time; but the Holy Spirit had also those of other ages in view.—The fasts observed by the Jews during the captivity merited the censure here given. (Notes, 3, 4. Zech. 7:2–7.) The Pharisees in the time of Christ, fasted often, in ostentation and hypocrisy, and to cloak oppression and avarice: the great value put upon fasting by the church of Rome, without any regard to a correspondent temper and conduct in other respects, is well known. But Vitrina thinks that this chapter, in its connexion with what precedes and follows, may relate to the reformed, or protestant churches. They have indeed renounced the idolatry and gross abuses of popery; but are grievously deformed by a worldly spirit and conduct, and great formality in religious duties, where the form is not thrown aside: and this indeed brings the matter home to ourselves.

V. 2. "The house of Jacob," in the time of Hezekiah, seems to have sat for this picture. They were not open idolatrous or irreligious; nay, they were earnest and constant in their forms of devotion, "seeking the LORD daily" and taking pleasure in learning his truths and precepts, as if they were a very righteous nation: (Note, Ez. 33:30—33.) but they were pleased with these things, merely because they gratified their pride and curiosity, procured them respect and reputation, and increased their presumptuous confidence. Nay, they "asked of God the ways of righteousness, and took delight in approaching him" in his courts: for this was then credible, and generally done; and it served as an easy commutation for secret injustice, and as a cheap quietus to their consciences. (Notes, 1:10—15. 48:1, 2. 1 Sam. 15:22—25. Heb. 6:4—6.)—This has often been the case, both in Israel, and in the Christian church, among papists, and among protestants.

V. 3, 4. The persons here addressed had mortified themselves, with apparent sorrow and contrition, on stated or occasional fasts. (Notes, Lev. 16:29—31. Ps. 35:13, 14.) They deemed this very meritorious; and they inquired wherefore the Lord had not noticed their services, and delivered them from their troubles. (Notes, Mic. 3:9—11. Mal 3:13—18. Luke 15:25—32, v. 29.) But he answered, that, while they denied themselves in one respect, they indulged themselves in others; especially their pride, avarice, and malignant passions. For at the very time, when they seemed to abase themselves before God in fasting, they exacted the full measure of hard labour from their oppressed slaves, or their usurious claims from their starving debtors. Their fasting also served to increase their self-preference, and excited them to fierce controversies, or bitter resentments: it was the cloak of their exactions and oppressions of the poor, whom they most unjustly smote and abused, for not complying in every thing with their inclinations; or the commutation and atonement for this unmerciful conduct. And, surely they should not fast in this hypocritical, ostentatious, and unrighteous manner; or call a day thus spent a fast; or expect that God would accept their services, or hear their prayers; which were merely the labour of their lips, and uttered with a loud voice, but an insincere heart. (Notes, 1 Kings 18:27—29. 21:8—14. Jer 36:8—26. Joel 2:12—17. Zech. 7:2—7. Matt. 6:1—4, 16—18. 9:14, 15. Luke 18:9—14.)

V. 5-7. Could it be supposed that the fast, which the Lord approved, was "for a man to afflict his soul for a day;" (Marg.) with external appearances of sorrow and shame, and with mere transient animal self-denial, without repentance or reformation? The fast which God approved would be attended with the mortification of pride, of avarice, and worldly lusts; and with the unequivocal fruits of true repentance. They, who observed such a fast, would loose the bonds of those whom they had iniquitously enslaved or imprisoned; they would moderate the labours of their servants, and render their services and situation more comfortable; they would cease from usurious exactions, and remit the debts which either were contracted through fraud and oppression, or which the poor debtor was unable to discharge: (Notes, Lev. 26:39—55. Deut. 15:2,13—15. Neh. 5:1—13. Jer. 34:8—17. Jon. 3:5—10.) they would break every yoke of oppression, and use their authority and influence to protect the poor, or rescue them from the injustice of others. They would also be liberal to the needy according to their wants; and not get out of the way, or frame excuses, to avoid relieving them; remembering that they were of the same nature, and had the same feelings, as themselves. (Notes, 8—12. Acts 10:1—8. Col. 4:1.) By these things their external humiliation before God, in fasting and prayer, would be shown to be sincere and profitable: but in no other way.

V. 8—12. When the people should thus "repent, and do works meet for repentance," they might expect that their inward peace, or outward prosperity, would break forth and increase like the morning light; (Notes, 9:2. 60: 1—3.) and that their personal sicknesses, and disquieted consciences, or their public calamities, would speedily be healed: their good works would go before them as evidence to attest the sincerity of their faith and love, and for "a memorial before God;" and his glorious power and presence would protect them from those dangers, to which they were most exposed, as the guard which covers and protects the rear of an army. (Notes, 52:11,12. Ex. 14:19,20. Ps. 85, 10—13. Acts 10:3—8.) He would be as ready to answer their prayers, as they had been to answer the cries of their oppressed and afflicted brethren; whom they now no longer treated with scorn or menaces, or put off with vain pretences or deceitful promises. And when, from their inmost souls, in genuine compassion and love, they were habitually ready to relieve the hungry and distressed; their trouble and inward grief should be exchanged for comfort and joy, resembling the noontide light. The Lord himself would guide them, and supply their wants in every emergency; cause their bones to be full of marrow through health and plenty; make their souls pleasant and fruitful like a watered garden; and render their consolations abiding like the unfailing springs of water. (Notes, Prov. 3:7,8. 11:24,25. 13:1.) Then should they become the honoured instruments of repairing the waste places of Zion, and building upon those foundations which were laid in former ages, but not further completed; and be named the repairers of Zion's breaches, and the restorers of her ways, that men might come from all around to worship and dwell there. (Notes, 61:4—6. Judg. 5:6,7.)—This might apply to Zerubbabel, Nehemiah, and others, who rebuilt Jerusalem, the temple, and the walls of the city after the captivity; and to all those, in every age, who have been, or shall be, instrumental in promoting true religion; and doubtless, from the church, which shall first and best answer this description, will those instruments be raised up, who will be principally honoured in bringing forward that extensive and glorious promulgation of the gospel, which we are taught to expect and pray for continually.—This is called "The repairer of the breach, The restorer of paths to dwell in."

13 ¶ If thou "turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and "call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the LORD, honourable; and shalt honour him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words :

14 Then shalt thou "delight thyself in the LORD; and I will cause thee "to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the

CHAPTER LIX.

Impiety, and multiplied iniquities, occasioned the cause of all the calamities endured by the professed people of God, 1-15. Promises that God would rescue his church; take vengeance on his enemies; widely diffuse truth and holiness; stop the torrent of impiety and wickedness; and preserve true religion, by his word and Spirit, to the end of time, 16-21.

BEHOOLD, "the LORD's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither "his ear heavy, that it cannot hear :

2 But "your iniquities have separated between chiefly men of the spiritual Jerusalem, whose builders were the apostles?

Make fat thy domes, &c. (11) יללע, liberabit, expedita reddet. Shall make them free from disease, feebleness, or whatever afflicts them, for performing, with ease and comfort, their proper office.

V. 13, 14. As these prophecies evidently relate, or extend, to the times of the Christian dispensation; a cogent argument may be deduced from them, for hallowing the Lord's day. (Notes, 56:3-7. Matt. 12:7-8. Acts 20:7-12, v. 7. Rev. 1:9-11, v. 10.) This rule here given implies, that men must not profane that day by doing their ordinary work, or seeking their secular interest; or by spending it in worldly pleasures and recreations, or sloth and animal indulgence; or by vain and trifling conversation: but that they should delight in the sabbath, as a holy day especially consecrated to the Lord, to be spent in the public and private duties of religion; honour it above all other days, and honour God on it and for it. (Notes, Ex. 20:8-11. Am. 8:4-10.) Thus they will find much joy and comfort in him, and his service and worship will become more and more delightful to them; (Notes, Ps. 84:2,10.) they will be rendered triumphant over and exalted above their enemies; be plenteously provided for, as the Israelites had been in Canaan; and inherit the peculiar blessing, which was the birthright and heritage of Jacob. (Notes, Gen. 25:31-34. 27:27-29. 28:3,4,13-15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. The ministers of God have need, not only of great tenderness and skill to comfort the broken-hearted and tempted believer; but likewise of intrepidity and firmness, that they may "exhort and rebuke, with all authority," those who act inconsistently with their profession. (Note, Tit. 2:15.) They should be disinterested, zealous for the glory of God, prepared for persecution, superior to personal considerations; to the fear of men, and the shackles of party and bigotry; that with all plainness they may detect the transgressions, and expose the hypocrisy, of those who "profess to know God, but in works deny him." This requires far more courage in the minister, and will generally expose him to far greater trials, than all possible severity against avowed infidels, profligates, and open opposers of the gospel. Self-love, selfish friends, and injudicious or timid Christians, will say to a man in such a case, "Spare thyself." Ambition, avarice, love of ease, and aversion to the cross will suggest to him, Spare the rich and powerful: but God says "Spare not;" and "we must obey him, and not men," please him and not ourselves.—When the ministers of the reformed churches shall thus loudly protest against all the iniquity which prevails in them, (as well as against erroneous doctrines, and antichristian abuses,) we may hope to see them still further reformed and purified, and for a more extensive progress of the reformation.—We all need continually to beg of God to assist us in examining ourselves: this appears most clearly, when we consider how very far men may go in the appearance of religion, with an unsound heart.—As Herod heard John gladly, yet loved his brother's wife more than either God or his own soul; and as they "who have no root in themselves, may receive the word with joy;" we should remember, that great delight in outward forms, and religious speculations, may spring from pharisaical pride or diabolical delusion; and it must do so, when it consists with the love, and allowed practice of one known sin. For, without "repentance and works meet for repentance," "knowledge puffeth up," faith is dead; hope, presumptuous; joy, carnal; and profession, hateful hypocrisy. Such as are strangers to "the power of godliness," either neglect, or grow proud of the form: in their estimation good works rise in value, in proportion to their scarcity: and when it is owing to God's infinite patience that they are out of hell, they deem him unjust, if he slightly afflict them, and if he do not reward them with eternal happiness! But the Lord will manifest the corrupt motives of their tasks of reluctant devotion: and their conduct to their poor brethren, whom they enslave, oppress, starve, persecute, and exact on unmercifully, will demonstrate the hypocrisy of their solemn fasts, and ostentatious appearances of piety.—Many, who are very demure, and seem very humble, in the house of God and at his table, are most contentious and tyrannical in their own families; and come from their devotions, to distress and harass their wives, children, domestics, and dependents, with peevish or bitter words, perverse and severe actions, nay, sometimes with enormous injustice: nor are they more ostentatious in religion, to get the good opinion of ministers and Christians, than vociferous in rage and debates. But it is an invariable rule, that "he shall have judgment without mercy, who hath showed no mercy." (Note, Jam. 2:8-13, v. 13.) God will not forgive our trespasses, if we do not heartily forgive our brethren; and he will mete to us in the measure which we have meted to them. (Notes, Matt. 6:14,15. 7:12. 18:31-35.) No expressions of humiliation then can prove that man a true penitent, who does not "loose the bands of wickedness," renounce his gainful iniquities, and aim to mortify his strongest lusts. No man's faith justifies him, which does not "work by love;" he who loves God will love his brother also; and he who loves his brother, will do him no injury, but will be ready to do him all the good he can. The professed church of Christ has been too long amused with fasts, and external austerities in some instances, whilst men found pleasures in other things far more suited to their carnal minds; fasts employed as the cloak of avarice and oppression, and the very watchword of persecution.—Yet let us not confound the abuse with the use, of this scriptural method of expressing our godly sorrow and humiliation; but, rejecting the fast which the Lord has not chosen, let us attend to that which he approves and accepts.

V. 8-14. When the external expressions and means of repentance, faith, and grace, are accompanied with the mortification of sin, reformation of life, and abundant exercises of love to the poor and needy; despising, neglecting, and excluding none from our affection or assistance, according to our ability; we may expect consolation in the ways of God. Such conduct proves our sincerity, and honours the Lord; and he will honour and protect us on every side; our prayers will then be answered, our tribulations removed, or an adequate support afforded; by the light of God's countenance we shall pass through every dark scene; he will provide for our wants, make our souls like a watered garden, and honour us with usefulness in his church; (Notes, Cant. 4:15,16. Jer. 31:10-14.) for "the righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance." Many professed Christians prove themselves hypocrites by a contrary conduct; and many real Christians walk uncomfortably all their days, because their liberality is disproportionate to their affluence: their evidence of sincerity in their professed love of Christ, is therefore low; they little honour God and he little honours them; he dispenses consolation to them, according to their nigardliness to his poor people.—Experience evinces, that they, who in humble faith and love, "draw out their souls to the hungry," and abound most in "devising liberal things," are most comfortable, and most honoured to be useful in the church of God; (a sweet reward to their benevolent minds!) and often they have the most outward peace and prosperity. Let us then avoid, with equal caution, pharisaical pride, and antinomian sloth or selfishness; and let those, who walk uncomfortably, examine whether their conduct towards their poor brethren do not point out at once the reason, and the remedy.—True faith unites justice, mercy, and piety: in proportion as we are spiritually minded, we shall hallow, honour, and delight in the sabbaths of God; and, laying aside all employments, pleasures, or discourse, which can interrupt our sacred rest in him, we shall seek communion with him in his public and private ordinances: without any other remission, than what is really necessary, or what is a work of love to the souls and bodies of our neighbours and fellow Christians. Thus we shall learn to delight in God, and to anticipate heaven; we shall obtain the victory over the world, sin, and Satan; we shall follow those, "who through faith and patience inherit the promises;" and we shall at last be "numbered with his saints in glory everlasting;" for "the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it."

NOTES.—CHAP. LIX. V. 1, 2. This chapter continues the subject of the preceding; and begins with a further reply to those, who complained that God did not regard their fasting and prayers. (Note, 56:3,4.) What has therefore been observed, of the times to which that refers, applies to this also: and as the latter part of this chapter, and the whole of that which follows, must be understood of the millennium; so (whatever reference there may be to previous situations of the Jewish or Christian church,) there is some reason to you and your God, and your sins have 'hid his face from you, that he will not hear.

3 For 'your hands are defiled with blood, and your fingers with iniquity; 'your lips have spoken lies, your tongue hath muttered perverseness.

4 None 'scalleth for justice, nor any pleadeth for truth: they 'trust in vanity, and speak lies; 'they conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity.

5 They hatch 'cockatrice' eggs, and weave the spider's web: he that eateth of their eggs dieth, and that which is 'crushed breaketh out into a viper.

7 Their 'feet run to evil, and they make haste to shed innocent blood: 'their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; 'wasting and 'destruction are in their paths.

8 The 'way of peace they know not; and there is 'no 'judgment in their goings: they have made them 'crooked paths: 'whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace.

[Practical Observations.]

9 ¶ Therefore 'is judgment far from us, neither doth justice overtake us: 'we wait for light, but behold obscurity; for brightness, but we walk in darkness.

10 We 'grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes: we stumble at noon-day as in the night; we are 'in desolate places as dead men.

11 We 'roar all like bears, and 'mourn sore like doves: we look for judgment, but there is none; for salvation, but it is far off from us.

12 For 'our transgressions are multiplied before thee, and 'our sins testify against us: for our transgressions are with us; and as for our iniquities, we know them:

13 In transgressing and lying against the Lord, and 'departing away from our God, 'speaking oppression and revolt, conceiving a d uttering from the heart words of falsehood.

14 And 'judgment is turned away backward, and justice stahdeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter.

15 Yea, 'truth faileth; and 'he that departeth from evil 'maketh himself a prey: and the Lord saw it, and it 'displeased him that there was no judgment.

16 ¶ And he saw that there was no man, and or banished. "Justice is described as if he were afraid to venture itself among such a crew of miscreants." Louth. All sincerity and integrity were openly renounced; and if any one ventured to be so singular as to make a conscience of his duty, he became a prey to his less scrupulous neighbours, or was treated by them as a fool or a madman, And no wonder, that the Lord was displeased, at beholding such enormous wickedness among those who professed to be his worshippers.

V. 16-19. When it might have been expected that the Lord would denounce or inflict the severest vengeance on those who had so greatly provoked him; behold he appears to introduce the most glorious triumphs of his grace! (Notes, 43:22-28. 44:1-5,21,22.) When none in comparison were left to protest against the wickedness which prevailed, or to intercede with God to interpose and fulfil his promises: (Notes, 64:6-8. Jer. 5:1-6. Ez. 22:30.) then his own arm would effect the salvation which he intended: and his righteous regard to his promises, to the cause of godliness, and the honour of his law, and his just indignation against his enemies, would sustain him! His fixed purpose of executing justice on some, and of saving others, would be as his breast-plate and helmet: but vengeance would be as his military vest; and zeal for his own glory would be conspicuous above all, as a cloak. (Notes, 11:2-5. 63:1-6. v. 5. Ps. 93:1,2. 104:1,2. Rev. 19:11-16.) Thus armed for the conflict and prepared for judgment, he would deal with men according to their deeds; executing vengeance upon his obstinate enemies, to the most remote regions of the earth, and receiving humble penitents to his mercy and favour. Then would men fear and worship his name from the most western regions to the most eastern; for instance, Britain, America, the East Indies, China or Japan: and at the very time when Satan, the great enemy of God and his church, would come in to bear down all before him, by an inundation of antichristian superstition, infidelity, impiety, and wickedness; "the Spirit of God would lift up a standard," and call together his armies, to oppose his progress and subvert his cause. (Notes, 11:10. Ez. 38: Dan. 11:40-45. Joel 3:9-17. 2 Thes. 2:8-12. Rev. 12:13-17. 17:15-18. 19:11-21. 20:7-10.)—There can be no doubt the grand accomplishment of this prophecy is future: and as they, among whom iniquity so abounded antecedent to this happy change, are spoken of as the professed people of God, and never accused of idolatry; and as the Lord is represented as wondering, that there was no intercessor among them; it is more natural to interpret it of corrupt and degenerate protestants, than either of the Jews, who are avowed enemies to Christianity; or of papists, who retain the idolatrous worship of images, saints, and angels. (Notes, 57:9-14,17,18. 58:1.)

V. 20, 21. The coming of the divine Redeemer in human nature for our salvation, seems to be here immediately predicted; yet, along with the effects of his gospel in the primitive times, and in all succeeding ages; and with reference to his coming, by the power of his Spirit, to purify, deliver, and enlarge his church. (Notes, 16-19. 11:1-9.) JEHOVAH here covenants with Christ as our Surety, and with those true Israelites who turn from their transgressions by faith in his name, to continue the Spirit which rests on Christ, and the words or doctrine which he has delivered to his church, among his spiritual seed, in the mouths of his ministers who preach it, and of his people who profess it, from age to age, to the end of the world: so that "the gates of hell shall never prevail" against his truth and grace; but there shall always be a remnant to believe, profess, obey, and preach the gospel, through successive generations: till that period arrives before predicted, but more fully declared in the next chapter; when the cause of truth and righteousness shall gain a decided, universal, and permanent victory. (Notes, Rev. 11:3-18.)—These verses are expounded by St. Paul, of that general restoration of the Jewish nation, which he assures us shall come to pass in the latter times. Rom. 11:26,27. ... God's promises are only made to the penitent! Louth.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. When our troubles continue, notwithstanding our prayers and expectations of deliverance, we should examine seriously and earnestly into the cause. We may be sure, that "the Lord's hand is not shortened, ... neither his ear heavy;" he is as able to save, and as ready to hear prayer, as in former times; but iniquity, unrepented, unmortified, unpardoned iniquity, will separate between our souls and God, and cause him to hide his face, and to refuse any comfortable answer: so that nothing but true repentance and faith in Christ can remove the separation, and make way for returning peace. (Notes, Josh. 7:10-12. P. O. 10-18.)—Alas, what crimes have in every age filled and defiled the earth! But it is most lamentable, that the professed worshippers of God, who have the purest creeds in their books, and the most scriptural administration of ordinances among them; and who protest against heresy, superstition, and idolatry, with decided vehemence and pertinacity; are often guilty of multiplied murders, rapines, oppressions, perjuries, lies, blasphemies, and impieties! Nay, these criminals often escape with impunity, and have able advocates retained to extenuate their guilt, and varnish over their crimes: while scarcely any venture to "call for justice, or plead for truth," through fear of reproach, and of formidable enemies! But, except the grace of God convert the heart, men will in one way or other "trust in vanity and lies," "conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity."—Not only do we find enormous wickedness among rapacious oppressors, and powerful wasters of mankind: the schools of philosophers often produce more specious, but still more fatal instruments of destruction. With exquisite ingenuity and persevering application, studious men hatch impious and infidel systems: these gratify the curiosity, pride, and presumption of man, and are congenial to his carnal mind and soothing to his conscience. Compositions of this fatal tendency are often framed with the most specious arguments, ornamented with enchanting elegance, and varnished over with plausible pretensions to candour, liberality of sentiment, and free inquiry. On this delicious poison numbers feed and perish; in these nests are hatched basilisks and vipers, the brood of the old Serpent; and from thence they break forth with venomous teeth, to destroy the souls of men. Others are not employed in so pestiferous a manner: but they ingeniously weave a spider's web, and compared with their own schemes of self-effected salvation, they despise that "righteousness of God, which is unto all and upon all that believe." (Notes, Rom. 3:21-26. 10:1-4.) Yet their webs shall not become garments; neither shall any of their devices cover the shame of their nakedness, or preserve them from detection and the wrath of God. (Notes, 28:20. Rev. 3:17-19.) And it is observable, that protestants, who have renounced the Reformers' doctrine of justification by faith, through the righteousness of Christ alone, to trust in their own works, are in general remarkably defective in the very appearance of good works. Many of them deem it very meritorious not to perpetrate such crimes, as would expose them to the lash of human laws; and many of them "do works of iniquity, and the act of violence is in their hands." Indeed the feet of every man, who is destitute of the Spirit of Christ, "run swiftly to evil" of one kind or another: and the history of mankind and daily observation show, that where the restraints of fear, shame, and human laws are removed, and men can do it with impunity, their mad passions render them in haste to shed innocent blood. But while they waste and destroy others, regardless alike of justice, truth, and humanity; they are themselves strangers to peace and comfort: others watch their opportunity of retaliation; and their crooked paths lead them far aside from the way of peace and salvation. (Note, Ps. 119:155.)

V. 9-21. When the general character of any church or community where Christianity is professed, becomes corrupt and abandoned, it is reasonable to expect, that it will be left in the hands of its enemies: and vain will be the hope of deliverance or prosperity, without repentance. For them heinous crimes, men are given up to be deluded and infatuated; to grope and stumble in the clearest and most obvious concerns; and to proceed from one delusion and calamity to another, till they sink into the dark pit of destruction. They may complain, and groan, and murmur, under their calamities, and make trial of many and varied methods of deliverance: but nothing will effectually profit them, so long as they reject Christ and his gospel, and go on in impenitent wickedness: and the few, who are not utterly blinded, will readily perceive the justice of God in all their miseries, whilst they witness such multiplied and continued iniquities. Should the Lord thus visit this protestant land, would not our transgressions testify against us? Could it be denied, that we have grievously offended "in transgressing and lying against the LORD, in departing from our God;" in oppression and rebellion; and in the most scandalous and base perjury, or direct falsehood, in the most sacred ordinances, solemn professions and subscriptions? Alas! "judgment is," in many respects, "turned backward, and justice standeth afar off; for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter. Yea, truth faileth, and he that departeth from evil" often "maketh himself a prey," or is deemed a prodigy and a derision: "this, the LORD seeth, and is displeased." But we have yet a considerable number of exceptions to the too general rule: many still venture to protest against the wickedness of the times, and present continual supplications, through our heavenly Advocate, for the revival of religion, and the purity and enlargement of the church. What it may please God to do with us as a nation, we know not; but if none be left to intercede, his own arm will accomplish his predicted salvation, and "his righteousness will sustain him," in preserving and enlarging his church. Armed with "the breastplate of righteousness, and the helmet of salvation," and arrayed with the garments of vengeance and zeal, he will ere long go forth, crush his enemies, and spread his gospel from shore to shore, throughout the earth. (Marg. Ref.) So that in every sense, when the enemy of our souls comes in like a flood, we may expect that the Spirit of God will lift up a standard against him. Let us then plead this promise in respect of the progress of infidelity, heresy, and impiety, which seem about to deluge our land, and the nations professing the doctrines of the reformation. Indeed the astonishing changes, which have taken place, in this land, and on the continent, and in the East, since these observations were first written, (1790,) and the establishment of Bible Societies, and Mission Societies, in such an extensive manner, since that crisis, are an evident fulfilment of this prophecy: especially by the British and Foreign Bible Society, the "Spirit of God has lifted up a standard" against the deluge of infidelity which preceded, and seemed ready to prevail against the kingdom of the Redeemer. Let the enemy practices and prosper, in divers forms: and we should deeply lament the evils which still prevail; but we need not despond: the covenant stands sure with our Redeemer and his whole family; and every one, whom he has "turned from transgression," may take comfort from it. His Spirit shall be communicated and his truth continued in his church, to the end of the world, in defiance of all the power, subtlety, and malice of earth and hell: and his cause shall as certainly gain a complete victory on earth; as every true believer becomes more than conqueror, when the Lord receives him to his glory in heaven.

NOTES.—CHAP. LX. V. 1-3. (Notes, 30:23-26, 49:18-23.) Nothing occurs in the history of the Jews after the captivity, which at all accomplished the prophecy in this chapter. That nation never enjoyed such permanent peace and prosperity, as it had done in the days of David and Solomon: but in this chapter events are predicted inexpressibly more glorious. Even the happy change, which took place on the coming of Christ, and after his ascension, did not by any means answer to this description. The church was indeed greatly enlarged and purified; but it remained in great tribulation and passed through successive persecutions, till the conversion of Constantine. Then it had a short season of external prosperity: but its purity had previously been greatly tarnished, and soon became much more so: it was speedily filled with timeserving hypocrites, split into furious parties, deformed with grievous heresies, and disgraced with abominable wickedness. And not long after, the Roman empire was overwhelmed, and the church was afflicted with dire calamities, which continued with little intermission, till anti-christian idolatry and superstition had gained a complete ascendancy in the western, and Mohammedism greatly intrenched on the eastern, division of the church. (Notes, Rev. 8:9,12-14.) So that nothing has yet occurred which corresponds with these predictions; and they are therefore reasonably concluded to relate principally to future events.—'The subject of this chapter is the great increase and flourishing state of the church of God, by the conversion and accession of the heathen nations to it, which is set forth in such ample and exalted terms, as plainly show, that the full completion of this prophecy is reserved for future times. This subject is displayed in the most splendid colours, under a great variety of images highly poetical, designed to give a general idea of the glories of that perfect state of the church of God, which we are taught to expect in the latter times; when the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in, and the Jews shall be converted and gathered from their dispersions; and "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." Bp. Louth.—The church is here addressed as a disconsolate female, sitting on the ground, in a dark place, and obscure situation: this female is the emblem of Zion or Jerusalem, and the imagery is taken from the walls and gates of that city; and from the temple and its ornaments, treasures, sacrifices, and worship, all of which were "shadows of good things to come." God calls upon her to arise from the dust, that she may be enlightened, and shine by that light, which was now arisen: "for the glory of the LORD was risen upon her." When Christ came in human nature, "the Light to the world," "the Sun of Righteousness, and the Glory of the Lord, arose on the church; but his bright beams have for ages been strangely obstructed, and at some times almost eclipsed, by interposing clouds: and his church has almost constantly been harassed with tribulations and persecutions; so that she has mourned as desolate, and her few witnesses have prophesied in sackcloth. (Notes, Rev. 11:3-14.) Not only did gross darkness envelope both the Gentile world, and the land of Israel, when Christ came in the flesh: but darkness, equally intense, has covered the visible Christian church, as well as the Mohammedan and Pagan nations; and we have intimations of a still more gloomy scene, just before the Lord shall arise in his meridian brightness, most gloriously to irradiate mankind with his beams of truth and righteousness. In the primitive times the Gentiles came to this light: but we do not find that kings did, till the light became considerably obscured: but ere long "all kings shall fall down before" the divine Saviour, and do him service. As he is "the Sun of Righteousness," and "the Light of the world," and "the Light of the Gentiles," he must be JEHOVAH; for "JEHOVAH shall arise" upon the church, "and his glory shall be seen upon her." (Notes, 49:5-8,22,23. Mal. 4:2,3. John 1:4,5. 8:12. Rev. 21:22-27.)

V. 4-7. Zion is here called on to lift up her downcast eyes, to behold the blessed effects of her extraordinary irradiation. On every side converts were seen flocking to her, as her sons and daughters, from the most remote regions, to be nursed at her side, under her care and tuition, and fed upon her spiritual provisions. (Notes, 49:18-21. 54:1-5. 66:7-14,19-23.) At this sight she would "overflow" with joy; her heart would be dilated with gratitude, combined with reverence of God, and humble fear of acting wrong in such unexpected prosperity. (Notes, Jer. 33:6-9. Matt. 23:1-8, v. 8.) For the multitudes which dwell in the most distant countries, separated from her by the sea, would be converted; and all their treasures and all the wealth and power of the Gentile world, would be brought to her. This would be as surprising to the remnant of poor believers, as it would have been to the Jews, after their successive oppressions, to have seen all the kings, rulers, and grandees of Persia, Greece, Rome, and Tyre, crowding into Jerusalem with their immense revenues, in order to enlarge and beautify that holy city, and to support the worship at the temple of JEHOVAH. In order to bring such immense treasures to Jerusalem, the city must have been filled and surrounded with beasts of burden, such as the Midianites carried their merchandise upon. Thus they and the Arabians are represented, as bringing gold for tribute to Zion's King, and incense to be used in his worship as their God; that they might show forth his praises with all their power. (Notes, Ps. 72:8-15. Hag. 2:6-9. Matt. 2:9-12.) All the flocks of Kedar and Nebaioth, other districts of Arabia, would be brought for acceptable sacrifices on God's altar; and thus he would honour and beautify more than ever his temple, where his name had so long been glorified.—All this is evidently a figurative prediction of the purity and enlargement of the church; of the alacrity and zeal, with which different nations will dedicate themselves, and their substance, to the service of God; and of the multitude of spiritual sacrifices, which will in every place be presented to the Father with acceptance, through Christ our Temple, Altar, and great High-Priest.—¹ Nothing is more usual, than for the prophets to describe the state of the Christian church, by representations taken from the Jewish temple and service. Lowth. (Notes, 66:19-23. Ez. 40:2.)—It is, I think, a mark of a right understanding, in the language of prophecy, and in the design of prophecy, to keep to what appears the design and meaning of the prophecy in general, and what the whole of it laid together points out to us; and not to suffer a warm imagination to mislead us from the real intention of the Spirit of prophecy, by following uncertain applications of the parts of it. ² Lowman on the Revelation, quoted by Bp. Lowth.

V. 8, 9. The multitude of converts is here represented under another figure. The church sees immense numbers, from every quarter, thronging to her with one consent, as large flocks of birds darken the air like a cloud, and as doves hasten to the windows of the dovehouse; and she inquires, Who are these? To this the Lord answers, that surely the isles of the Gentiles would wait for him, to give them admission into his family; and that it would become the first use of the ships of Tarshish, which traded to the most remote regions, to bring her children, and all their wealth with them, to Zion, that they might worship the name of Zion's God, who thus glorified her: or they would be among the first that did so. (Note, 66:19-23.) This prediction will be accomplished, when Christians shall unanimously agree to make commerce and navigation subservient to the preaching of the gospel, in every country with which they trade. For the locality of the emblem, taken from the temple and worship at Jerusalem, rendered it necessary that it should be predicted in this manner; rather than as the setting up of the worship of JEHOVAH in those distant lands. The restoration of Israel, and the assistance rendered them by commercial powers, may also be predicted. (Note, 1 Kings 16:16.)—³ Ships of Tarshish. (9) Notes, 2:10-18, v. 16. 1 Kings 10:22.

V. 10-14. The imagery is here varied, but the meaning is nearly the same. The protection given to the church is represented by the building of Zion's walls. This would be done by the sons of strangers: and kings would minister to the formerly despised church, when God, who had afflicted her in fatherly displeasure, should favour her in his mercy and peculiar favour. But as no enemies would be dreaded, her gates would not be shut, even by night; and converts would continually throng into her, and meet with free admission: so that the forces and kings of the nations would be brought into her; and those that refused this subjection would be utterly wasted and perish. (Notes, 14:1, 2. 45:14. 49:22, 23. Mic. 7:14-17. Zech. 8:20-23. 14:16-21. Rev. 3:8, 9.)—But when has this ever been verified in its obvious meaning? And why should we attempt to enervate the language of inspiration; as if the Lord could not, or would not, fulfil all his predictions, because he has not yet done it?—¹ This must relate to the latter days, . . . when the church shall become "a great mountain, and break in pieces all the kingdoms of the earth," according to Daniel's prophecy. Dan. 2:35-44. ² Lowth. As the choice timber of Lebanon beautified Solomon's temple, that footstool of JEHOVAH; (Note, 1 Kings 5:13-18.) so shall the peculiar advantages of every nation, and of every description of men, concur to beautify the church of Christ, which he has determined to make glorious. The descendants of those nations which have persecuted her, shall humbly submit, and supplicate her favour: yea, the very persons who have despised her, shall prostrate themselves before her, acknowledging her relation to JEHOVAH, the Holy One of Israel. (Notes, Dan. 2:34, 35, 44, 45.)—Place of my feet. (13) Or, Footstool. (Marg. Ref. m.)—They shall call, &c. (14) Notes, 1:25-27. 61:4-6. Jer. 31:23-26, v. 23. Zech. 8:3.

V. 15-22. The language here grows still more energetic; and the images employed more grand and magnificent. Zion had been forsaken and hated, and almost universally shunned by the haughty and victorious idolaters, on every side: but now nations and kings should delight to contribute, with all their ability, to her comfort and prosperity, as much as the tender mother does to suckle her beloved infant; and thus she will know that her "Saviour and Redeemer is JEHOVAH, the mighty One of Jacob." (Notes, 49:22, 23. 61:4-6. 66:10-14.) The increase of knowledge, holiness, comfort, and prosperity in the church, shall be so great, that it shall resemble a new building erected in the place of an old one, in which gold is used instead of brass, and silver instead of iron, &c.: or like a city, whose magistrates had been grievous oppressors, but were now become equitable and peaceable, in the greatest degree, and sought nothing but the quiet and prosperity of the public; and whose tax-gatherers had been oppressive exactors, but were now become most just and equitable. This represents the internal peace and purity of the church, and the excellency of her rulers and teachers. (Notes, 1:25-27. 56:9-12.) Along with this, external peace will be connected: so that no wars, invasions, or persecutions will disturb her repose; but the very walls of Zion will be justly called "Salvation," and her gates inscribed with "praise" to her God and Protector. (Note, 26:1.) The Lord himself will shine upon the church, with so glorious and enduring a light, as shall eclipse all which has heretofore been enjoyed by her, from the world and spirit of God. And this light shall no more be withdrawn or obscured; for the days of Zion's "mourning shall then be ended," and this heavenly light and glory, and joy on earth, shall usher in the light, glory, and joy of the eternal world. "Her people shall then be all righteous;" they shall inherit the earth as long as it endures, and heaven for ever. The church shall take root and grow, and flourish as "a branch which God hath planted," and prosper as the work of his hands, that he may be glorified. From very small numbers and feeble beginnings, the people of God shall multiply, and become exceedingly numerous and powerful. (Notes, Dan. 2:44,45, Matt. 13:31—33.) This the Lord will hasten with all due speed, when the appointed season shall arrive.—We can conceive nothing more glorious than this description; and nothing can answer to it, but some future glorious state of the church on earth, or the state of the church triumphant in heaven. But several expressions limit our interpretation to the state of the church here below; though many bold metaphors, and sublime images, remind us how much that state will resemble heaven. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14. The whole earth, from the fall of Adam to the end of time, would have been deeply covered with ignorance, error, wickedness, and misery, if the Son of God had not come a "Light into the world." (Note, John 12:44—50.) This "Sun of righteousness" communicated much heavenly light to mankind, even long before he actually arose; but his bright beam have been diffused far more vigorously and widely, since that joyful event. Yet, after all, men in general have hitherto been greatly enveloped in gross destructive darkness; and are so at this day, wherever the light of revelation and the faithful preaching of God's word, are not afforded: nay, multitudes have the outward light, but are yet in darkness, because their eyes are blinded by Satan, through their unbelief and love of sin. (Notes, 2 Cor. 4:3—6.) While we therefore bless our God, that this light is come unto us, we should beseech him to "shine into our hearts," to give us the light of the knowledge of his glory in the face of Jesus Christ." This mercy, when vouchsafed, is shown us, in order that we may arise from the dust and debasement of our worldly pursuits, and "let our light shine before men," in our holy profession and conversation; that we may reflect the bright beams, with which "the LORD hath risen upon us," that "his glory may be seen upon us," and that "men may see our good works, and glorify his name." (Notes, Matt. 5:14—16, Phil. 2:14—18.) We should therefore "watch and be sober," and "walk as children of the light;" and thus they, who have been strangers and enemies, will be allured to that light, which has made so excellent a change in our conduct and character. Our peaceful and joyous walk may be as conducive to this end, as our conscientious integrity: when Christians live up to their privileges, and enjoy much divine consolation, love sweetly constrains them to zealous obedience and close conformity to their Lord; then they appear both holy and happy, and attract the attention of others to their most excellent religion. (Note, Acts 9:31.) As this must yield high satisfaction to the benevolent heart, it forms an additional motive to diligence, watchfulness, and fervency in prayer: and as the purity, increase, and prosperity of the church is the grand subject of these prophecies; so they ought to be of our desires, exertions, and supplications.—Ministers, and experienced Christians, should "lift up their eyes," and look around them, for such as are setting out in the ways of God, that they may encourage, caution, and instruct them; and that the children of God may be "nourished up in the words of sound doctrine," under their prudent and affectionate inspection.—Our religious joys should always be tempered with reverential, humble, and cautious fear: and increasing prosperity, or an enlarged sphere of usefulness, should be rejoiced in with trembling; lest we should be lifted up in pride, or betrayed into any dishonourable conduct.—All who are truly converted to God, will dedicate their wealth and influence to him, and show forth his praises in their use of them, and the improvement of their several talents, more or fewer, to the glory of his name. Thus it behooves every one to evidence the sincerity of his faith and love: for we shall at last be adjudged to belong to that master, in whose service we have employed our time, abilities, or substance. (Notes and P. O. Luke 16:1—12, Notes, Rom. 6:16—23, 2 Cor. 8:6—9.)—The learned, the sagacious, the ingenious, the powerful, may each contribute, in different ways, to promote the glory of God, and the peace, purity, edification, and enlargement of his church: and when this is done in simple dependence on Christ, and from love to his name, it will come up with acceptance before our God. Happy will it be for themselves, and for multitudes, when merchants shall consider the conveyance of the light of divine truth to the most distant lands, and newly discovered countries, as a primary object of their attention. Then their ships may sail more richly freighted, than if they were laden with the gold of Ophir; they may safely be committed to his care, to whose glory they are devoted; and he will surely honour those who thus honour him.—Alas! we are not at present called on to inquire, "Who are these, that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their winds?" Few, in comparison with the numbers of our land, will attend on the faithful preaching of the gospel; but much fewer make the name of the Lord their Refuge, and their Resting-place. Yet let us be thankful, that there is a remnant, and hope and pray for better times: and let us see to ourselves, that the ordinances of God be to our souls, as the house and the nest of the timorous dove.—It is a great honour and favour to us "sons of strangers," that we may be allowed, in any humble sphere, to build the walls of Zion: and it is a high privilege for kings to minister to that cause, for which "the King of kings" shed his precious blood. He, in whose hand are the hearts of kings, can easily bring them all to minister to his church, without deviating in the least from the line of their peculiar duty and station: (Note, 2 Chr. 30:12.) and he will do it in his due time; for, though he has in his anger smitten her, he has manifold mercies and favours in reserve for her.

Blessed be his name, the gates of Zion are ever open to receive returning sinners, who come with the desire of their hearts to be enrolled as her citizens: the prayer of humble faith, to Zion's God and King, can never be unseasonable, night or day; and every true convert is an accession to the strength, beauty, and honour of our holy city, at which angels in heaven rejoice. (Note, Luke 15:8—10.) Thus from every quarter some do, and more shortly will, come to beautify the sanctuary of God; and by them he "will glorify the house of his glory."—The children of persecutors, and even persecutors themselves, are welcomed to all the privileges of Zion's citizens; when they are humbled for their sins, and disposed to honour her, and join themselves to her, as "the city of the Holy One of Israel."

V. 15—22. The believer is often for a long time, afflicted, hated, and apparently deserted; yet the Lord will at length make him eternally excellent and happy.—Those who attend duly to the truths, precepts, and ordinances of scriptural Christianity, have long been "filled with the contempt of the scornful," and have been reviled or hated by the wise, the learned, and the powerful of the earth; so that the cross to be endured has made men averse to be connected with them; yet this very company shall be made "an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations;" and powerful kings and nations shall rejoice to promote their comfort and prosperity, and to serve their interest with their whole heart, soul, and strength; knowing that "their Saviour and Redeemer is ИЕЖОВАН, the mighty God of Jacob." If then, in those happy days, when "for brass the LORD will bring gold, and for iron, silver, &c." all the officers of the nations and of the church shall be peace, and their exactors righteousness: how should Christian magistrates, rulers, civil and ecclesiastical, and teachers, aim now to be patrons and examples of peace and righteousness! And how should all Christian kings endeavour to terminate the effusion of human blood, and to avoid all violence-wasting, and destruction! For in those days, men will be Christians indeed; and every one will do that, and no more than that, which is equally the duty of all, in this and every age, and from the neglect of which all our miseries arise. The people shall then be filled with knowledge, truth, and grace: they "shall all be righteous," as "the branch of God's planting, the work of his hands, that he may be glorified;" (Notes, 19:23—25, 61:1—3, Ps. 92:13—15.) and this will render earth almost like heaven. But if the church may, and shall in due season, be thus illuminated, sanctified, and enlarged, and prospered with such permanent joy and peace; if her "walls" may here "be called Salvation, and her gates Praise;" if she may be said to have done with mourning, even in this land of sorrow and death; what will the glory and happiness of heaven be, where "the LORD himself will indeed be our everlasting Light, and our God our Glory!" Let this hope cheer us under our present difficulties, and animate us to all diligence, that we may have an "abundant entrance . . . into this everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

NOTES.—CHAP. LXI. V. 1—3. The prophet, having declared in general both the troubles and deliverances of the church to the end of time, here returns to state some particulars more fully, which relate to those great events. This chapter refers to the coming of Christ, and the calling of the Gentiles. The allusions may be taken from the rescue of

CHAPTER LXI.

The Messiah declares his anointing his office and the effects of his fulfilling it, 1-5. The honour and excellency of his church, 4-9. Her joy in God's salvation, 10, 11.

THE Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me, to preach good tidings unto the meek: he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound;

2 To proclaim (the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn;

3 To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified.

4 ¶ And they shall build the old wastes, and they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations.

5 And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your ploughmen, and your vine-dressers.

6 But ye shall be named the priests of the Lord: men shall call you the ministers of our God: ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves.

[Practical Observations.]

7 For your shame ye shall have double, and for confusion they shall rejoice in their portion: therefore in their land they shall possess the double; everlasting joy shall be unto them.

8 For the Lord love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt-offering; and I will direct their work in truth, and I will make an everlasting covenant with them.

9 And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people:

the captive Jews, and their return to their cities and lands: but Christ himself has determined the interpretation to be more spiritual and evangelical subjects. (Note, Luke 4:16-19.) The Messiah himself is here introduced as the Speaker; and these first verses relate to his personal ministry, and the general tendency and effect of his gospel. "The Spirit of the Lord" rested on him to anoint, consecrate, and qualify him, as Man, for the work to which he was appointed. (Notes, 11:1-5, 42:1-4, 59:20, 21. Matt. 3:16, 17. John 3:27-36, v. 34. Acts 1:1-3, 10:36-43, v. 38.) By virtue of his voluntary obedience and sacrifice, as our Surety and High-Priest, he was authorized to preach the glad tidings of forgiveness, and free salvation, to the meek, the afflicted, "the poor in spirit," the penitent, who know their guilt, danger, and misery; for though the Gospel is proposed to all, yet it does not appear glad tidings to any but the convinced, humbled sinner. (Notes, 57:16, Matt. 5:3.) He was also commissioned effectually to bind up and heal the broken-hearted; to proclaim liberty to the slaves and captives of Satan and sin, and effectually to free them from the bondage of their lusts, evil habits, and strong temptations. Thus he would announce the year of jubilee, "the acceptable year of the Lord," the time of his especial grace, when he would pardon sins, remit debts, restore forfeited inheritances, receive offenders to full favour, and grant all requests and petitions. (Notes and P. O. Lev. 25:8-55. Notes, Jer. 34:8-17.) But this would be connected with the day of his vengeance on those who opposed or "neglected so great salvation." (Notes, Matt. 3:7-10, 23:31-36, Luke 21:20-24, v. 22, 1 Thes. 2:13-16, v. 15, 16. Heb. 2:1-4, 10:28-31, 12:22-25.) This seems especially to predict the respite granted to the Jewish nation, from the coming of Christ to the vengeance executed on them by the Romans. (Note, Luke 21:20-24.) Yet this day of vengeance did not in the least interfere with his commission, to "comfort all, who mourned" for sin, or in a gracious manner under their afflictions. (Note, Matt. 5:4.) He came to appoint gladness to all Zion's mourners, to give those, who lay self-abased before God, as in sackcloth and ashes, the joy of acceptance and the beauty of holiness; to exchange their mourning and dejection for the consolations of the Holy Spirit, and for those garments of praise, which were used on festive occasions. And that, (adopting another figure,) they might be planted, watered, and made to grow vigorously, as "trees of righteousness," in the courts of the Lord, being the planting of his hand, and bearing fruit to his glory.—The reader need only advert to the encouragement which Christ gave to the humble and broken-hearted publicans and sinners, in his personal ministry; and to the severity which he showed to proud Sadducees, and Pharisees, to see the force of these expressions, and the genuine nature and tendency of his Gospel.—It is observable that our Lord, in applying this passage to his own ministry, omitted the words, "the day of vengeance of our God;" no doubt, because he would not, at the first address, say any thing needlessly to offend his countrymen. (Notes, Luke 4:16-22.) The Septuagint render the clause here translated, "the opening of the prison to them that are bound;" (1) "the recovering of sight to the blind;" and thus it is quoted by St. Luke. (Luke 4:18. Notes, 35:5-7, 42:13-17, v. 16. Acts 26:16-18, v. 18.)

Trees of righteousness. (3) "Trees approved." Heb. Oaks of righteousness: . . . that is, such as by their flourishing condition, should show, that they were "the cion of God's planting, and the work of his hands;" . . . that is, say Vitrings . . . commendable for the strength of their faith, their durability, and firmness." Bp. Louth. (Notes, 60:15-22, v. 21. John 15:1-8.)

V. 4-6. Zerubbabel, Joshua the high-priest, Nehemiah, and others, rebuilt Jerusalem and the cities of Judah, after the captivity; and some think, that this passage predicts the return of the converted Jews to their own land, and settling again in it: (Notes, Ezra 3:6-6. Neh. 3: Hag. 1:2: Zech. 1:—6;) but it seems rather, from the context, to be a figurative description of the happy effects produced by the preaching of the gospel in the primitive times. Spiritual worship and true holiness had been at a very low ebb for some ages, when our Lord entered on his ministry. Those "blind guides," the Scribes and Pharisees, had made "void the commandments of God by their traditions" and interpretations. The Sadducees also, by their infidel principles, had increased these desolations. But the apostles and primitive evangelists, having been humbled, comforted, and sanctified, by our Lord's ministry, and by the pouring out of his Spirit, were employed to build up what was decayed and gone to ruins. By the blessing of God on their labours "many tens of thousands," among the Jews, became humble disciples of Christ, and spiritual worshippers of God through him. And by the conversion of the Gentiles, the church was replenished with multitudes of believers, immensely greater than had ever been known, even before "the desolations of many generations." Thus Zion was built up, and her desolated cities rose from their ruins, according to the figurative language often used even in the New Testament. (Notes, 49:7, 8, 58:8-12, 1 Cor. 3:10-15, Eph. 2:19-22.)—The strangers and aliens, thus brought into the church, were not only useful to the apostles, evangelists, and Jewish converts, by "their temporal things" and outward services, to which the language next used seems restricted: (Notes, 60:14-14, 66:10-14) but they were ordained as elders over the churches planted by the apostles and evangelists; and thus, in a spiritual sense, fed their flocks, and became their ploughmen and vine-dressers; that is, they were stated pastors over the sheep of Christ, and labourers in his husbandry and vineyard.—Yet some peculiar distinctions were reserved to the Jewish converts. All the apostles, and all the writers of the New Testament, were of that nation, unless Luke were an exception, as it is probable he was. (Preface to Luke.) The first pastors and ministers from among the Gentiles, were ordained to that office by the apostles and Jewish evangelists, and were under their immediate superintendency. This distinction might be figuratively alluded to, when it was said, "Ye shall be named the priests of the Lord: men shall call you the ministers of our God." The priests of Aaron's line were set aside; and the apostles and evangelists succeeded to as much of their office and authority, as accorded to the nature of the Christian dispensation. But perhaps the verse, in general, means that all true Christians would be more honoured, and admitted nearer to God, than the priests and Levites among the Jews. (Marg. Ref. q.)—Thus the riches of the Gentiles were brought into the church, and the poor converts of the Jews possessed the substance of all, in which these had gloried, whilst the Gentiles were admitted to share their spiritual things. Yet the Jews had some ground of triumph and exultation, when their despisers and enemies joined with them in the worship of JEHOVAH, and in receiving and submitting to the Messiah, who had been predicted by their prophets, and had arisen of their nation, and been made known to them by their teachers. (Notes, Jer. 16:19-21, Zech. 8:20-23.) The desolations of many generations. (4) "If we suppose all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed.

10 I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.

11 For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth; so the Lord God will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all the nations.

the Jews, after their conversion, to return into their own land, . . . we may fitly explain this text, of their re-edifying their ancient habitations." Louth. This, however, does not appear to be the direct subject of the prophecy.

V. 7—9. These verses may predict in general the extensive and permanent success of the Gospel in the world. Instead of that contempt which the worshippers of JEHOVAH had experienced from their neighbours, they would receive a double portion of honour and respect, from the Gentile converts to Christianity: (Note, 60:15—22, v. 15.) Believers and preachers of the Jewish nation would be peculiarly regarded, even in those lands where they had formerly met with injury and ignominy; and this joyful change would endure to the end, and for ever. As "the Lord loveth judgment, and hates robbery" and injustice, even when varnished over with a profession of godliness, and especially when the gains are impiously consecrated to his worship, as if he were a sharer in the robbery; (Notes, Prop. 21:27. Jer. 7:8—11.) so he had determined to reject the hypocritical Jewish nation, and to replenish his church with believers from among the Gentiles. He would "direct the works" of his people and ministers in truth and uprightness, and make a new covenant with them which should endure to the end; and their believing posterity, from age to age, should be known and acknowledged among the nations, as a holy people, happy in the favour of God, and sanctified by his grace. (Notes, 26:12—18. 43:22—25. 44:3—5. 65:21—23. Deut. 30:1—10. Jer. 31:31—34. 32:39—41. Ez. 11:17—20. 36:25—27. Zech. 12:9—14.)

Ye shall have double. (7) "An allusion to God's blessing Job after his afflictions, when he gave him double to what he had before. (Job 42:10. Comp. Zech. 9:12.) As the first-born had a double share in his father's estate; (Deut. 21:17.) so the Jews, when converted to the Christian faith, will recover their birthright, which they had forfeited by their infidelity, as Esau did, and be esteemed as the first-born, or elder brethren in the church of God." Louth. The apostle and Jewish converts to Christianity had this birthright or precedence, in the primitive times; and indeed the Scriptures, almost all written by Israelites, and in every age received by Christians of all nations as "the oracles of God," give this double honour to them. The restoration also of the converted Jews to their own land, where they shall permanently enjoy their double, seems to be predicted.—"Ye shall inherit the land the second time." Sept.

I will direct, &c. (8) "I will give them the reward of their work with faithfulness." Bp. Louth. This translation does not well accord to the context, or the language of coincident prophecies.—"I will give them grace to serve me in spirit and in truth." Louth.

V. 10, 11. The church here answers to those gracious assurances, which had been given her, declaring that she greatly and inwardly rejoiced in the Lord her God, and anticipated the glorious times which had been predicted. For he had arrayed her with his salvation and righteousness, as her covering and ornament, in order to her espousals to himself; for which he thus made preparation, as the bridegroom was used to deck himself with ornaments, and the bride to adorn herself with the jewels presented to her. (Notes, 1—3. 52:1. Ps. 132:7—9. Luke 15:22—24. Rom. 3:21—26, v. 22. Gal. 3:26—29.) And she expressed the fullest assurance, that as the earth, or even as the well-cultivated garden, yields an increase of the seed sown in it, so surely would the Lord cause righteousness for his people, and praise and glory for himself, to spring forth before all the nations of the earth. (Notes, 55:10, 11. Ps. 85:10—13. Mark 4:25—29.)—The word rendered "ornaments" is supposed to mean a crown, like those worn by the priests; indeed the whole alludes to the "garments for glory and beauty," worn by the high-priest, and the white linen worn by all the priests. The word rendered decketh himself, properly signifies a priest's habiting himself with the ornaments proper for his office: (Notes, Ex. 28:24, 41. 29:1—7. Rev. 19:7, 8.) and this language is peculiarly applicable to the case of Christians; who, adorned with the robe of righteousness, transferred on them by their great High-Priest, are through him "made kings and priests to our God." (Marg. Ref.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6. The office of the great Redeemer, and the tenor of his gospel, are peculiarly encouraging to the humble and teachable, to those who are burdened with a guilty conscience, and fears of deserved wrath; and who are distressed, through the power of inbred sins and strong temptations. Let such discouraged souls then attend to the voice of Christ; for he was "anointed and sent to bind up the broken heart," to pardon the self-condemned, to break off the fetters from the enslaved, to break open the prison door, and to give "liberty to the captives." But large as his commission is, the proud, impenitent, and stout-hearted, continuing such, exclude themselves from the benefit of it; for, unless they are brought by the holy law, the ministration of death and condemnation to transgressors, and by the convictions of the Holy Spirit, to know themselves, and humbly submit to God; they will neither understand the nature of the blessings conferred by him, "who came to seek and save that which was lost," nor at all desire them.—Whilst the gospel is preached to us, "the acceptable year of the Lord continues;" let then such, as have feared to know the worst of themselves, recollect that if they be but humbled and rendered contrite in heart, and "submit to the righteousness of God," Christ will assuredly relieve and comfort them: but let the careless, the infidel, the profligate, the hypocritical, take notice, that "the day of vengeance of our God" is intimately connected with his "acceptable year." Let none delay; for their limited time of mercy and grace may soon expire: let none despond, who are mourning before God in deep self-abasement; for the gracious Saviour will surely comfort them, and render them both joyful and holy: but let none rest in false joy and carnal confidence; for the rejoicing of every true penitent is connected with love and praise, and they are made "trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he may be glorified."—God is pleased, from age to age, to employ those, who have been thus convinced, humbled, pardoned, and sanctified by his grace, to execute "the ministry of reconciliation" between him and their fellow-sinners. (Notes, 2 Cor. 5:17, 21. 6:1, 2.) They too are sent to comfort the mourners, and to bind up the broken-hearted, and to copy the example, as well as to proclaim the gospel, of their Lord and Saviour. He even employs such persons as instruments of extensive usefulness to his church: and thus we poor sinners of the Gentiles, are honoured to be "workers together with God," for the good of his redeemed people. But we should desire the good and useful, though laborious, work of the ministry, more than the honour of being "named the priests of the Lord," or than the emolument of "eating the riches of the Gentiles." Indeed all believers may glory in being "the priests of the Lord," separated and consecrated to offer him spiritual sacrifices, and to draw near to him: but let none boast themselves in this glory, or even affect to glory in God on this account who do not endeavour to maintain the sanctity, and to do the duty of their important character.

V. 7—11. True believers will at length be doubly honoured for all their confusion and self-abasement before God, and for all the shame and disgrace which they have suffered from the world; and those who have most despised them, will behold them, (perhaps from afar,) rejoicing in their portion with everlasting joy.—The just and heart-searching God cannot be imposed upon by specious hypocrites; or be induced to accept the most costly oblations from those who would thus make atonements for their injustice: and large donations to pious and charitable uses must be honestly obtained, in order to be accepted of him; or restitution must first be made to those who have been defrauded. (Note, and P. O. Luke 19:1—10, v. 8.) But he will not reject the feeblest attempt of the upright believer: he will direct him and his works, in the way of his precepts and promises, and teach him how to perform his well-meant services acceptably; and he will ratify and seal unto him his everlasting covenant. This chosen generation continues as "a peculiar people," distinguished by their piety, and zeal for good works.

3 Thou shalt also be 'a crown of glory in the hand of the LORD, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God.

4 Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate; but thou shalt be called 'Hephzi-bah, and thy land 'Beulah: for the LORD delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married.

5 For as a young man marieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee: and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee.

6 ¶ I have 'set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, ^{which} shall never hold their peace day nor night: ye that 'make mention of the LORD, 'keep not silence; as well as for their joy and confidence in God; and all who impartially observe them may perceive, and should acknowledge, "that they are a seed which the LORD hath blessed." They may also cheerfully expect that their offspring, which they dedicate to him, and bring up for him, shall inherit the same blessings, and be distinguished in the same manner. Every one of them may therefore rejoice greatly in the LORD his God, who "hath clothed him with the garments of salvation," even the robe of the Redeemer's righteousness; and admitted him to a union and relation to him, of which the most endeared relations on earth are feeble shadows; and which death, that dissolves all our other unions, shall eternally perfect. (Notes, 1 Pet. 1:23—25.) Let us seek first these blessings, rejoice in them, and aim to walk worthy of them: and let us gladly anticipate the time when "righteousness and praise shall spring forth before all the nations" of the earth.

7 And give him no 'rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth.

NOTES.—CHAP. LXII. V. 1—5. Some commentators suppose that the prophet here speaks in his own name, and in that of the prophets and ministers of God in successive generations: but he seems to have spoken, as the type of Christ, and in his name. We may, therefore, consider the Son of God, assuring the church of his unfailling love and care of her, and of his intercession for her, under all trials and difficulties; and that he would never intermit his prevailing pleas, and powerful interpositions, in her behalf, till "her righteousness" and her "salvation shone" forth with the brightness of a lamp, lighted up and burning in a conspicuous place, for the use of all that were near unto it.—(Notes, 46:12, 13. 51:4—8. 60:1—3. 61:10, 11.) By Zion's "righteousness" we may understand, either the righteousness by which believers are justified, or the fruits of righteousness by which that justification is evidenced: and her "salvation" may mean the doctrine of salvation taught in the church; or the blessings enjoyed by believers, as the first-fruits of eternal salvation. These would at length be rendered so abundant and conspicuous, that "the Gentiles," yea, "all kings would behold her glory" in them; and so Zion would be called by a new name, which the Lord would give her. Some understand this of the name of Christians, by which believers are called under the new dispensation: (Notes, 65:13—15. Acts 11:25, 26.) but perhaps it refers to that change, which was about to take place in their state, which is signified by the names afterwards mentioned. Then the church would become a crown, or diadem, which God would hold in his hand, to show his delight in thus honouring her; and her peace, holiness, and happiness would be held forth, to allure others to come, and seek a share of her blessings. She would no longer be looked upon, and spoken of, as a "forsaken" or divorced woman, nor "her land as left desolate," as Judah had been during the captivity: but the Lord would honour her by the name of "Hephzi-bah," or, My delight is in her: (Note, 2 Kings 21:2.) and her land, or the countries occupied by his people, would be called "Beulah," or Married: for the Lord would as openly avow his special favour to his church, as a man does for her whom he publicly espouses. (Notes, 54:4—10. 61:10, 11. Hos. 2:18—20. Eph. 5:22—27.) Indeed "as a young man marieth a virgin," whom he greatly loves, so would Zion's Restorer marry her, and God would rejoice in his love to her, as the bridegroom over his bride. The word rendered "thy sons" may be translated "thy restorer," by altering some of the vowel points; or rather, "thy restorers:" for the verb is plural. (Note, 49:17.) But, perhaps, even this is not necessary. The church is sometimes spoken of as a matron, or as a widow, or a divorced woman, and then and by the arm of his strength, "Surely I will no more give thy corn to be meat for thine enemies; and the sons of the stranger shall not drink thy wine, for the which thou hast laboured.

11 Behold, the LORD hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, 'Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy Salvation cometh; behold, 'his reward is with him, and his "work before him.

12 And they shall call them, *The holy people, 'The redeemed of the LORD: and thou shalt be called, 'Sought out, A city 'not forsaken.

again as a virgin: so that it would not be unprecedented, if the members of the church should sometimes be considered as her dutiful sons; and at others, as standing in the relation of a husband to her. Such variations of images must sometimes occur in a style so exceedingly figurative and highly poetical, (according to the bold genius of eastern poetry,) as that of Isaiah.—The conversion of Constantine, and the prosperity and peace of the Christian church, after the continued persecutions which she had endured, are supposed by some to be here predicted: and yet the language seems to indicate that far more glorious events are intended; and indeed in its most obvious meaning, it predicts the restoration, and honour, and felicity of Israel, as a nation.—A new name.

V. 6, 7. There is no intimation of any change in the speaker; and if we consider the former verses as the words of the Messiah, these verses are the continuance of his discourse.—The word shomerim, (translated watchmen.) doth properly signify those priests and Levites, who kept watch day and night about the temple, and some of them at certain hours sung psalms of prayer and praise. Lowth. (Notes, Ps. 134:1—3. 135:1, 2.) An allusion may be made to this custom; but "the walls of Jerusalem," not the courts of the temple, would be thus guarded; and the watchmen, on Zion's walls, evidently mean the prophets and faithful ministers of Christ, who are employed to give warning of the approach of an enemy, and also to look out for the coming of her expected Deliverer. (Notes, 21:6—12. 56:9—12. Cant. 3:1—5. 5:7. Ez. 3:17—19. 33:2—9.) These watchmen would be instant in preaching the word, and constant in prayer for the prosperity of the church; and all believers are expected to join with them. These "make mention of the LORD," or rather are "his remembrancers," (marg.) to remind him of his promises: and they are exhorted not to take rest, nor to give him rest; but importunately to beseech him to perform his word: till he shall establish his church in righteousness, peace, and truth, and render her the praise and glory of the whole earth. (Note, 61:10, 11.)—This assuredly is addressed to us also, however we interpret the prophecy. To us likewise it is said, "Let there be no silence to you; and allow no silence to him until, &c." according to the emphatical language of the original. He exhorteth the ministers never to cease to call on God... for the deliverance of his church, and to teach others to do the same. (Note, Luke 18:1—8. vv. 7, 8.)

V. 8, 9. The Lord is here said to have "sworn by his right hand, and the arm of his strength," (Note, 53:1.) or to have pledged the honour of his omnipotence, that he will rescue his church from her enemies. The images are taken from the devastations which were made in Judah, when the enemies of the Jews seized their corn and wine; but when the invaders were vanquished, then the Jews reaped their harvest and vintage, and feasted upon part of them in the courts of the temple, whither they carried their peace-offerings, first-fruits, and other oblations. (Notes, 65:21—23. Lev. 19:23—25. Deut. 12:5—18. 14:22—29. Zech. 9:13—17.) This implies the deliverance of the Christian church from those persecutors, who have often kept from them the word of God, and deprived them of the labours of their ministers, by putting them to death, immuring them in prisons, or driving them into foreign countries. But a blessed change is here predicted, which would be welcomed and improved, in a holy and thankful manner. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10—12. The fiends and ministers of the church are here peremptorily commanded, or most earnestly exhorted, to go through her gates, to cast up a highway, and to remove every obstruction, that the people might come to Zion from the ends of the earth; and to lift up a standard to give them notice, that the time was arrived. (Notes, 40:3-5. 57:14.) For the proclamation was sent forth to the ends of the earth, that Zion's "Salvation," or rather Saviour was come. "Lo, thy Saviour cometh." Bp. Louth. (Notes, 40:9-11. Zech. 9:9,10.)—The Lord Jesus was about to receive his full recompense, in becoming "the Salvation of God to the ends of the earth," and to perform that great work which is before him: (Note, 49:5,6.) and therefore the church would be called, "A holy people, the redeemed of the Lord;" being "sought out" or greatly desired by him in her afflictions, and assured of being no more forsaken.—Many events have been partial accomplishments of this prediction, especially that before mentioned: but I apprehend these were only earnest of more glorious times which are yet to come. The restoration of the converted Jews and Israelites to their own land does not seem to be exclusively intended, as some expositors think; but rather the general prevalence of religion, throughout the world, is predicted in figurative language; of which that restoration will form a most conspicuous part, and introductory to all that still remains to be accomplished.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. We ought to be much encouraged, by firmly believing the unchangeable love of Christ to his church, and his uninterrupted intercession in her behalf, in which he will steadily persevere, till her righteousness and salvation are rendered most conspicuous and glorious: and we should in our several stations, and the due improvement of all our talents, imitate his example. The interests of true religion should be near our hearts, and we ought to be willing "to spend and be spent in promoting them," without seeking our own credit or emolument; and be unwearied in doing good, waiting for our rest in heaven. We must think nothing done, while so much remains undone; and we ought to expect and pray for greater, and still far greater success, by every degree which is vouchsafed us. Our first object should be to promote the purity of the church in doctrine and practice, and her internal peace and unity: for when the gospel of salvation, through the righteousness of Christ and by the sanctification of the Spirit, are clearly professed, and solidly preached and vindicated; and when the holy lives and mutual love of those, who profess and preach this salvation, "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things;" then "the righteousness of Zion shines forth, as a lamp that burneth;" and her brightness makes way for the wider diffusion of divine knowledge.—But her glory and excellency must become very conspicuous, before all kings and nations can behold it; and therefore zealous endeavours to increase knowledge, holiness, and union among professed Christians, tend as much to bring forward the great triumphs of the Gospel, as promoting missions into the remote and benighted regions of the earth: and both should be attempted with active and steady perseverance.—When the scandals of the church shall be removed, and her breaches healed, she will appear as "the perfection of beauty," and be "called by a new name;" and all that behold her excellency and felicity, and the special favour of God to her, will find their hearts allured to seek a share in her privileges.—Whilst we admire the happiness of the church, (constituted of redeemed sinners, yea, reconciled enemies,) in being the object of the Lord's "delight," and as "married" unto him; let us also adore his infinite condescension and love. We may all aspire to these honours; and, coming in the name of Christ, we shall not be refused or forsaken: but we should well consider the reciprocal duties which result from such high relations and obligations; that we may thence deduce motives to faithfulness, obedience, submission, and the most entire and devoted attachment. If God rejoice over us and over his church, "as a bridegroom rejoiceth over his bride;" surely we should rejoice in his favour and service, and desire no other happiness: and, as the true sons of the church, we should heartily espouse her interests, and seek her peace and prosperity. Some the Lord employs as watchmen to defend the walls of Zion: let us then be watchful and faithful, instant in preaching, fervent in prayer, patient in enduring hardship, wholly giving ourselves to the work of the ministry. Others are with them "the Lord's remembrancers:" let these recollect, that he loves to be reminded of his promises and predictions; that he delights in their impurity; and that he commands them "not to keep silence, and to give him no rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth."

V. 8-12. We should thankfully acknowledge, that the Lord has already, in a considerable degree, fulfilled the engagements which he in such a solemn manner entered into with his ancient servants. He has founded a church, to the honour of his name, in this our most remote part of the world, and at present, he preserves it from oppression and persecution: he no longer suffers our adversaries to lock up from us, in an unknown language, the holy Scriptures, which are as food and cordials for our souls; or to pervert them to their own base purposes. We have the full comfort and benefit of public ordinances, of the labours of his ministers, and of every means of edification. Let us be thankful for these mercies, and for all our distinguished temporal advantages, and use them all in a holy manner. Let us delight in attending on his courts, that we may enjoy the consolations of his Spirit; and let us remember that his almighty arm is engaged to effect all that yet remains to be done; and that he has confirmed it with an oath, for our fuller assurance. Let us also endeavour by our examples, prayers, and improvement of our talents, to open Zion's gates, to prepare her ways, to remove obstructions, to forward the admission of citizens, and the lifting up of the standard of the cross, to call them in. Soon it shall be proclaimed in its fullest sense, "Say ye to the daughter of Zion, behold, thy Salvation cometh!" The Lord Jesus will accomplish his work, and his success will be his most valued recompense; (Note, Heb. 12:2,3.) and then all, who name his name, shall be acknowledged to be a holy people, and his church to be "sought out, a city not forsaken," as it has long appeared to be. And we are sure that he will never forsake one, whom he has redeemed and sanctified; and that the cause which he favours will surely prevail.

NOTES.—CHAP. LXIII. V. 1-6. These verses contain a prophetic representation of the victories of Christ over the enemies of his church: for of him the passage must be interpreted, nor can so much as an accommodation of it to any other be admitted. But it is remarkable, that many have understood it of the sufferings of Christ, and of his being covered with his own blood: though nothing can be more evident, than that he is represented by the prophet, as covered with the blood of his enemies, and as a mighty Conqueror and Avenger; and not as a Lamb slain for a sacrifice. Whoever considers attentively what has been proposed on a parallel Scripture, (Notes, 34:) will probably be convinced that Edom, and Bozrah the chief city of Edom, are here to be understood mystically; that the destruction of the chief city of the antichristian powers, and of all that pertinaciously adhere to that cause, are here predicted; and that no other events fully answer to the description; though the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and that of the Roman Emperors and armies, about the time of Constantine's advancement to the imperial throne, have been mentioned as a partial accomplishment of it. 'Though this prophecy must have its accomplishment, there is no necessity of supposing that it has been already accomplished. There are prophecies, which intimate a great slaughter of the enemies of God and his people, which remain to be fulfilled: these, in Ezekiel, chap. xxxviii. and in the Revelation of St. John, chap. xx. are called Gog and Magog.—This prophecy of Isaiah may possibly refer to the same or the like event." Bp. Louth. (Notes, 25:10-12. Num. 24:23,24. Ps. 149:7-9. Ez. 38:39. Dan. 11:40-45. Joel 3:9-17. Ob. 17-21. Zfic. 7:8-20. Zech. 10:5-12. 14:12-15. Rev. 14:14-20. 16:12-21. 18: 19:11-21. 20:7-10.)—The prophet, in vision, beholds the Messiah, returning in triumph from the conquest of his enemies, of whom Edom was the selected emblem, or specimen; and, being struck with his majestic appearance, he inquires, "Who is this," thus returning from Bozrah, with his garments deeply dyed, or stained; being arrayed in glorious apparel, as some mighty Prince; and travelling, no, as one wearied with the combat, but "in the greatness of his strength," and as able and prepared to vanquish every opposing power? To this, Messiah answers that it is He, the Judge, who gives sentence in righteousness against his enemies, performs all his promises, and is mighty to save his church. The prophet again inquires, wherefore his apparel anger, and 'make them drunk in my fury, and I will bring down their strength to the earth.

[Practical Observations.]

7 ¶ I will mention the loving-kindnesses of the Lord, and the praises of the Lord, according to all that the Lord hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness toward the house of Israel, which he hath bestowed on them, according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his loving-kindnesses.

8 For he said, 'Surely they are my people, children that will not lie: so he was their Saviour.

9 In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the Angel of his presence saved them; in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them, all the days of old.

10 But they rebelled, and vexed his Holy Spirit: therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought against them.

11 Then he remembered the days of old, Moses, and his people, saying, 'Where is he that brought them up out of the sea with the 'shepherd of his flock? where is he that put his Holy Spirit within him?

12 That led them by the right hand of Moses with his glorious arm, dividing the water before them, to make himself an everlasting name?

13 That led them through the deep, as a horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble?

14 As a beast goeth down into the valley, the Spirit of the Lord caused him to rest; so didst thou lead thy people to make thyself a glorious name.

15 ¶ Look down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of thy holiness and of thy glory: where is thy zeal and thy strength, the sounding of thy bowels and of thy mercies towards me? Are they restrained?

V. 11—14. It is not agreed, whether God, or the nation of Israel, be spoken of in the beginning of this passage: but it is most obvious to understand it of the Jews, in their rejected condition, calling to remembrance JEHOVAH's ancient mercies to their forefathers, and again inquiring after him. Some of that people, being made sensible of the wrath of God against them, and reflecting how his power had been exercised in behalf of their fathers, and what promises had been made to them, begin seriously to inquire, 'Where is He, who showed such wonders of power and love to Moses and his people? Where is the LORD, who brought Israel up out of the Red Sea, with Moses and Aaron, to whom he had committed them, as a flock to the care of a shepherd, but who could not have delivered either themselves or the people?' (Notes, 51:9—11. 2 Kings 2:14. Ps. 77:14—20.) Where is He, who put his Holy Spirit upon the seventy Elders, to enable them to assist Moses in his too arduous work? (Notes, Num. 11:11—30. Hag. 2:3—5, v. 5.) who led the multitudes of Israel through the deep channel of the Red Sea, (the waters of which he divided by his power, for the glory of his name,) with as much safety and as little obstruction, as a horse passeth in the open plains; and who afterwards guided them through the wilderness, to the rest and plenty of Canaan, as the beast goeth down, after the labour of the day, to feed and lie down in the fruitful valley? (Marg. Ref. m, n.) And would this mighty God of Jacob no more glorify his name, in delivering his ancient people from their calamities? (Notes, 15:19. Ps. 77:5—12. 89:38—48. 90:13—17.)

V. 15—19. The preceding meditations are represented as exciting the hopes and fears of penitent Israel; and here are words prepared for them to take with them, in returning unto the Lord. (Note, Hos. 14:1—3.) They are therefore introduced, as beseeching him to "look down from the habitation of his holiness and of his glory," on the abject condition of their once favoured nation. They inquire, "Where is his zeal for his own glory," his power heretofore exerted in their favour, and his tender compassions for them in their troubles? Were they for ever restrained? (Note, 11—14.) They plead, that even if Abraham and Israel should disown them, or know nothing of them, or could afford them no help in their misery; yet doubtless he would remember his relation to them, and be their Father and Redeemer; (Note, Deut. 32:6.) for his name, (his perfections,) was everlasting and unchangeable. Why then had he so long left the nation to be judicially hardened and blinded, estranged from his fear, and given up to error, unbelief, and obstinacy? (Marg. Ref. z, a. Notes, 6:9, 10. 44:18—20.) Would it not be more glorious to his name to remove the veil from the hearts of his chosen inheritance, to return to their tribes, and to remember his ancient servants, the fathers of their nation?—We suppose a remnant of the Jews to plead thus in behalf of their unbelieving brethren. And they further urge, that the people, whom God had separated from the nations to be his holy worshippers, had possessed the promised land comparatively for a very short season; and their adversaries had long trodden down their holy city and temple. Yet they were still his people, "beloved for their fathers' sake;" whereas the Romans, who destroyed the city and temple, and the nations which have since trodden them down, were never subject to him or called by his name. (Note, Rom. 11:25—32.)—From the entrance of Israel, under Joshua, into the promised land, to the captivity and dispersion of the ten tribes, was 730 years; and to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the dispersion of the Jews, not so much as 1500 years; whereas above 2500 years have passed since the dispersion of Israel, and almost 1800, since that of Judah. The whole tenor of the prophecy evinces, that the Babylonish captivity, and the consequent deliverance of the Jews, were only shadows of the events here predicted. Yet it should be remembered, that the prophecy was delivered while the first temple was standing and frequented, and Jerusalem and Judah in prosperity.—Some render the last verse: "We have long been as those, whom thou hast not ruled; who have not been called by thy name." "Thou hast rejected us altogether, and dost disregard us, as if we had never had any relation to thee, nor ever were called thy people: which sense agrees very well with the present condition of the Jewish nation, which hath continued for many ages, without king, or prince, or sacrifice." Louth. (Note, Hos. 3:4, 5.)

Matt. 3:7—10, v. 9. Luke 16:22—31.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6. Our divine Redeemer will appear glorious in the eyes of all holy creatures, when he shall display his power and justice, in taking vengeance on his obstinate enemies, as well as when, in his piteous mercy and truth, he shows himself mighty to save his people. And, though he deigns not to answer the arrogant questions of proud infidels, he will fully satisfy humble believers of the propriety and equity of his most awful judgments. Once he appeared on earth in apparent weakness, to pour out his precious blood as the atonement for our sins; but he will in due time appear "travelling in the greatness of his strength," and as it were covered with the blood of his enemies. No numbers or power can secure them against his righteous indignation: nor will he need any helpers in this tremendous work; any more than he did, when "his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree." His single arm suffices to effect salvation, as his single sacrifice did to procure it; and his powerful and righteous indignation will uphold him in executing vengeance on his adversaries: yet he may well complain, that among the numbers who call themselves his disciples, there are scarcely any, at least comparatively few, who stand prepared to be zealous instruments in promoting his cause. But "the acceptable year of the LORD" is yet proclaimed, though "the day of vengeance is in his heart," and the vintage which is to be trodden in the wine-press ripens apace. Let then sinners in general, and the opposers of scriptural Christianity in particular, take warning, and seek reconciliation with their offended Judge: or he will "tread them down in his anger," make them "drunk in his fury," and bring down their strength to the earth; and by the example of his vengeance on them, and such as they are, he will bring others to repent and seek his face.

V. 7—19. No sufferings should induce us to forget, or not to mention, "the praises of the LORD," and his mercies to us and to his people; which have been numberless, and infinite like his essential goodness. All our comforts and hopes spring from this source, and all our miseries and fears from our sins. Every one of the human species receives unmerited mercies from our God; but they are far the most favoured who enjoy the benefit of his word and ordinances. (Notes, Ps. 147:19, 20. Rom. 3:1, 2.) He acts towards his professed people as if they were and would be sincere; and he rescues them from many dangers and troubles; till their iniquity or apostasy proves that they were dissemblers. But how great is his mercy towards those who uprightly fear and trust him; who are indeed his children, and neither dissemble with him, nor with their brethren, but copy his example of truth and faithfulness! (Notes, Ps. 32:1, 2. 73:1. John 1:47—51, v. 47.) He is become their Saviour; he "pities them as a father doth his children;" he interests himself in all their concerns, even as if he shared their sufferings; and those who persecute or despise them, are accounted his despisers and persecutors also. (Note, Acts 9:3—6.) "The angel of his presence," the Messenger of the covenant, who, "was in the form of God, and thought it no robbery to be equal with God," assumed "the form of a servant," that in our nature he might bear our griefs and carry our sorrows; and he so loves those, whom he has redeemed by his blood, and taught to trust in and love him, that he bears and carries them with the most unwearied patience. Yet alas! in many instances, they too are rebellious, and "grieve his Holy Spirit," lose their comforts and expose themselves to sharp rebukes and corrections; by which they are brought to renewed repentance and deeper humiliation. The Lord indeed never "becomes their enemy, to fight against them," as he does against those who so vex his Holy Spirit that he will no more strive with them. (Note, Gen. 6:3.)—But whatever a man's sins have been, if he so remembers the Lord's mercies as to be humbled for his ingratitude, and yet be encouraged to hope in his mercy; there is ground to conclude that he is discovering the way of peace.—When sinners inquire after him, who has in other ages glorified himself in saving and feeding his purchased flock, and has given his Holy Spirit to qualify his ministers, and prosper their labours; and when they call to mind his wonderful works of old, in order thence to deduce arguments to plead with him in prayer, that he may glorify himself in saving them also; they are evidently profiting by the sacred records; for whenever we look up, by humble faith and hope, to the Lord, "in the habitation of his holiness and glory," he will be sure to look down upon us in kindness and mercy. His zeal, and power, and compassions are no more restrained, than in former ages; nay, if a sinner been so abandoned to wickedness, that the most eminent saints are induced to give them up in despair; yet if God see them truly humbled and fervent in prayer, he will doubtless be their Father and Redeemer, for the everlasting glory of his name.—Spiritual judgments, by which men are made to err from the ways, and are hardened against the fear of God, are more to be dreaded than any other calamities; (Note, 2 Thes. 2:8-12), and we should most carefully avoid those sins, which provoke the Lord to leave men thus to themselves, and to the deceiver, which he never does without just cause. (Notes, Heb. 10:26-31.) But when any become sensible that they have verged to this dreadful case, they are in a hopeful way to be preserved from it: and they may confidently beg of God to open their eyes, and understandings, and to humble, soften, and change their hearts: and he will assuredly accept their petitions. Nay, such persons soon become proper supplicants for others in the community or family, who are in the same awful situation in which they before were.—Thus, we are assured, that the Lord will shortly remove the blindness of the Jewish nation, and return in mercy to those tribes of his inheritance. Indeed, if all the promises made to their fathers had received their whole accomplishment, in the shortlived prosperity of Israel in Canaan; it might well be considered as laid beneath the largeness of the terms employed. But all the blessings vouchsafed to the true Israel of God, through Christ the promised Seed, in every age, are also to be included: and unknown blessings are yet reserved for that distinguished nation. However, then, God may permit his adversaries to tread down his sanctuary, or to triumph over his people; (Rev. 11:1, 2.) he will hear the prayers of those who belong to him, and deliver them from those over whom he has not borne rule, and who have never been called by his name. (Note, Ps. 79:6-13.)

NOTES.—CHAP. LXIV. V. 1-3. This chapter continues the prayer begun in the preceding; which has been interpreted to be that of the first converts made from among the dispersed Jews, when the nation of Israel is about to be reinstated in the church. These supplicants perceive immense obstacles in the way of their desires being granted, especially from the power of their oppressors and adversaries; but they most earnestly call upon God to appear and remove them all. They long for him to rend the visible heavens in some awful manner, and to melt the mountains that they might flow down as water at his presence; which he could do with the same facility as the fire melts the wax, or the metal; or even as it causes the water to boil. Thus he could make his name known to his adversaries, and put whole nations to confusion and consternation before him. And this would be no unprecedented favour; for when he delivered Israel out of Egypt, he did such terrible things, to crush the power of their oppressors, as they had never looked for, or conceived an idea of: inasmuch, that opposing difficulties, apparently like immovable mountains, melted and vanished at his presence: and the supplicants only entreat a similar interposition, in order again to set them at liberty, and to reinstate them in their privileges.—The commotion of mount Sinai, when the Lord came down upon it, is referred to in this allusion to their former deliverance. (*Marg. Ref. a-c, g. Notes, Ex. 19:16-20. Judg. 5:4, 5. 2 Sam. 22:7-16. Ps. 68:7, 8. Nah. 1:2-6. Hab. 3:2-10. Zech. 4:4-7. have not heard, nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye seen, O God, besides thee, what he hath prepared for him that waiteth for him.

5 Thou meetest him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness; "those that remember thee in thy ways: behold, thou art wroth; for we have sinned: in those is continuance, and we shall be saved."

6 But we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags; and we all do fade as a leaf; and our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away.

7 And "there is none that calleth upon thy name, that stirreth up himself to take hold of thee: for thou hast hid thy face from us, and hast consumed us, because of our iniquities."

those "who waited for him;" and the displays of the divine power and glory, which the people of God yet wait for, will far exceed all that hitherto has been experienced, witnessed, or recorded, since the beginning; and can only be properly conceived of by God himself. Some explain the verse to mean, that no people had ever heard or conceived of any other God, except JEHOVAH, who had wrought such wonders for his people. (Notes, 4:38-13. Deut. 4:32-40.) St. Paul quotes the sense, (though not the exact words of it,) with reference to the blessings of redemption by the death of Christ: (Note, 1 Cor. 2:6-9, v. 9.) and perhaps the leading idea here may be, that nothing too great can be expected from that incomprehensible love, which has provided such a salvation for sinful men. (Notes, Rom. 8:6-10. 8:28-31.)—In many places the inspired writers of the New Testament quote from the Septuagint: but in this and many other instances, where that version materially varies from the Hebrew, they do not. They give the sense of the passage referred to as applicable to the subject before them: but do not confine themselves to a strictly literal translation.—The expression, "As it is written," (1 Cor. 2:9.) uniformly in the New Testament means a reference to the sacred writings, "the oracles of God," and which were revered as such by the Jews; and cannot be understood of any other records.

V. 5. "Thou hast heretofore given merciful proofs of thy favour to our forefathers, who rejoiced in thee and walked holily before thee; and so thou art ready to do to those who awfully and thankfully adore thee in thy ways of justice and mercy. But... thou art displeased with us, for we have done wickedly before thee; whereas, if we had the grace to continue in those ways of thine, we should be sure to be saved." Bp. Hall. "Thou showest favour toward our fathers, when they trusted in thee, and walked after thy commandments: they considered thy great mercies."—"In them is continuance," that is, "in thy mercies, which he calleth the ways of the Lord." (Ps. 25:10).—"Thou hast met him who rejoiced and wrought righteousness: these" (all of this character in every age,) "will remember thee in thy ways. Behold thou hast been angry, for we have sinned: in these" (in thy ways) "is perpetuity, and we shall be saved;" or "may be saved." This is a literal translation of the verse, which is considered by Bishop Lowth as inexplicable, without entirely conjectural alterations of the text.—"The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting," (the very Hebrew word here used,) "upon them that fear him." (Ps. 103:17). "He waits," perpetually on his mercy-seat, "to be gracious;" "he meets" his worshippers, through every generation, in his ordinances. In these is perpetuity; they are not like the changeable fashions and customs of men: and therefore, though the God of Israel had been wroth with his people for their sins; yet they had now begun to seek him, as the God who had met and blessed their fathers, when they rejoiced in obeying and serving him, and they trusted that he would meet and save them also. (Notes, Ps. 37:4, 112:1. Mal. 3:13-18, v. 16-18. 4:2, 3. John 7:14-17, v. 17. Acts 10:1-8). The original word (נָחַם) rendered "continuance," means an indefinite duration, the beginning or termination of which is hidden from man. 'Notat integrum cuiusque rei, de qua sermo est, durationem.' (See Robertson's Thesaurus.)—"We have been guilty of great offences, whereby we have provoked thine anger; but thy mercies endure for ever, and thy gracious promises are still the same: and this encourages us still to trust in thy goodness." Lowth.

V. 6-8. "The best actions of the best men have a great alloy of imperfection. When the Hebrew language would express the most excellent in its kind, it makes use of the plural number. Here "righteousness" is the most perfect righteousness men can attain to." Lowth.—"The converted remnant, supplicating in behalf of the Jews are evidently taught to confess their own sins, as well as those of the nation in every age. (Note, 53:4—6.) Instead of "the people of God's holiness," as they were by profession, "they were all as an unclean thing." Instead of the robe of righteousness and salvation before spoken of, (Note, 61:10, 11.) "all their righteous deeds were as a rejected garment;" (Bp. Lowth;) a garment thrown away, as polluted and worthless. Not only the moral, ritual, or traditional works, (by which the Jews had long sought to justify themselves, neglecting the Saviour and his righteousness,) were abominable, because proud, hypocritical, and unbelieving; but even their present endeavours to seek and serve God, were so imperfect, and mixed with defilement, that they were wholly unmeet to form a robe, in which to appear in his holy presence.—A singular noun, like that plural here rendered "filthy rags," is frequently rendered ornament, or ornaments, (49:18. Ex. 33:6, 2 Sam. 1:24. Ez. 16:7, 11.) and some would render it so here, and explain it exclusively of "works done to be seen of men;"¹ ostentatious, hypocritical, and vain glorious services, designed both to acquire human applause, and make compensation for the want of true holiness." (Notes, Matt. 6:1—6.)—But this construction is contrary to most, if not all, the old versions; the expression, "all our righteousnesses are as ornaments," (for there is no epithet,) is obscure and ambiguous; and these penitents, in confessing their own sins and those of their nation, are supposed only to mean the sins of their past lives, or present actual transgressions, without any humiliating acknowledgment of the imperfection found in their repentance, prayers, and best services. How far Christians should adopt the strong language of our translation, in respect of those righteousnesses which are "the fruits of the Spirit," is another question. "The fruits of the Spirit" are in themselves most excellent; but the good works which the best of men perform, are not the unmingled "fruits of the Spirit;" for the remainder of indwelling sin greatly alloys them. They are all defective, as to reverence, faith, love, gratitude, and fervency, and are therefore "rags;" they are all mixed with what is positively wrong, as wandering, foolish, and sinful imaginations, or improper motives; and so "polluted" and unmeet to form their robe of righteousness before God. And the more humble and spiritual men become, the greater abhorrence have they of this corrupt alloy; the more they notice, lament, and confess it; and the readier they are, without affectation or direct intention, to use the most humiliating language of Scripture concerning themselves and their services. (Marg. Ref. q, r).—Because of these things, however, the prosperity of Israel was as "a withered leaf;" their iniquities had been as the wind to scatter them abroad throughout the earth: (Note, Jer. 4:11—13, v. 12.) and there was scarcely one of them, who heartily called upon God, or exerted himself to lay hold by faith, on his power, truth, and love: for he had hid his face from them, and they were consumed, or dissolved, because of their iniquities. Yet they would still plead with the Lord, as their heavenly father; (Notes, 63:11—19. Matt. 6:9.) they confided in his wisdom and mercy; and, being the work of his creating power, as individuals, and as his chosen nation, they were willing to be disposed of at his pleasure, like clay in the hand of the potter. (Marg. Ref. z, a. Notes, 29:13—16. 45:9, 10. Jer. 18:1—6. Rom. 9:19—21.)

V. 9—12. The supplicants here continue to deprecate the extremity of the Lord's displeasure, and his perpetual remembrance of their sins: they still plead with him, as his people, chosen as such in Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and call upon him to consider the desolations of their land. The cities, once inhabited by his worshippers, are now either entirely destroyed, or inhabited by infidels and idolaters, especially Jerusalem their holy city; and their temple with all its furniture and ordinances are utterly wasted: and would not the Lord be satisfied with these their long-continued miseries? Would he still refrain from interposing? Would he reject their prayers, and still persist in his hot displeasure to afflict them?—All these circumstances fix the prophetic meaning to the Jewish nation, rather than to the Christian church. And the desolations and miseries of the Jews, since their rejection of the gospel have so immensely exceeded, in degree and continuance, all they before endured: that, (though we need not exclude the Babylonian captivity, or even the ravages and

CHAPTER LXV.

JEHOVAH declares his free mercy in the conversion of the Gentiles, and his justice in punishing Israel for unbelief, idolatry, and wickedness. He shows that he preserved the nation for the sake of a chosen seed to arise out of it; and contrasts the blessedness of his servants, with the miseries coming on the unbelieving Jews, 8—15: and predicts the glories and privileges of the church in the latter days, 16—25 profanations of Antiochus Epiphanes,) we must consider their condition, from the days of Christ to the present time, as length to terminate in the conversion of Israel, and restoration to the holy city and land, as the grand accomplishment of these predictions. (Notes, Gen. 49:10. Deut. 4:25—28. 28:28—64.)—It should be kept in mind, that there were no tokens of the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, or of the desolations of the land, when Isaiah wrote this prophecy.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The difficulties, which occur in our path or work, should excite us to more vigorous exercises of faith in the omnipotence and faithfulness of God, and to more fervent prayers for his interposition; for when he pleases to "rend the heavens and come down," the most insuperable obstacles remove in an instant: and we can never want a prevalent plea with him thus to interpose, when we are seeking the glory of his name, and the enlargement or prosperity of his church: for he will assuredly "make his name known to his adversaries, that the nations may tremble at his presence." (Note, Rev. 1:7.)—The deliverances, which the Lord works for his people, are sometimes as unexpected, in the manner and season of them, as his terrible judgments on his enemies are to them. The sacred records of the ancient church have been transmitted to us, to encourage our hopes and prayers, for personal and public mercies, according to the promises, and the nature of our dispensation. But who has heard, or seen, or conceived, anything equal to the love of God, in "sending his Son to be the propitiation for our sins?" Can we really believe this truth, and then think any thing too great to be expected from his power, truth, and mercy? We have very faint conceptions of the glorious things, which are prepared for his church on earth; and our ideas of the felicities of heaven are far more inadequate: let us then trust in his word, and patiently wait for him to terminate our sorrows and complete our joys. If he have taught us to "rejoice in working righteousness," and to "remember him in his ways;" he will doubtless meet us with supports and comforts in his ordinances, and perfect his work in us. We have indeed grievously sinned, and provoked him to anger: yet Jesus continually intercedes; the way of access and acceptance is always open; and those who come to the Father by him, shall be "saved to the uttermost;" and for ever.—But we must confess, that by nature "we are all as an unclean thing, and that all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags." Thus it was with every one of us, when strangers or enemies to him; and even now our few good works, in which there is real excellency as "the fruits of the Spirit," are so defective and defiled as performed by us, that they need to be washed in "the Fountain opened for sin and uncleanness." They, therefore, who confide in their own merits, will fade as a leaf, and will be driven, by the wrath of God against their iniquities, into eternal misery.—But alas! how few are there, who even appear to call on the Lord with their whole hearts, or stir themselves up to lay hold of him! Without this earnestness we cannot hope to prevail! but the vilest prodigal, who, being "come to himself," desires to return to God with humble confessions and supplications, may approach him as a Father, and plead with him, as the "work of his hands;" nor need he hesitate to cast himself unreservedly on his sovereign mercy, to be disposed of as he pleases. This seems to unbeliever a desperate venture, but it is in fact our only safety: for in this manner we engage all the promises and perfections of God on our side; which are all against us, whilst we refuse unreserved submission, urge self-excusing pleas, or allow any other confidence. But it well consists with this unreserved submission, to deprecate the severity of God's deserved wrath, and to pray to be visited with the salvation of his people.—Even they, who are consciously unworthy to ask the least favour for themselves, in their own name, will be most graciously accepted, when they plead, in the name of Christ, for their fellow-sinners and for the church of God: and though he may delay for a time to answer their prayers, that he may exercise their humble faith and patience; yet he will not always "restrain himself and hold his peace," or "afflict very sore," any of those, who call upon his name and hope in his mercy, through the atonement and intercession of Emmanuel.

chapters might seem to intimate, that God had treated the nation of Israel with undue severity: but in this he answers the supplicants, and shows them the reasons of his past conduct, as well as his gracious purposes in future towards them, and the church in general. The subject is so arranged, that the Lord seems to have the whole nation of Israel, and all their generations, at once present before him, and sometimes to address one company, and sometimes another: because they have been treated with such marked severity, for the rebellions of the nation, during the whole time they continued the professed people of God, and not for the sins of any one generation exclusively. St. Paul quotes these verses, to show God's purpose of calling the Gentiles, and casting off the unbelieving Jews. (Note, Rom. 10:18-21.) And the Lord here seems to mention this part of his conduct, to show that he did not reject the nation for want of a disposition to mercy, though he acted according to his wise and holy sovereignty in the exercise of it. The heathen nations did not seek after him, or call on him, nor were they called by his name; yet, without their solicitation, the preachers of the gospel were sent among them. Thus was he "sought of," or, "made known to," them that asked not for him; and "he was found of them that sought him not," for when they were pursuing their sinful projects, and devoted to their idols, without knowing or thinking any thing about the God of Israel, he demanded their attention, called on them to look to him for salvation and happiness, and disposed their hearts to obey the call: and thus he showed towards them "the unsearchable riches" of his grace.—"The Gentiles, which knew not God should seek after him, when he had moved their hearts with his Holy Spirit: but the Jews had these blessings continually proposed to them; and Christ and his apostles invited them first to partake of his salvation. Thus JEHOVAH spread forth his hands full of mercies, and earnestly exhorted them to accept of them, and he persevered in this all the day long: (Notes, Prov. 1:24-31. Matt. 23:37-39. Luke 19:41-44.) but they persisted in rebellion, and preferred their own vain devices and evil ways; their sabbath-day infidelity, their pharisaical hypocrisy and traditions, and their ambition, covetousness, and iniquity, to all the blessings of the Gospel and the kingdom of the Messiah: and thus they justly merited to be cast off, and to experience all the miseries which have since overtaken them.

V. 3-7. No doubt the Lord guided the mind of his prophet, to draw the character of the Jews in such a manner, that in might serve for a reproof of the people in his own times, as well as for the warning of after ages. They were a people, who continually provoked God in the most avowed manner, even in his more immediate presence, at Jerusalem and the temple. In contempt of his law, they chose to sacrifice in gardens and on high places: nay, they "burnt incense" also "upon altars of brick" or tile, or on the tops of their houses: (Jer. 19:5. Zeph. 1:5. Notes, Ez. 20:21-25. 2 Kings 23:12,13.) though this ought to have been done by none but the priests, within the sanctuary, on "the golden altar, or on their censers.—Because God had made the touch of a dead body, or grave, a ceremonial uncleanness; (Note, Num. 19:11.) they abode, or dwelt, and lodged among the tombs, for superstitious or idolatrous purposes; and as using witchcraft or necromancy: and, despising his authority, they ate swine's flesh, and carried even the broth made of unclean meats, or parts of the abominable sacrifices to their idols, in their vessels, perhaps for acceptable presents to their friends. (Note, Lev. 11:3-8.) These were evidences of their self-will and presumptuous rebellion, and preference of their own inventions to the appointments of God, and of their carnal enmity to him and his holy service. Yet, at the same time they were full of a proud opinion of superior sanctity, and despised others as unworthy to come near them. (Notes, Matt. 9:10-13. John 9:27-34. v. 34. Rev. 3:17.) This hateful temper was peculiarly prevalent among the Pharisees, especially in the days of Christ: and, notwithstanding their hypocrisy and iniquity, they deemed themselves the only favourites of heaven, and could disdainfully say to a poor heathen, or publican, or harlot, even when penitently crying for mercy, "Stand off, keep thy distance, I am holier than thou." (Note, Luke 18:9-14. P. O. 1-17.) These were exceedingly abominable to the Lord: even as smoke is offensive to the man, who has it continually under his nose. The nearer they approached to him, the more he abhorred them; and thus they kindled his indignation, and rendered it as "a fire that burneth all the day." Their sins from age to age being written before him; he would not always keep silence, but would certainly recompense upon the generation who crucified Christ and rejected his gospel, all the iniquities of their fathers as well as their own transgressions. (Notes, Matt. 23:29-36.) and, as their posterity have ever since persisted in the same spirit of enmity to Christ, they have inherited as a legacy this sentence denounced upon that generation.—The swine was the most common sacrifice among idolaters; and therefore more abhorred by conscientious Jews, than any other unclean animal.—By "the broth of abominable things," many understand the kid seethed in his mother's milk, which is therefore forbidden in the law. (Note, Ez. 23:19.)

Therefore will I measure their former work, &c. (7) "I will pour into their bosom the full measure of their former deeds." Bp. Louth.—The idolatries of former ages, committed by Israel, having been filled up as a measure, by crucifying Christ and persecuting his servants, were punished in the judgments inflicted on that subsequent generation of the nation.

V. 8-10. In the bunch of unripe grapes, which is at present of no value, the new wine is contained in embryo; and therefore the owner gives orders that it may not be destroyed, "because a blessing is in it." Thus the nation of Israel has been spared through many generations, for the sake of those believers, who shall hereafter arise from it: and the Jews have been preserved a distinct people, that all men may witness this remarkable accomplishment of ancient prophecies and promises. Had not the Lord kept this mercy in store for the remote posterity of "his servants," Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, he would have destroyed the whole nation by the Romans and others, when they were cast out of the church. (Notes, 6:13. 9:21-23. Matt. 24:21,22. Rom. 11

14 Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit.

15 And ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen: for the Lord God shall slay thee, and call his servants by another name:

18 But be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create: for behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy.

19 And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying.

20 There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die a hundred years old: but the sinner, being a hundred years old shall be accursed.

22-32.) But he had determined in process of time to bring a spiritual seed out of Jacob, to inherit the privileges of his true people on earth and in heaven. Of these Canaan was a type: and these privileges may be denoted by Sharon and Aclior, two distant parts of the land, feeding flocks and herds for their use, when they should have returned to seek the Lord.—It seems also evident that the nation, when converted, will be restored to their own land, and enjoy its productions as in ancient days. (Notes, Jer. 31:35-40, Ez. 48:) There was indeed "a remnant, according to the election of grace," reserved when the Jews were rejected: but the events above-mentioned seem more immediately predicted. (Marg. Ref. Note, Rom. 11:1-6.)

As the new wine. (8) "When one findeth a good grape in a cluster, &c." Bp. Louth.—A few good grapes are found in a cluster of bad ones. I will not destroy the whole nation, for the sake of a few good, which spring out from among the rest. Louth.—This translation can never be supported.— מִן הַיֵּינֵק, (from יֵינֵק, possidit;) Mustum, ... sic dictum, quod potum, hominem facillime possideat, ... mentemque e recta sua sede expellat, ... Vinum novum. In Robertson. Must, or new wine. It is translated to this sense, I believe, in every place where it is used, and it occurs nearly forty times. Whatever induced these learned Hebricians, thus to render the word in a sense which it no where else bears; the translation serves to hide the true meaning of the passage from the unlearned reader; and shows how easily this may be done, by these and similar methods, when supported by those who are in reputation for learning.

V. 11, 12. The Lord here addresses the idolatrous Jews, who willingly forgot mount Zion, to offer sacrifices to a whole troop, a great number of worthless idols; furnishing out a table and feasting together in honour of them. (Note, Gen. 30:11.) Or, the words "Gad" and "Meni," (marg.) translated "troop" and "number," may be the names of idols. 'Preparing a table to the demon, and filling a mixture,' (or, a drink offering of mixed wine,) 'to fortune.' Sept.—The holy Scriptures did not deign to explain more clearly what these objects of idolatrous worship were; but chose rather that the memory of the knowledge of them should be utterly abolished. And God be praised, that they are so totally abolished, that we are quite at a loss to know, what and what sort of things they were. Schimidius in Bp. Louth. What perverse pains then do many learned men bestow to bring them again to light; and to explain that which we should be thankful to God as almost wholly forgotten! But these abominations are so consigned to oblivion, that the meaning of the sacred writers cannot be ascertained.—Though the Jews in the days of Christ, and in succeeding ages, did not commit gross idolatries; yet they manifested the same spirit of rebellion, perverseness, and enmity to God. He therefore added, that he would number them to the sword, as criminals ordered for execution, and like them they should bow down to be slaughtered: because when Christ and his apostles called them, they would not answer, nor be obedient, but deliberately chose and persisted in those things, in which he could not delight; that is, such as he utterly abhorred. (Notes, 50:1-3, Matt. 21:33-44.)—Wherein I delighted not. (12) Note, Jer. 7:31.

V. 13-15. When the Romans were about to besiege Jerusalem, the Christians, perceiving the signals of approaching desolations, and obeying the directions of their Lord, left the devoted city and land; but the bulk of the nation, pertinaciously defending themselves, endured the extremest miseries. Thus the Christians were well provided for, in all respects, and rendered abundantly joyful in the Lord, while the Jews were perishing with hunger and thirst, and were howling with anguish and despair.—Nay, so great were their obstinacy and misery, that the chosen, or elect servants of God could think of no more dreadful curse, to deprecate from themselves and their friends, than the judicial blindness and hardness of heart, the wickedness and punishment of a Jew! (Notes, Jer. 29:21-23, Zech. 8:9-15, v. 13.) In a short time, millions were slain by one dire massacre after another; the nation was cut off from being the people of God; and "Jews" was no longer the distinguishing appellation of JEHO-

VAH's worshippers, but he has called his servants by another name, even by that of "Christians." (Note, 62:1-5.)—"The Lord God . . . shall call his servants by another name." (15) "This may mean changing the name of Jew into that of Christian." Louth. This confirms the opinion, that God himself, by immediate revelation, gave the name of CHRISTIANS, to the disciples of Jesus; which they have borne in all ages and nations ever since, to this present day. (Note, Acts 11:25, 26, v. 26.)

V. 16. The introduction of the Christian dispensation, and the rejection of the Jews, or Israelites, made way for the propagation of true religion among the nations, which could not so readily be done, whilst the Jews continued the peculiar people of God, and the worship of the temple was maintained. So that the events before predicted, came to pass, in order that men in every part of the earth might bless themselves in the name of the God of truth, or seek happiness from him, (Notes, Gen. 12:1-3, Ps. 72:17-19,) and that they might swear by his name as his worshippers, and not by that of any idol. The truth of the Scriptures being clearly demonstrated, by the accomplishment of these prophecies, would conduce to the conviction of the nations; lead them to regard JEHOVAH as "the God of truth," worthy to be feared and trusted; and excite them to imitate his truth in their professions and engagements. (Notes, 45:23-25, Ps. 22:27-31, Jer. 16:1-21, Zech. 2:10-13, 8:20-23, Mal. 1:9-11, John 4:21-24.)—This may have some reference to the success of the Gospel among the nations, in the days of the apostles, and in the subsequent ages; but it more immediately relates to the time, when the troubles of the church shall be past, and as it were forgotten; and when God will forgive, and no more look upon the sins which occasioned them: when the Jews shall again be called into the church, and the fullness of the Gentiles be converted.—The Hebrew reads AMEN: so the expression, ("the God of truth,") may properly be understood of Christ, who is "the true God," (1 John 5:21,) and called AMEN, or, the Truth, Rev. 3:14, probably in allusion to this place; (Comp. 2 Cor. 1:20,) and the words import, that all spiritual blessings shall be derived from him: Louth. (Notes, 2 Cor. 1:17-20, 1 John 5:20, 21, Rev. 3:14-16.)—Our Lord is the only person, recorded in Scripture, who used the words rendered "Verily I say unto you," or "Verily, verily, I say unto you," and the original is "Amen, Amen." (Notes, Matt. 6:5, John 3:3.)

V. 17-19. The apostles Peter and John use the expressions, "new heavens, and a new earth," for the heavenly state, after the end of the world and the day of judgment; (Notes, 2 Pet. 3:10-13, Rev. 21:1-4,) and St. Peter says, that "we look for it according to his promise," which may refer to this very passage: yet the context requires us to interpret the words, in this place, of that state of the church on earth, which shall most resemble the world of glory, in knowledge, holiness, and felicity, and which will terminate in it. (Note, 60:15-22.)—By the new-creating power of God, the circumstances of the church, and the character of men, shall be so altered, that it will appear as entirely a new world; so that the former confusions, iniquities, and miseries of the human race, shall be no more remembered or renewed. (Note, Rev. 20:1-6.) The servants of God are therefore commanded to rejoice in this new state of things, which he was about to create: for he would make Jerusalem, (the true church,) and all her inhabitants joyful, and a joy to all around them: nay, he would rejoice in them, and put a final end to all their sorrows and complaints. (Notes, 25:8-8, 35:8-10, Zeph. 3:14-20, Rev. 7:13-17.)

V. 20. The approaching happy condition of the church is next described, under a variety of images, many of which we have not before met with. Longevity is here promised, and premature death seems excluded from this state. "From that time," children shall not generally be cut off in infancy, nor even old men till they have filled the measure of their days. Inasmuch, that he shall be thought to die in his youth, who lives to the age of a hundred years: whilst the sinner, who lives to a hundred years of age, shall at last die accursed; or, he that shall die at the age of a hundred years, shall be considered as dying in his youth, as a punishment for his sin.

21 And they shall build houses and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them.

22 They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands.

23 They shall not labour in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the

The event alone can certainly determine whether this is meant literally or figuratively; but it is evident, that the universal prevalence of real Christianity would so terminate wars, murders, contention, idleness, intemperance, and licentiousness, as greatly to lengthen out the general term of man's life. Many diseases, which now destroy thousands and tens of thousands, in the prime of life, and communicate distempers and feeble bodies to succeeding generations, would in that case scarcely be heard of any more; and thus the human constitution would soon be greatly improved, and children would generally come into the world more vigorous and healthy, than they can do while vice so greatly prevails. What God may further intend in this matter we cannot determine.—The prophet describes this renovation of the world as a paradisaical state, and such as the patriarchs enjoyed before the flood, when men commonly lived near a thousand years. So that he that died at a hundred years of age, would have been looked upon as dying in his childhood: and be judged to have been cut off in the beginning of his years, as a punishment of some great sins he had committed.* Louth.

V. 21—23. Here the outward peace of the church, and her freedom from persecutions, seem principally intended. Every one in those happy days shall be allowed to possess the fruit of his labours, and shall live long to enjoy it: and even to wear it out. (Deut. 28:30—32.) for their days shall be as the days of a tree. An oak is supposed to be meant, which will sometimes endure a thousand years from the time when it is planted, till that of its total decay: and thus the days of God's chosen shall be as those of the antediluvians.—But may not this refer to the thousand years during which Satan shall be bound up, and the prosperity of the church continue? (Notes, Rev. 20:1—6.)—Nor will children then be the trouble of their parents, heirs of trouble themselves, or “a short lived race.” Bp. Louth: but their blessings shall be entailed on their offspring also.—The converted Gentiles, as well as the Israelites, will be owned as the children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, “the blessed of the Lord,” and with their posterity inherit the blessings promised to them and their seed. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 6:17—9. Gen. 12:1—3. Ps. 115:14—18, vv. 14, 15. Rom. 11:16—24. Gal. 3:26—29.)

V. 24, 25. (Notes, 58:8—12. Jer. 29:11—14. 33:3. Dan. 9:20—23. Acts 4:29—31. 12:12—17.) The prayers of the people shall then be answered without delay, and in the most abundant manner: for, whereas we now pray, that “the knowledge of the glory of God may fill the earth as the waters cover the sea,” and ages pass on before our prayers are answered: their desires in this respect shall be granted before they speak: for then “the name of God will be hallowed, his kingdom come, and his will done on earth,” in great measure, “as it is in heaven.” (Notes, Matt. 6:9. Rev. 11:15—18.) The malignant dispositions of sinners of every description will then be most completely mortified, and they will all become harmless, amiable, and harmonious. (Notes, 2:2—5. 9:6, 7, v. 7. 11:6—9.) The old serpent shall then be deprived of his prey, and have the ancient sentence fully executed upon him. (Notes, Gen. 3:14, 15. Mic. 7:14—17. Rev. 20:1—3.) And thus the church on earth shall be full of peace and happiness, like heaven. None can doubt, that this yet remains to be accomplished.

Shall feed together. (25) “Shall feed as one,” as if both were of one nature.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10. The Lord may say of all, who are numbered among his people on earth or in heaven, that “he was found of them who sought him not.” When we were strangers and enemies, “foolish and disobedient, serving divers lusts and pleasures,” he prevented us by the call of his word, and the influences of his grace: and whenever, or in what manner soever, we were disposed to seek the Lord; he first suggested the thought, and created the disposition, and having thus led us to seek and pray unto him, he further made himself and his ways known unto us. (Notes, 42:13—17, v. 16. Eph. 2:4—10. Tit. 3:3—7.) Often he meets with some thoughtful trifler, or remorseless profligate, or prejudiced opposer, and, as it were, says to him, “Behold me, here I am,” come to meet “Look unto me, and be saved,” and a speedy change takes place; Saul is found among the Christians and apostles, and a spiritual worshipper appears in the church of God: whilst others, brought up under the gospel, to whom the Lord daily “stretches forth his hands,” proffering salvation to them, blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them.

24 And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear.

25 The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord.

grow more and more rebellious, and follow their own perverse inclinations and evil courses, in defiance of him. (Notes, Matt. 19:23, 30.)—Too often likewise, he has cause to say of his professed worshippers, that they “are a people, who provoke him continually to his face,” and that they manifest the same ungrateful spirit, and rebellious alienation from him, and the same perverse disposition to prefer their own inventions to his ordinances, truths, and precepts, as the nation of Israel did.—Where the power of godliness is decayed, men become proud of the worthless form: and plausible hypocrites are of all men most prone to look on the ignorant, the erroneous, the careless, the immoral, or profane, with disdain and loathing: nay, they condemn the humble and penitent, and say of those, in whom God delights, “Stand by thyself, I am holier than thou!” When knowledge, gifts, reputation, or religious performances, foster this hateful propensity, they become most injurious to the possessor: and, however he may admire himself, or be admired by others, he is as odious and displeasing unto God, as “a smoke in the nose,” and nothing more kindles or feeds the fire of his indignation, than such a disposition and conduct. Let us then watch and pray against pride and self-preference: remembering that every sin, and the most secret thoughts of men's hearts are written before God, and will assuredly be brought to light, and recompensed upon every impenitent sinner: and when nations or churches have filled up their measure of iniquity, they will be punished with temporal judgments for their own sins, and for those of their fathers which they have imitated.—Among the various reasons, which induce the Lord to spare ungodly men, one is, that “a blessing is in them.” Some one, or more, or many, perhaps very many, shall descend from them, to form a part of his chosen flock; and therefore he bears with them from year to year, that he may “bring forth a seed out of them to inherit his holy mountain.” All things indeed are for the sake of his chosen people: the kingdom of providence administered, and the frame of nature is preserved, for the display of the glory of God in his church of redeemed sinners. (Notes, 1 Cor. 3:18—23, vv. 21—23. 2 Cor. 4:13—18, v. 15.)

V. 11—25. In every age and nation, the Lord conspires to destruction those who forsake his service to follow their own lusts and devices; and especially such as persist in doing evil in contempt of the call of his Gospel.—Sometimes he makes an evident discrimination on earth, between his servants and his enemies: but this will be uniformly visible hereafter; and whilst his servants will be satisfied with his love, filled with joy, and abound in his praise, his enemies shall endure the extremest miseries, in the regions of despair, where are “weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth.” (Notes, Matt. 8:10, 12. 22:11—14.) That the declarations of God's word to this effect will be exactly accomplished, we may be assured, by the long-continued contempt and miseries of the Jews: for the Lord has indeed left their name to be “a curse unto his chosen,” having cut them off, and called his people by another name; as he declared that he would. But when they shall be restored to their privileges, the truth of God will be rendered still more conspicuous: that all the earth may “bless themselves in him,” render him worship, and swear unto him in truth and righteousness. Then the long-continued troubles of the church shall cease, and her prosperity will commence. But what a change will this be, when the earth shall be filled with spiritual religion, and exact righteousness! It may well be called “new heavens and a new earth,” for as we can scarcely frame an idea of so glorious a scene; so be the inhabitants of the world, in that blessed period, will not be able to form an idea of the wretched and confused state of the earth, during the long-continued and general prevalence of vice and impiety. We shall not live to share this joy and gladness; but we may mix our lamentations over the scenes which we now witness, with rejoicings in the prospect of happier times; and, if we be indeed believers, we shall in heaven share the joy of them when they actually arrive. Our troubles also will soon be terminated by death, and our God will rejoice over us to do us good for ever. (Notes, 61:10, 11. Jer. 32:39—41. Zeph. 3:14—17.) Even the natural evils of the world would be inconceivably diminished, if all men were true and consistent Christians: and their lives would be prolonged, and rendered more comfortable in every respect. Yet if prepared for heaven, and if we have finished our work on earth; we need not complain of dying too young: for all the ends of life will be answered, as much as if we had lived to be hundred years old. But the sinner must be miserable, whether he live to be old, and to "treasure up wrath," or be cut off young, and cast into destruction: and all his planning, building, and labouring must be left to others; whilst he is driven away in his wickedness.—On the other hand, the believer may rejoice even in his temporal labours, that some, perhaps many, will be benefited by them, when he is removed to a better inheritance; where he shall long enjoy the gracious recompense of all his services, yea, even for ever and ever: and he may also hope that his children will be favoured after him, as "the seed of the blessed of the LORD," and pray with much encouragement, for them and his more remote posterity.—Though our prayers are not now always answered immediately, yet they will be in due time: and the more instant and fervent we are in this respect, the fuller evidence we shall possess that the Lord regards the desires of our hearts, and sometimes grants them, before we can express them in words, or whilst we are yet speaking: so that we are employed in praise, when we meant to be pouring out our prayers. But let us especially pray to be changed, from wolves and lions, into lambs and doves, and to be made harmless, gentle, and useful: then we may be assured, that "God will bruise Satan under our feet shortly," and that we shall be admitted to his holy habitation, where none shall hurt or destroy, but all shall be love and enjoyment, for ever and ever.

NOTES.—CHAP. XLVI. v. 1, 2. (Notes, 63:15-19, 64:9-12.) The Jews at all times, and especially in our Saviour's days, were extremely attached to the temple, and its splendid external worship, which was one cause of their opposition to his spiritual kingdom and ordinances. (Notes, Matt. 26:57-62, vv. 61, 62. 27:39-44, v. 40. Acts 6:9-14, vv. 13, 14.) Just before the birth of Christ they had, by king Herod's assistance, almost entirely rebuilt the temple with great magnificence, having been forty-six years employed about it. (Notes, Hag. 2:6-9. John 2:18-22.) To this period the prophecy seems especially to relate: and the Lord addresses them, as engaged in this work, or glorying in it; and reminds them, that heaven was his throne of glory, and the earth his footstool; and that he wanted no house, or resting-place, of their building. (Notes, 1 Kings 8:27. Acts 7:44-50.) The typical intention and temporary use of the temple were nearly accomplished; the labour and confidence of the Jews were vain; and the whole of that dispensation waxed old, and was ready to vanish away. (Notes, Acts 6:9-14. Heb. 8:7-13.) The heavens and the earth, which he made, had long continued and would still remain; but the temple and its worship "had been" for a while, and would soon be no more: for henceforth his temple on earth, to which he would have peculiar regard, would be the heart of the poor contrite penitent, who revered and obeyed, and trembled at his word: whereas those who adhered to the temple and its worship, were proud blind Pharisees and hypocrites, or others, who despised both his authority and his gospel. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 57:15, 16. 2 Kings 22:15-20, v. 19. Ps. 51:17. Matt. 5:3, 4.)

V. 3, 4. The Jews might have urged, that though God did not want the temple for his habitation; yet it was both honourable and necessary, as the place appointed for the offering of sacrifices; but the Lord by his prophet here teaches them, that this institution was about to be superseded, nay, to become a mark of obstinate rebellion to those who adhered to it.—Some interpreters suppose, that he reproves the wickedness of those, who brought their sacrifices to the temple, whilst they were living in the practice of murder, or the grossest crimes: "He that slayeth an ox, killeth a man, &c." Bp. Louth. (Notes, 1:16-20. Jer. 7:8-11.) But it is not to be imagined, that any Jews, during or after the days of Christ, actually offered a dog, or swine's blood, in sacrifice, or that the priests blessed or worshipped he offered swine's blood: he that burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol: yea, they have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighteth in their abominations.

4 I also will choose their delusions, and will bring their fears upon them; because when I called, none did answer; when I spake, they did not hear: but they did evil before mine eyes, and chose that in which I delighted not.

5 Hear the word of the LORD, ye that tremble at his word; Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the LORD be glorified: but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed.

idols. "These two chapters manifestly relate to the calling of the Gentiles, the establishment of the Christian dispensation, and the reprobation of the apostate Jews, and their destruction executed by the Romans." Bp. Louth. The passage indeed does not merely imply, that their hypocrisy rendered their sacrifices abominable to God, though they were his own institutions; but the evident meaning is, that the coming and sacrifice of Christ would virtually abrogate the ceremonial law, and render all its observances nugatory; and that the Jews, who persisted in them, not as indifferent things, but in contempt of Christ and his priesthood, sacrifice, and intercession, would be guilty of as gross an affront to God, as if they had committed murder, or the most atrocious profanation or idolatry. For in so doing, they would choose their own proud and rebellious ways, delight in their own abominations, and show their contempt of JEHOVAH's authority, and enmity to his holiness; even as much as their fathers did, when they were mad upon their idols. (Notes, 50:1-3. 65:3-7, 11, 12, v. 12.) He would therefore choose their delusions, as the means of bringing his judgments upon them: (Notes, 1 Kings 22:19-23. Ec. 1:46-11. 2 Thes. 2:8-12.) and as they rejected and crucified Christ, avowedly for fear of the Romans; he would bring their fears upon them, and the Romans should execute his vengeance on them, in consequence of their unbelief and disobedience. (Notes, 65:11-15. John 11:49-53. Heb. 10:26-31.)

V. 5, 6. The Jewish converts to Christianity seem to be here addressed. They trembled at the word of God, and revered his authority: but, by embracing the gospel, they were exposed to the extreme hatred of their countrymen, who excommunicated and persecuted them for the Lord's sake, and out of a pretended or mistaken furious zeal for his glory. (Notes, Matt. 5:10-12. 10:16-18. Luke 6:21-23. John 9:19-23, 35-38. 16:1-3.) but he assured them, that he would appear to their joy, and for the confusion of their persecutors: which was awfully accomplished in the siege and destruction of Jerusalem; and when the Christians left the devoted city and neighbourhood, retired to Pella, and were preserved in peace and comfort. (Note, Matt. 24:15-18.) The Jews indeed trusted in the external sanctity of the city and temple, yet within their walls, and even in the courts of the temple, the Lord would execute vengeance on them, as his enemies; and their outcries and lamentations would declare that he was rendering a recompense unto them, even for the abuse of those institutions, on which they ignorantly and presumptuously depended for safety.—"The prophet seems to hear the noise of the ruin of the city and temple sounding in his ears. . . . The voice from the temple was verified in that voice, which Josephus tells us . . . was heard in the temple, a voice before the final destruction of it, saying, Let us depart hence." Louth.

Your brethren, &c. (5) Some explain this of the hatred borne to the Jews by the Gentiles, and their cruel oppressions of them: but unbelieving Jews cannot be said to revere, or "tremble at the word of God" (Note, 1, 2.) and the context seems not to admit of this interpretation.

V. 7-9. When the temple should be destroyed, Jerusalem desolated, the instituted worship not only abrogated, but rendered impracticable, and the ancient people of God cast off; it might be apprehended that he would no longer have a church, or at least that the number of his worshippers would be very small. In answer to this rising thought of his people, JEHOVAH by the prophet here assures them that the church should at that time be exceedingly increased, by the addition of the converted Gentiles to the remnant of believing Jews. The ancient church and nation of Israel were not produced in less than four hundred and thirty years, from the calling of Abraham to the promulgation of the law by Moses; but the holy nation, now to be subject to the government of God, should be rapidly formed. Zion, represented as a 8 Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children.

9 Shall I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth? saith the LORD: shall I cause to bring forth, and shut the womb? saith thy God.

10 Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that love her: rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her;

11 That ye may suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations; that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the abundance of her glory.

12 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream: then shall ye suck, ye shall be borne upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees.

13 As none whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem.

14 And when ye see this, your heart shall rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like an herb; and the hand of the LORD shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies.

17 They that sanctify themselves, and purify themselves in the gardens behind one tree in the midst, eating swine's flesh, and the abomination, and the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the LORD.

18 ¶ For I know their works, and their thoughts: it shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and see my glory.

19 And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal, and Javan, to the isles afar off, that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles.

pregnant woman, would be delivered of a son, even before her travailing pains came upon her. (Note, Ez. 1:19.) nay, her children would increase so rapidly, that a nation would seem to be born at once: and they would so speedily arrive at maturity, that it would be as if the earth produced and ripened the harvest in one day. These events would indeed be unprecedented, and such as never before had been heard of; but they would certainly take place: the Almighty God would bring the affairs of his church to so critical a situation, that this deliverance and increase must be afforded her, or she must perish; (Note, 2 Kings 19:3.) and could any think that he, who espoused Zion, and was the father of all her children, would fail of giving her effectual assistance in this extremity? (Notes, 53:9,10. 54:1-5. Gal. 4:21-31. Rev. 12:1-6.)—We may understand the former part of this sentence, of the speedy propagation of the gospel through the world; and the latter part of it of the sudden conversion of the Jews, and their union with the Gentiles into one church, when "God will remove the iniquity of the land in one day." Zech. 3:9. Comp. Mic. 5:3. These two events, though distant in time, yet will agree very much in the swiftness of their progress. Louth. (Notes, Mic. 5:3,4. Zech. 3:9,10.)

V. 10-14. The Lord here calls on all, who love his church, and sympathize with her in her sorrows, to rejoice at the approach of her great prosperity. (Notes, Ps. 102:13-22. 137:1-6. Rev. 11:3-18.) The consolations, which will be prepared for all her children, in the promises and ordinances of the gospel, must be sought by earnest faith and prayer, as the infant desires the nutrimental milk, and draws it out from the mother's breast. (Note, 1 Pet. 2:1-3, v. 2.) Thus all true believers would be satisfied and sanctified by her spiritual provisions, as well as enriched and delighted by the abundance, or the splendour, of her glory. For in due time the Lord would bestow on her peace and prosperity, in large measure, and with durable increase; and he most honourable and renowned of the nations would continue to flow into her, like the perpetual stream, or flowing branches of some large river. (Note, 48:17-19.) Nor would this be any diminution to the privileges of Zion's former children, but an increase of them: as they would be nourished and attended to, with still greater care and tenderness; being peculiarly loved and cherished by the Gentile converts. (Notes, Acts 11:27-30. Rom. 15:22-29.) Nay, the Lord himself would comfort them, not only with the prudent affection of a Father, but with tender blandishments and compassions resembling those of a fond mother. (Note, 60:4-7.) The prosperity of the church would add to their consolations, and cause their souls to thrive more abundantly; whilst the power of God would thus be manifested in favour of his servants, and his indignation in the punishment of his adversaries.—The sacred writer gradually, and almost insensibly, passes from the primitive times, to those more glorious events, to which he so frequently recurs: in which the conversion and restoration of Israel is a prominent part; but it does not appear to be in this place exclusively, or even primarily foretold. (Notes, Rom. 11:11-15. Rev. 19:1-6.)

V. 15-18. This seems a general prophetic declaration of the Lord's vengeance, on all the enemies of his church, through successive generations; especially the destruction of the unbelieving Jews, in the first ages of Christianity, and that of all antichristian opposers of the gospel, in the latter days. God himself would come, with fiery indignation, and the instruments of his vengeance, to "plead with all flesh," and make terrible slaughter among them. (Notes, 34: 63: 1-6.) The persons intended were guilty of many idolatries and superstitions, the description of which seems to be taken from the abominations, to which some of the Jews were addicted in the prophet's days. They sanctified themselves for the idolatrous sacrifices, which they offered in gardens, or groves, behind some one sacred tree in the midst, (or to Achan, an idol so called, and supposed to mean the sun:) and then they feasted on unclean animals, as if in contempt and defiance of God. (Note, 3:4.) These their works, and wicked thoughts, the Lord knew of long before, and would certainly punish: and he would show all nations his glory in the destruction of his enemies, and by the promulgation of his Gospel. (Notes, Ps. 149:7-9. Ez. 38: 39: Joel 3:9-17. Rev. 14:14-20. 16:11-16. 19:11-21.)—"We must not be too positive, in assigning the particular place, time, or manner, how these prophecies shall be fulfilled; because the events are secret, whose causes lie hid as yet in the depths of providence. And the very great obscurity of the prophecies, which are supposed to relate to these matters, is to me a convincing argument, that they are not yet fulfilled." Louth.

V. 19-23. (Notes, 11:11-16. 24:13-16. 60:12. 61:4-6. 65:17-19.) When the standard of the gospel was first set up, the Jews who had been converted to Christ, and so "escaped" the general ruin of the nation, (ὁ σωθῆναι, the saved,) were sent as preachers to the Gentiles: and in like manner, it is probable that God will select some, who have been rescued from the corruptions of antichristianity, to preach to the nations, far and near, where his fame and glory have never yet been heard and seen; even to isles as remote from us, and as little known to us, as this our island was to the inhabitants of the East in the days of Isaiah. The persons thus converted are immediately considered as brethren: and they would be brought, by every method of conveyance then in use in those countries, to Jerusalem, as a sacred oblation to the Lord. This signifies the abundance of instruments and means, afforded for the conversion of sinners, and the admission of the converts into the church; and for their encouragement, edification, and devotedness to God, until they are brought to heaven. (Note, Rom. 15:14-17.)—Ministers were soon raised up from among the Gentiles, in the apostle's days, who ministered before God in holy things, (as the priests and Levites had been used to do,) according to the nature of their dispensation: and ministers will doubtless be hereafter raised up among the inhabitants of those nations which are now sunk in the deepest ignorance and barbarity. For as God intended his new creation to endure before him for ever: so should the seed and name of the church under the Christian dispensation. They too would have their solemnities, Sabbaths, sacraments, and ordinances, 20 And they shall ^{bring} all your brethren ^{for} ^{at} offering unto the LORD, out of all nations, upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the LORD, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the LORD.

in which they would meet before the LORD: and all flesh, or all nations, would thus come to worship before him.—Whereas before, there were appointed seasons to sacrifice; in this there shall be one continued Sabbath.—The restoration of Israel is here implied; but this event cannot be considered as the exclusive meaning. None of Israel could be taken as priests and Levites, who were not of Aaron's family, or of the tribe of Levi: the priests and Levites, therefore, must be ministers of religion from among the Gentiles, or the converted Jews, who were not of that family or tribe: which cannot be the case among the Jews, if the ceremonial law were to be revived, at the restoration of Israel. V. 24. The inhabitants of the holy city, and all who had come thither, are here represented as going out, to look upon the dead bodies of those, whom the Lord had slain for opposing his cause; which are represented as being either eaten by worms, or burnt in the fire. (Notes, Ez. 39:11-16.) But "their worm would never die, nor their fire be quenched;" for whatever external events may be alluded to or predicted, "the worm" and "the fire" represent the place and nature of the punishment of sinners in another world. The fire, which is kindled by the wrath of God, shall not be quenched or cease to torment for ever: the worm of keen self-reflection, and the anguish of an accusing conscience, will endure for ever: because the existence and consciousness of the condemned will be everlasting. (Notes, Matt. 5:21, 22, 29, 30. Mark 9:43-50.)—Some interpret the carcases cast out of Jerusalem, to signify the ungodly who are excluded from the church, and remain under the wrath of God, and the power of their own wicked propensities and evil habits; and who, being thus abhorred on earth, will be miserable and abominable for ever in hell. "Our Saviour . . . expressed the place of torment, under the image of Gehenna; and the punishment of the wicked, by the worm which there preyed on the carcases, and the fire which consumed the wretched victims. Marking, however, in the strongest manner, the difference between Gehenna, and the invisible place of torment; namely, that in the former the suffering is transient; the worm itself, that preys on the body, dies; and the fire, which totally consumes it, is soon extinguished: whereas in the figurative Gehenna, the instruments of punishment shall be everlasting, and the suffering without end; for there "the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." Bp. Louth.

This ends this most extraordinary prophecy; to which nothing similar is extant in the world.—In the other prophecies, God speaks by the prophet, or the prophet says, "Thus saith the LORD." But from the beginning of the fortieth chapter to the end of this book, JEHOVAH, or MESIAH, speaks in a continued discourse, in a few instances indeed noticing and directing the prophet, but still proceeding to speak as immediately from himself.—In the prophecies of Daniel, and in the Revelation of John, as well as the other prophetic writings; there are certain dates, or a regular order, which help us to understand to what period of time each prediction belongs: but in Isaiah, especially in the latter part of the book, the transition from the days of the prophet, to those after the captivity, or rather, those of the Messiah; and thence to the glorious times which we yet expect, and to the consummation of all things, is often sudden and unexpected. And as suddenly the prophecy reverts to the coming of Christ, and events connected with it. This increases the expositor's difficulty; and should increase his caution and diffidence, as to the interpretation given of many parts.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6. No externals, however splendid or costly, can please God, without a humble and upright heart. He wants not, and is not profited by, any of our services; and when we become proud of them, or trust in them; he abhors our attendance even on his own appointments. As he dwells in Christ, our Temple; so, for his sake, "he hath respect to every one that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at his word;" for such persons value his salvation, and learn to love him and keep his commandments. But whatever men substitute in the place of the priesthood, atonement, and intercession of Christ, will be found most hateful to God; and he will as deeply resent this affront to his wisdom, grace, and truth, as any immorality or profaneness whatever. Yet alas! how many in this most important concern, "choose their own ways, and are delighted with their own abominations." But we should be afraid of every deviation from scriptural truth, lest God should give us over to our own delusions.—Those who so fear the reproach or opposition of men, as to refuse the call and reject the salvation of God, will have their fears brought upon them in everlasting shame and contempt.—Seeing, that many have thought they did God service, when they were "hating and casting out" his children; we should take care that our confidence and conscientiousness be scriptural. It will not avail a man to have said, "Let God be glorified," when in proud self-confidence and obstinate rage, he persecuted his people, and refused to ask counsel of his word and Spirit. But those who "tremble at the word of God," need not be alarmed even at the hatred of their professed brethren, or staggered by their "great swelling words of vanity;" as if they alone were the only true church, and all who differed from them were heretics and schismatics. Such boasts and censures are alike unwarranted: God will appear to the joy of the humble believer, and to the confusion of hypocrites and persecutors of every description; their destruction will come upon them in those very places, from those very persons, or by those very means, in which they presumptuously confided for safety; and they shall be accounted the enemies of God with a peculiar emphasis, and be punished with marked severity.

V. 7-14. When the Lord lessens the numbers of his visible church, by cutting off hypocrites and persecutors; we need not fear, but he will supply their places by more valuable persons. He can add converts in multitudes, as though "a nation were born in a day." In the general course of Providence, we must expect to labour, wait, and pray for a considerable time, before we see the success of our work; and ministers must even "travail in birth," by their anxious desires and fervent wrestlings, before children are brought forth unto God. (Note, Gal. 4:17-20.) They must also wait, as the husbandman, for the precious fruits of the earth; and at last be thankful even for a few seeds to their ministry. But when the Lord is pleased to interpose in an extraordinary manner, the work will be done easily, speedily, and beyond expectation. The success, which would richly have repaid the labours of many years, shall crown one sermon; and believers shall grow as rapidly in grace, as converts are made to the Lord. Thus in the days of the apostles, "as soon as Zion travailed she brought forth her children;" "a nation" seemed to be "born in a day;" and the Lord is still able so to influence the hearts of men, that whole kingdoms shall at once, without labour or difficulty, welcome, profess, and adorn the gospel. The time of this deliverance of Zion approaches; and "he who bringeth to the birth, will give strength to bring forth." Let us then say, in admiring faith, "Who hath heard or seen such things?" and not fail to show our sympathy with the church in her sorrows, by pleading continually for her joyful deliverance. Then shall we assuredly rejoice in her joy, and partake of her consolations. And even now, if we diligently attend on the ordinances of God, and desire and seek for "the sincere milk of the word that we may grow thereby," we shall "suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations;" especially if we carefully avoid whatever may prevent our "furtherance and joy of faith." Let us then renounce the vain pleasures of the world and of sin, that we may experience these pure and satisfying joys; and we shall soon be delighted with all the splendour and glory of the church triumphant.—In other possessions, as the number of proprietors increase, the value to each is diminished; but the privileges and felicity of all Christians is enhanced, by every accession of converts to Christ. There is also abundant provision made for the tending and nourishing up of the weakest of Zion's children, who shall "suck the breasts of her consolations, be carried on her sides, or dandled on her knees;" yea, the Lord himself will comfort them through all their tribulations, in such tender love as no human affection can possibly equal, or imagination conceive. (Note, 49:14-16.) But nothing tends more to the true Christian's comfort, than the peace and prosperity of the church. When the honourable of the earth resort to her; believers, as her dutiful sons, rejoice heartily and flourish like herbs in well watered gardens.

V. 15—24. Whenever the Lord powerfully appears for his church, he displays his indignation against his adversaries. Thus the increase of believers, in the primitive times, was attended by tremendous judgments on the Jews; thus the future success of the gospel will be introduced by similar judgments on all opposers; and thus the final salvation of the righteous will be connected with vengeance on all the workers of iniquity. Then by the fire and sword of his indignation will be plead with all flesh, and the slain of the "Lord shall be many:" sinners of every description shall be consumed together; for "he knoweth their works and their thoughts;" and he will "gather all nations and tongues to see his glory." (Notes, Matt. 25:31—46.) In the mean time, he has set his gospel as a sign unto us; and even in these distant isles he sends us his message of love, by those whom "Jesus hath delivered from the wrath to come." (Notes, 2 Cor. 5:18—21. 1 Thes. 1:9,10.) We have heard his name and the report of his salvation: may he open our eyes to see his glory, that we may forward the promulgation of his gospel, and the declaration of that glory, to the nations which have never yet seen or heard it. May the Lord send forth multitudes of able, faithful ministers into all lands, who, by every means and in every way, may gather in his elect from the four quarters of the globe; that all its inhabitants may become members of his church on earth, and inherit his holy mountain, "to the praise of the glory of his grace;" that even from among the benighted Indians and Africans, Chinese, and the inhabitants of Japan, South America, and the islands in the Pacific Ocean, priests and Levites may be raised up to minister before him; and thus to diffuse his salvation further and wider, till "the earth be filled with the knowledge of his glory, as the waters cover the sea."—The Lord will surely maintain and prosper his cause. The heavens and earth which now exist, are indeed "reserved unto fire, to the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men;" but his new heaven and earth shall endure for ever; and so shall the name and seed of his believing people. Let us then hearken to his voice, attend on his ordinances, hallow his sabbaths, and keep his word. For all his enemies, whether they experience or escape his temporal judgments, shall perish: and we shall see all the ungodly "go away into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." "Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not."—If then "thy right hand," or foot, or eye, "offend thee, cut it off," or, "pluck it out;" for it is better to "enter into life, with one eye, or hand, or foot; than having two, to be cast into hell-fire, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched," and "they shall be an abhorring to all flesh."

BOOK OF THE PROPHET JEREMIAH.

JEREMIAH (whose name signifies "The exaltation of JEHOVAH") entered upon the prophetic office about seventy years after the death of Isaiah; during which time the reigns of Manasseh and Amon had intervened, (Notes, 2 Kings 21: 2 Chr 33:) and the first years of Josiah. The nation of the Jews was at that time almost wholly given up to idolatry and wickedness. A short revival indeed took place under Josiah; but the people were, in general, hypocrites in the professed reformation; so that they speedily relapsed into idolatry, and soon became ripe for divine judgments.—Jeremiah prophesied for above forty years preceding the Babylonish captivity, and for some time afterwards; and this book consists chiefly of abstracts from the several messages with which he was sent by God to the people: these are remarkable for being replete with plain and faithful reproofs, tender and affectionate exhortations, and awful denunciations of impending judgments. They are occasionally interspersed with narratives of the hard usage with which the prophet met, and with historical records of national affairs. No exact order is observed in the arrangement of the different prophecies; and the labours of learned men, in classing them, according to the time when delivered, are not altogether satisfactory; but many of them are dated.—Jeremiah was a man of very tender spirit, and he endured many sorrows; but he seems to have been most affected by the miseries of his people, which he both predicted, and witnessed. Having seen the utter desolation of Jerusalem and Judah, he was carried into Egypt by the remnant of the Jews, who rebelliously fled thither: and there he continued to prophesy; till they were at length so enraged by his reproofs, that they stoned him to death, as it is credibly attested by several ancient writers.—A large proportion of Jeremiah's predictions were accomplished during his lifetime, or soon after his death: all those, for instance, which related to the desolations of Jerusalem and Judah, and the adjacent countries, by the Chaldeans; and the return of the Jews from Babylon at the end of seventy years. These, in the way of argument and evidence, were most conclusive to his contemporaries, and the immediately succeeding generations; especially, as the want of historical records renders us unable, in many cases, to explain the prophecies, except from the sacred narrative. But several of this prophet's predictions relate to more remote ages, and some have not yet been fulfilled.—When proud Babylon was at the height of her prosperity, he foretold, not only that the Medes and Persians should prevail against her, but also that she should sink and rise no more; (31:63,64.) which has received a most remarkable accomplishment. He predicted also the abolition of the ritual law, and the union of Israel and Judah in one faith; and the conversion of all nations, (Notes, 3:16—19. 31:31—34.) the dispersion of the Jews, and their preservation as a distinct people in their dispersions, which has been fulfilled to this day; (Notes, 30:10,11. 46:27,28.) the calling of the Gentiles; (Notes, 41:2 16:10—21.) the destruction of idolatry; (Note, 10:11.) and the person and kingdom of Christ, with the introduction of a new dispensation, and exceedingly great and permanent prosperity to the cause of religion; with clear declarations concerning the conversion of the Jews to Christ, and their restoration to their own land. (Notes, 23: 33:)—The comment will show, that this statement is well founded: yet nothing could appear more improbable, when Jeremiah wrote, than many of the events which he predicted; and it is undeniable that his prophecies have been most wonderfully accomplished.—It appears, that Jeremiah's reputation as a prophet, was very high among the Jews, in the time of our Saviour: for when the people were divided in opinion who Jesus was; some supposed him to be Elijah, and others Jeremiah.—His prophecies are repeatedly quoted in the New Testament, as "the oracles of God;" and thus receive the most unreserved sanction of the apostles and evangelists. (Compare 31:15. Matt. 2:17,18. 6:16. Matt. 11:29—9:23,34. 1 Cor. 1:29—31—31:31—34. Heb. 8:8—13. 10:15—17.) These last references are peculiarly important; for in the one of them, God himself is mentioned as speaking the words referred to; and in the other it is said, "Whereof the Holy Ghost is a witness to us." This is decisive, as to the judgment of the inspired apostles, respecting the book on which we now enter; and is peculiarly suited to put us upon our guard against those professed friends of the Scriptures, who speak of these books as venerable, authentic, or genuine remains of antiquity, of great value and high authority; but hesitate to vindicate them as divinely inspired.—A great part of this book is supposed to be poetry; and though Jeremiah is thought inferior to Isaiah in sublimity; (which may perhaps be owing to the different circumstances in which they lived, and the different subjects on which they treated;) yet it must be allowed, that he is admirably pathetic, his descriptions of approaching judgments are peculiarly vivid; and his eloquence is very vigorous and impressive, when inveighing against the shameful audacity of the people in rebellion against God.—It is generally allowed, that the last chapter was added after Jeremiah's death; perhaps by Ezra. It is not known who arranged his prophecies in their present order, or by what means it has occurred that the arrangement appears so irregular and perplexed.

him; as in Ezekiel and in John the Baptist. Some think that he was the son of Hilkiah the high-priest, who found the book of the law in the temple : (Note, 2 Kings 22:8-11.) but, as no intimation is given of this in the subsequent history, the opinion is not at all probable.—Anathoth was about three miles distant from Jerusalem. (Marg. Ref. c.) Jeremiah was appointed to prophesy just after Josiah had effectually begun his reformation: and great things might have been expected from the united efforts of such a king and such a prophet, both young, and likely to continue long to be useful to the nation: yet their zealous labours aggravated the guilt, and thus accelerated the ruin, of their incorrigible countrymen. Jeremiah prophesied forty years before the expulsion of the Jews from the promised land; as Moses had prophesied forty years previous to their entrance into it; but with a very different effect.—Fifth month. (3) Note, Zech. 7:2,

V. 5. The Lord foreknew Jeremiah before he was formed in the womb; and gave him his being for the purpose of making him a prophet to Israel, and to other nations; he separated him, by his fixed determination for this work, before his birth; and perhaps made him partaker of the regeneration of the Holy Spirit, even in his mother's womb. And he let him know this his appointment, that he might prepare for the work assigned him, and apply himself to it. (Notes, Judg.
 13:2-5. Is. 49:1,2. Luke 1:11-17. Acts 9:15,16. v. 15. Gal.
 1:15-24. v. 15.)—This favour is expressed by knowing him, or taking special notice of him: as if a prince should single one particular person out of a multitude, and call him by name, and appoint him to some honourable office or trust. So God expresses the peculiar favour he had to Moses, by saying,
 "I know thee by name." Ex. 33:12,17. The same thing is likewise expressed by God's "sanctifying him," or setting him apart for the prophetic office. . . John 10:36. Louth.
 (Notes, Ex. 33:12-17. Is. 45:1-6. Acts 15:13-18. v. 18.
 Rom. 8:29-31. 2 Tim. 2:19. Heb. 10:28-31. v. 29.) Jeremiah did not only prophesy concerning the Jews, and Israelites: but also the Egyptians, Babylonians, Moabites, and other nations. (Notes, 25: 46:-51.)

V. 6-8. The prophet would have declined, at least for the present, the service to which he was called. He was young and inexperienced; (Notes, 1 Kings 3:5-14. 1 Chr.
 22:2-5. v. 5.) he did not consider himself as competent to so arduous and important an office; and he especially thought himself defective in the capacity of speaking with fluency and pertinency, or with that boldness and presence of mind which were requisite. (Notes, Ex. 3:11-13. 4:10-14. 6:12.) This hesitation, though it arose from humility, and a proper sense of the greatness of the work, was alloyed with a mixture of unbelief, and a timid reluctance to the perils and hardships to which he might be exposed. The Lord therefore overruled his objection, and ordered him not to say that he was a child; for he would embolden and strengthen him to address all, to whom he sent him, and give him utterance to speak all that he commanded him: he ought therefore to dismiss his fears, and be assured that God would be with him to defend and deliver him (Notes, Matt. 10:19,20. 28:19,20. v. 20. Luke 12:11,12.
 21:12-19. v. 15. Acts 4:29-31. 6:9-14. v. 10.)—The word translated "a child" is used with great latitude in Scripture; and frequently signifies one who has arrived at full maturity:
 so that we cannot from it determine any thing concerning the age of Jeremiah, when he entered on his prophetic office:
 though the number of years, during which he executed the prophetic office, shows that he must at this time have been young.—To reprove the faults of all persons, the great men a more than ordinary degree of courage. . . Deut. 31:8. Josh.

V. 9, 10. This seems to have been an appearance of the personal Word, in human form, anticipating his incarnation.
 (Notes, 4. John 1:18.) יְהוָה put forth his hand, and by touching Jeremiah's mouth signified, that he would "give him a mouth and wisdom, which all his adversaries should not be able to gainsay or resist." (Notes, 6-8. Is. 6:5-7.
 51:15,16.) Thus he gave him commission and authority over the nations, not to rule or make war against them, but to denounce the judgments of God upon them; and these judgments would be so certainly executed, according to his word, that he might be said—"to root them out, and throw them down, &c." (Note, 18:7-10.) He was also to declare the Lord's mercies and salvation to his people, which would be effectual to build and to plant them. It may likewise mean, that the tendency of the prophet's ministry would be, to repress the idolatry and wickedness of the heathen, and to promote the knowledge of God and true religion among them: and the desolations to be wrought in some of those nations, which had most obstinately opposed the cause of God, would make way for the planting and building of others in their places, who would be more favourable to it. (Marg. Ref. z, a.)—
 "The prophets are said to do things, when they declare God's purpose of doing them. Thus Ezekiel . . . was sent to "destroy the city." (Ez. 43:3.) that is, to prophesy concerning its destruction. And Isaiah is commanded to "make the heart of the Jews fat," that is, to foretell their obduracy and incredulity. (Is. 6:10.) Louth. (Notes, Is. 6:9,10. Ez. 43: 2-5.)—It may also be added, that God foresaw that the Jews and others would aggravate their past guilt, and even bring down on themselves both spiritual and temporal judgments, by hardening their hearts against the warnings and exhortations of his prophets. And thus the very messages, which, if properly received, would have been the means of their preservation, eventually accelerated and enhanced their punishment. (Note, 2 Cor. 2:15-17.)

V. 11, 12. This vision of the rod of the almond-tree, which is more forward in the spring than any other tree, represented the speedy approach of the judgments predicted against the Jews, and other nations; and was an apt emblem of the prophet's mission, who lived to witness the accomplishment of more of his own predictions, than any other prophet did.

An almond-tree. (11) שֶׁקֶר, from שָׁקַר, to hasten.—
 hastening: 12.—Not only the nature of the almond-tree, but the very sound of the Hebrew word that signifies it, denotes God's hastening to fulfil the prophecies which Jeremiah uttered by his directions. Louth.

V. 13, 14. By another emblem, the Lord showed Jeremiah what was to be the grand subject of his ministry, namely, the destruction of his people by the king of Babylon, whose dominions lay northward of Judea. Jerusalem was represented to him, by a pot, or caldron, boiling, or pouring out steam, as placed over a large fire: for the city was all in commotion, and about to be emptied by that fiery indignation which distressed it. (Note, Gen. 15:17.) The face of this seething pot was towards the north: the place under the caldron, which was opened to receive the fuel, by which the fire was kept up, faced the north: by which the Lord instructed the prophet, that out of the north an evil should break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land. (Notes, 4:5-7. Ez. 1:1
 -12. 24:1-13.)

V. 15. The king of Babylon would invade Judea, and encamp against Jerusalem, not alone, but attended with all those kings and nations, who were his allies, or vassals, and who chiefly inhabited the countries still more to the north of Judea than Chaldea was. (Notes, 34:1-5. v. 1. 43:8-13.
 v. 10. 50:41,42.)

V. 16. Jeremiah would especially be employed, in solemnly denouncing, in the name of God, that sentence against the 15 For, lo, I will call all the families of the kingdoms of the north, saith the LORD; and they shall come, and they shall set every one his throne at the entering of the gates of Jerusalem, and against all the walls thereof round about, and against all the cities of Judah.

16 And I will utter my judgments against them touching all their wickedness, who have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, and worshipped the works of their own hands.

17 Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and arise, and speak unto them all that I command thee: the not dismayed at their faces, lest I confound thee before them.

18 For behold, I have made thee this day a fenced city, and an iron pillar, and brazen walls, against the whole land; against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land.

19 And they shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith the LORD, to deliver thee.

God reminds Judah and Israel of his former kindnesses; and expostulates with them on their ungrateful, un-reasonable, and un-exemplary apostacies and idolatries, 1-18. Their calamities originate from their crimes, 14-18. Their conduct is a breach of solemn engagements; degeneracy from their pious ancestors; undeniable, and inexcusable; the effect of iniquitous lusts, and desperately persisted in, 20-30. It is connected with filly and wearying labour, murder and persecution, useless self justification, and continual changes from one false confidence to another, 31-37.

MOREOVER, the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

V. 17-19. (Marg. Ref. p, q.) God commands the prophet instantly to undertake the office he designed him for, and to discharge it with courage and presence of mind. . . . The Hebrew word is the same in both parts of the sentence, which may literally be rendered thus, "Be not confounded at their faces, . . . lest I confound thee before them." . . . They shall no more be able to prevail against thee, than they could against an impregnable wall or fortress. Louth.—The Lord thus called on his servant to expect the most violent opposition from the kings and all the most powerful persons in the land; that he might understand the nature of the service, and be prepared accordingly: (Marg. Ref. u, x.) but such express promises of protection, support, and deliverance were added, as were fully sufficient for his encouragement. (Notes, 6-8. Matt. 10:16-18, 23, 28:19-20, v. 20. He seems, however, afterwards on some occasions, to have greatly lost sight both of the warnings and the promises. (Notes, 15:19-21. 17:15-18. 20:10-18.)

Let I, &c. (17) "Be not thou afraid of them, lest I should suffer thee to be crushed before them." There is no threat implied here. . . . The particle $\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\iota$ points out the danger which might possibly alarm the prophet's fears, that of being overborne by the opposition he was likely to meet with. He therefore receives special assurances of God's immediate protection and support. Blayney.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. The Lord raises up and qualifies proper instruments for his work, in every age and circumstance of his Church: and when their labours fail to reform degenerate nations, they prove useful to individuals, and leave others without excuse.—He, who formed us in the womb, knew beforehand for what services or purposes he intended us: and if we desire to serve him, he will qualify us for all which he has for us to do or suffer in this world, and carry us through it. But except he "sanctify" us by his new creating Spirit, we shall neither be fit for his holy service on earth, nor his holy happiness in heaven. This is a most invaluable mercy, whenever it is vouchsafed; but the earlier in life, the happier for us and for others: and as the Lord sometimes sanctify even infants, parents may be encouraged to pray for this blessing on their offspring, even from their conception in the womb.—He, who gives grace can alone efficaciously ordain men to be his ministers. (Note, John 15:12-16.) In general, young persons are not so proper for the discharge of this sacred office, in important stations and difficult times, as their seniors; and a modest diffidence arising from conscious unworthiness and inability, is a more favourable token, than self-confidence and a hasty eagerness to be employed. (Note, 1 Tim. 3:6.) Yet the Lord may please to call one, who is a child in years and experience, and apparently of inferior endowments: in this case he will surely make it evident that it is his call; he will overrule all objections, and remove all impediments; he will encourage his servant against dejection, as arising from the concurring influence of humility, and weakness of faith; and also against the fear of man: and he will bear him out in all to which he commissions him; he will "give him a mouth and wisdom, which all his adversaries shall not be able to gainsay or resist;" and will be with him in every work, in which he engages according to the instructions given him.—Whatever the wise men and politicians of the world may suppose or devise, the safety of kingdoms is decided, according to the purpose and word of God; and it greatly depends on the reception which is given to his faithful ministers. When their labours are unsuccessful, and their "prayers return into their own bosom;" and when they are persecuted, injured, and driven away, nations ripen apace for judgments "to root up and destroy" them. But when they are protected and prospered, when their prayers are answered, and the number of true believers is greatly increased; there will be more and more, by their prayers, examples, and exertions, to check the progress of impiety and iniquity; and thus faithful ministers are useful "to build, and to plant," and to prolong the external prosperity of the community, as well as to promote the salvation of souls.

V. 11-19. If we would speak in the name of God with propriety, decision, holy fortitude, and meekness, we must observe attentively his word and works, and study his providence as well as his precepts; this will bring us acquainted with "the signs of the times," and direct our labours and prayers: (1 Chr. 12:32. Note, Matt. 16:1-4.) and though our services are all imperfect and defiled; yet God will graciously show his approbation of all which we do well, according to our measure: and we should thus candidly accept of the well-meant services of each other.—The destruction of the wicked, and the salvation of the righteous, are ripening apace; in both respects the Lord will "hasten his word to perform it." (Notes, Rom. 13:11-14, v. 11, 12. 2 Pet. 2:1-3, v. 3.) This ministers must boldly declare, according to all which God commands them. They should therefore gird up their loins, and without delay address themselves to their work: they ought to expect enmity and opposition from numbers, whose sins they reprove and whose doom they denounce; but they need not be dismayed at their stout, frowning, or menacing countenances; and they must not yield to unbelieving fears of man, lest the Lord should put them to shame before their enemies, and employ others to carry his messages. He will protect such as simply follow and trust in him, against every assault of the wicked, as far as is good for them; he can make the feeblest and most timid, firm and immovable as "an iron pillar," and secure as a city defended by "brazen walls," though whole nations should combine against them. We should then pray for fortitude and constancy in every temptation; and that these may be connected with prudence, meekness, humility, love, and a willingness to recede from every personal interest or inclination; whilst nothing must be allowed to move us from our place and duty. (Note, Rom. 15:1-3.) If men do not prevail against us, to render us unfaithful, negligent, or angry; they cannot greatly hurt us, however they may fight against us. But as there is no respect to persons with God; and kings, princes, and even priests, often need reproof and admonition, as much, nay far more, than others: so they, who are called to this most arduous and perilous service will need, and may expect, peculiar supports, encouragement, and protection; that "as their day is, so may their strength be."

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 2, 3. Jeremiah, now about to open his public ministry, was ordered to "cry in the ears of Jerusalem;" to proclaim his message in the most public places of the city; (Prov. 1:20, 21, 8:1-3.) and to assure the inhabitants, that the Lord remembered the nation of Israel, and those events, which had taken place from the calling of Abraham, to the departure of his posterity out of Egypt, which might be called the youth of the nation; and the solemn transactions that had taken place at mount Sinai, which were as their espousals to God. "The kindness of" Israel's "youth, and the love of their espousals," may signify Israel's professed love and zeal for him and his worship. They readily followed the Lord out of Egypt, and on the banks of the Red Sea they sang his praises: they cheerfully and unreservedly acceded to the covenant of Sinai: and though they were guilty of many rebellions and provocations, yet they did not utterly renounce his worship, and permanently set up open idolatry, as they did in after ages. (P. recs.

Ex. 15:1—21. 24.) So that, in some sense, Israel might then be called "holiness to the LORD," his worshippers, and the first-fruits of that harvest of believers, which he intended afterwards to reap from among men; and, considering the nation as immediately dedicated to him, he openly showed, that he was deeply offended with all those who attempted to injure them, and would punish them for sacrilegiously presuming to devour his portion. Yet JEHOVAH's mercy and kindness to Israel, in thus taking them for his people and entering into covenant with them, seems rather to have been intended. "I have called to mind in thy behalf the kindness shown thee in thy youth, the love of thy espousals." ... The kindness was all shown on the part of God, and was perfectly gratuitous, as the word רחם properly signifies; and it was his affection for them, and not theirs for him, that led him to espouse them, that is, to engage in a special contract with them to be their God, and to take them for his peculiar people. And thus the words are explained in the margin of our ancient English Bible (1583 folio) to be "that grace and favour, which I showed thee from the beginning, when I did first choose thee to be my people, and married thee to myself." Blayney. (Notes, Ex. 19:5, 6. Deut. 7:6—8. 9:4—6. Ez. 16:2—14. 20:5—26.) The last clauses should be rendered, "did offend ... evil did come upon them," referring to the judgments which had been executed on Egypt, Amalek, and other nations, who opposed or assailed Israel. (Notes, Ez. 14: 17:8—16. Num. 21:1—3. Ps. 105:8—36.)

V. 4. The prophet's personal ministry was confined to Judah; and most of the ten tribes had been previously carried captive, and dispersed in foreign countries: yet in this, and many other places, he addresses all the descendants of Jacob. For in various ways, in that or future ages, numbers of the favoured nation would read and profit by his instructions. (Marg. Ref. k. Notes, 31:1, 2.)

V. 5. After all that the Lord had done for Israel, and all their professed attachment to his worship, they actually apostatized from him; and they could have no excuse for this conduct, unless he had given them cause for it. Could they then bring any charge against him? Had their fathers ever found him unfaithful to his engagements, or oppressive in his government? Had he exacted unreasonable services, or inflicted unjust or immoderate punishments? Could they find fault with his precepts, ordinances, or providential dispensations? (Notes, 31:32. Is. 5:3, 4. 43:22—25. Mic. 6:1—5.) If they could not, why had they gone far from him, to follow vain and worthless idols, and so to become as vain and worthless as they? (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 115:8. Is. 44: 12—18.)

The pastors, or rulers, civil and ecclesiastical, led the people into rebellion by example and influence: (Notes, 5:30, 31. Is. 56:9—12.) and even the prophets, or extraordinary teachers, who professed to be divinely inspired, taught the people to commit idolatry. (Notes, 23:9—32. Ez. 13:1—16. 14:9—11, 22:24—28. Mic. 3:8—12.) This concurrence of all orders in wickedness provoked God to plead with, to judge, convict, condemn, and punish the nation, and their remote posterity; who would be induced, in the natural course of things, to imitate the corrupt principles, and copy the bad examples, of their progenitors. (Marg. Ref. Note, Ez. 20:5.)

V. 10—12. The Greeks, Romans, Arabians, and other inhabitants of the western or eastern regions, adhered tenaciously to the gods and religion of their fathers: though their idols were helpless and worthless, they would not change them; which would appear, in proportion as the fact should be investigated. Yet Israel, whose peculiar glory and happiness it was to worship the self-existent, all-sufficient, eternal, and most holy and glorious JEHOVAH, the Creator of heaven and earth, were ready at all times to change their God and religion, for dumb idols and abominable superstitions, which tended to their disgrace and ruin! Well indeed might "the heavens be astonished" at this senseless and hateful ingratitude, and appear as in a horrible consternation, and withdraw their light, in token of grief, and abhorrence of such enormous guilt. (Matt. 27:45.)—Such rhetorical apostrophes to heaven and earth import the unusualness, and likewise the indignity of the things spoken of; implying them to be such that if men take no notice of them, the elements themselves will testify against such practices. Comp. Is. 1:2. Mic. 1:2. 6:2. Job 20:27. Louth. (Notes, Deut. 32:1. Luke 19:28—40. v. 40.)

V. 13. Every expression in this verse tends to aggravate the folly and guilt of Israel. They were the people of JEHOVAH, to whom his special favours had been shown, to whom his laws and oracles had been given, among whom his wonderful works had been wrought, and to whom his manifested presence was vouchsafed. Even this people had forsaken their God, who is indeed "the Fountain of living waters," the sum of all excellency and the source of all felicity; who communicates from his infinite fullness life and blessedness to his creatures: even to sinners who come to him in his appointed way; affording them freely whatever is necessary for acceptance, sanctification, and eternal salvation, and every thing conducive to their present comfort and security. (Notes, 17:12, 13. Ps. 35:5—9. Rev. 7:13—17. v. 17. 21:5—8, n. 6. 22:1, 1, 6, 17, n. 17.) To this Fountain of living waters Israel had free and unrestricted access, by means of their ordinances, and the promises made to them of a Saviour who was to come: from this Fountain they might draw the waters of life by faith and prayer, whenever they would. (Note, Is. 12:1—3. v. 3.) They had always found it full and overflowing: and yet they had been so foolish and ungrateful as to forsake it! Nay, as if this evil had not been sufficient, they had committed another also: they could not be satisfied without an object of worship, though they renounced JEHOVAH; and therefore they endeavoured to form gods and a religion for themselves: and thus, with much labour, they heaved out cisterns, which they preferred to "the Fountain of living waters," though at best they could hold but little, and would soon be emptied: nay, the water in them must needs be turbid and unwholesome; and therefore they multiplied them to supply, if possible, this defect. But indeed their cisterns, when completed, were "broken cisterns, that could hold no water;" their idols could d) them no good, either in respect of their temporal or eternal concerns. (Notes, 14-19, 25-30. 18:13-17.)

V. 14-19. The prophet seems here to allude to the case of the ten tribes. Was Israel born a slave in the family of some idolater? if not, why was he spoiled by the Gentiles, and reduced to the basest bondage? (Note, Is. 50:1-3, v. 1.) The Assyrian princes, like young lions, had roared and prevailed against him, and desolated his land; and the inhabitants of Noph and Tahapanes, cities of Egypt, had destroyed his glory and strength. Yet this may be a prophetic intimation of the death of Josiah, when engaged against Pharaoh-necho king of Egypt, and of the dethroning and captivity of Jehoahaz by the same prince. (Notes, 2 Kings 23:29, 30. 21:1-7. 2 Chr. 35:20-27.) The Israelites had brought all these calamities upon themselves, by apostatizing from God, and departing from the way in which he led them. And what business had they in Egypt, or in Assyria? Did they still prefer the waters of Sihor, (that is, the Nile,) or those of Euphrates, to "the Fountain of living waters?" (Notes, 13. Is. 23:3. 27:12, 13.) Could such carnal confidences, and idolatrous connexions, tend more to their good, than a simple dependence on God, and devotedness to him? They would therefore find these revolts from him to be the sources of misery; for by giving strangers admission among them, they brought themselves into a dependence on them, which ended in their ruin; and they were thus taught, that to sin against God was a bitter, as well as an evil thing, as destructive of their comfort as contrary to their duty; and that he was more to be feared than their strongest enemies. (Marg. Ref. c-h.) "The miseries that your own sins have brought upon you, are a sufficient instruction to you, to break off your evil courses, and to return to God by a sincere repentance." Louth.—Broken the crown, &c. (16) Marg. Note, Deut. 33:20, 21.

V. 20, 21. In old times God had broken the Egyptian yoke from off his people, and they engaged by covenant to renounce idolatry and adhere to his worship; (Notes, Ex. 24:3-11. Josh. 24:15-26.) but they soon broke this solemn covenant, which was as the marriage compact; and they were guilty of spiritual adultery with every abominable idol, in the high places and groves. (Marg. Ref. i, m. Notes, Ez. 16:9-22.) Yet, in the choice of Abraham, and the patriarchs of their nation, God had "planted them a noble vine, wholly a right seed," as good a stock as could possibly be procured of the human species; and under Joshua, he had planted them in the land, after they had been very much purified from idolatry, and were an excellent race of men: yet, notwithstanding all their advantages, they were most notoriously degenerated, and were become like the wild vine, that bears poisonous berries instead of grapes. (Notes, Deut. 32:32, 33. Josh. 22:34. Is. 5:2-7.)

no hope: No; for I have loved strangers, and after them will I go.

26 As ^a a thief is ashamed when he is found, so is the house of Israel ashamed; they, ^b their kings, their princes, and their priests, and their prophets,

27 Saying ^c to a stock, Thou art my father; and to a stone, Thou hast brought me forth: for they have turned ^d their back unto me, and not their face; ^e but in the time of their trouble they will say, Arise, and save us.

28 But where are thy gods that thou hast made thee? let them arise, if they can save thee in the time of thy trouble: for according ^f to the number of thy cities are thy gods, O Judah.

29 Wherefore will ye plead with me? ye all have transgressed against me, saith the Lord.

30 In vain have I smitten your children; they received no correction: your own sword hath devoured your prophets, like a destroying lion.

journeys, to make new alliances with idolaters. ¹ Louth. Or the consequences of the idolatries and iniquities, if persisted in, may be intended. (Deut. 28:18. Notes, Deut. 29:19, 20. Is. 20:2-4.) But they said, "There is no hope." (Notes, 18:11, 12. Is. 57:9, 10.) The case is desperate, meaning that there was no hope of safety, except in heathen alliances, or in idolatry; or no hope of mercy from God and deliverance from distress; or no hope of getting the better of their headstrong inclinations. And therefore, as "they had loved strangers," and strange gods, they were determined to go after them, and desperately to venture all consequences. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. v, z.)

V. 26-30. The whole house of Israel, especially the rulers and teachers of every description, shunned detection, like a thief; and yet they would certainly be detected and put to shame; for the Lord would prove against them, that they had ascribed divine honours to senseless idols, and worshipped them, addressing them by the title of father, and saying, "Thou hast begotten me," (Marg. Notes, Is. 44:9-20. Hab. 2:18, 19.) as if they had been the authors of their existence, and of all their comforts. But, though they thus turned their backs on JEHOVAH, in their approaching troubles they would call upon him to save them: but he would then send them to their idols to seek deliverance: (Notes, Judg. 10:10-14. 1 Kings 3:13, 14.) yet they would not obtain any help from them, though they were become as numerous as the cities and towns in all Judah.—"Every . . . city had its peculiar deity, after the manner of the heathen. 2 Kings 17:30, 31. Hos. 8:11. 10:1. Louth. (Note, Hos. 10:1-3.)—And why should they attempt to plead their cause against God, or to expect the performance of his promises to the nation; when they had forfeited all their privileges by idolatry and iniquity, and when they were all involved in this national transgression, which violated their covenant? He had indeed long exercised patience towards them; he had corrected them in his providence, and warned them by his prophets: but they had not derived benefit from his corrections; (Notes, 5:3-6. Is. 1:5, 6.) and by murdering his prophets, as a fierce lion devours the prey, they had filled up the measure of their iniquities. (Notes, 2 Kings 21:16. 24:3, 4. 2 Chr. 24:19-22. 36:16. Neh. 9:26-30. Matt. 23:34-39. Acts 7:51-53. 1 The. 2:13-16.)

V. 31, 32. If the Jews would not diligently attend to the word of God, they must prepare to see it, as accomplished before their eyes, even in that very generation. Could they say that the Lord had been to them as a wilderness, or a land of darkness and distress? (Notes, 13:15-17. Is. 5:26-40. 8:21, 22.) On the contrary, it was plain that they uniformly had prosperity and abundance of comforts, when they adhered to his service. Why then should they desire to renounce his authority, and set up for their own masters, and affect independence? (Notes, 10-13. Gen. 3:4, 5. Ps. 12:1-4.) Why should they determine to come no more to him, from whom they had received so many pledges of love, and valuable blessings? Even the virgin was used to set far more store by her ornaments, or the bride by her nuptial garments or jewels, than Israel did by his relation to God, and all the honour, privilege, and happiness connected with it! Nay, they had forgotten him through alienation of heart, and dislike to retain him in their knowledge; and this for days which could not be numbered. (Marg. Ref. o-q.)

Y 33-37. God next inquired of the people, why they imitated harlots, who used every artifice to allure, and turned every way to meet the companions of their shameful amours;

31 ¶ O generation, ¹ see ye the word of the Lord: ² Have I been a wilderness unto Israel? a land of darkness? Wherefore say my people, ³ We are lords; we will come no more unto thee?

32 Can a maid forget her ornaments, or a bride her attire? yet my people have forgotten me days without number.

35 Yet thou sayest, ¹ because I am innocent, surely his anger shall turn from me: behold, ² I will plead with thee, because thou sayest, I have not sinned.

themselves, and therefore in time of temptation fell away." (Note, Matt. 13:20, 21.) Thus their profession of being "holiness to the LORD," forms an additional reproach to their characters, and aggravation of their crimes. Yet some, who have fallen off after very promising beginnings, and who have run very wide in the ways of impiety or infidelity: have been recovered, and have "remembered the love of their first espousals," and their subsequent unfaithfulness, to their deeper humiliation before God, even to the end of their lives.

But, not hypocrites alone, and such persons as openly disgrace their profession, are criminal in these things: even true believers are often constrained to plead guilty. After having been delivered from the bondage of Satan, relieved in the hour of distress and dismay, conducted through many dangers and perplexities, and rendered comfortable in the hopes and earnestness of heavenly felicity; they have evidently made unsuitable returns for these immense obligations; and have declined from that zeal and love, which marked their first entrance on a religious course. We all ought therefore to examine ourselves in this respect, that we may "repent and do our first works:" and we should be very careful, as we proceed in life, that we do not lose in zeal and fervency, what we gain in knowledge, prudence, and experience. (Note, Rom. 2:2-5. P. O. 2-7.) They, however, who are indeed "holiness to the LORD," and "the first-fruits of his creatures," (Note, Jam. 1:16-18, v. 18.) and who are following him through this dreary wilderness to the promised rest; experience such love from him as richly compensates all that they can lose, leave, or suffer, for his sake: and the Lord will resent the wrong done to his children and friends, as if done to himself.—No apostate, or backslider, can give a good reason for "going far from God:" none can charge him with unfaithfulness, injustice, or unkindness: and he may justly reproach them with folly, as well as ingratitude, in leaving such a tried and powerful Friend, to walk after vanity and become vain.—In nations, which have been most highly favoured with temporal deliverances and advantages, and with abundance of the means of grace, how grievously do men generally defile themselves and their land, and make the Lord's heritage an abomination!

V. 8-13. Too often the ministers of religion are peculiarly criminal, when nations are filling up their measure of iniquity. Men presume to officiate in holy things, without the spiritual knowledge of God, or earnest inquiry after him: they dare for lure to handle the law, without any acquaintance with the Lawgiver; and to teach Christianity, while Christians themselves only in name, and ignorant of the nature of that holy religion: and thus pastors, and teachers, and rulers, by their example and doctrine, propagate iniquity, infidelity, and heresy, and harden the hearts of the numbers who "walk after such things as cannot profit!" What will men of this character say, when the Lord shall plead against them? and how can they endure the thought of treasuring up judgments even for their children's children?—Men, who have been educated in any false religion, adhere tenaciously to it, and are hardly persuaded to change it, however absurd and unreasonable it be. (Note, 1 Pet. 1:17-21.) Thus Satan rivets the fetters of ignorance and delusion on men's minds, by means of their bigotry, prejudice and pride, and relative attachments. But the professors of true religion have ever shown a strange propensity to change their glory for any worthless superstition or absurdity! so that the truth and spiritual worship of God cannot be maintained among men, without continual divine interpositions. This is most lamentable, and may well excite our grief and consternation: but our astonishment will be diminished, if we duly consider "that the carnal mind is enmity against God," and must therefore naturally prefer any gross, or sensual, or jovial worship, and proud self-exalting reasonings, and absurd superstitions, or fanatical delusions, to the holy character and precepts, the humbling truths, and spiritual worship, of JEHOVAH. (P. O. Ez. 32:1-14.) Indeed, we all have committed, and are still prone to commit, the two evils of which Israel was proved guilty, even apostasy from God, and idolatrous love of some created object, or objects from which we seek and expect our felicity. How do we forsake the pure joys to be found in the favour and service of God, for the polluting and wasting pleasures and interests of the world and sin! How apt are we to refuse the glorious salvation of Christ, and to prefer our own foolish ways of recommending ourselves to our offended Creator! How prone are we to forsake the unerring word of God to follow human teachers, and the traditions of men! and to forego the consolations of the Holy Spirit, for the worthless joys of the enthusiast and hypocrite! With great labour do men frame and resort to these and many other broken cisterns; instead of "drawing with joy the waters of life from the wells of salvation." Thus man became, and his unbelievers continue, the slaves of sin and Satan, and persisting in this course must remain so for ever.

V. 14-21. The professed people of God are often reduced to a base and ruinous subjection to their own lusts; and by the wrath of God, to various cruel oppressors. But what has a Christian to do, in the ways of forbidden pleasure and vain dissipation, or in the pursuits of avarice or ambition? Can the waters of these rivers be equal to those of "the River, the streams of which make glad the city of God?" (Note, Ps. 46:4.) If men will thus turn aside their backslidings will correct them, and they will learn the evil of their conduct, by the bitterness of its consequences, that they may be taught to "be in the fear of the LORD all the day long."—The history of the world, and of the church, and that of every man, (believer or unbeliever,) proves the total depravity of the human heart: no obligations, professions, pious ancestors, good education, or external means, can ensure any man's continuance in the ways of godliness: no ingenuity or eloquence can extenuate this matter: though men "wash themselves with nitre and take much soap," yet their iniquities are marked before God, and will demonstrate their depravity, when produced against them at the day of judgment. The fact is evident and very affecting, that the descendants of the most pious men, who seem to be "planted a noble vine, wholly a right seed," have in many cases degenerated, and become hardened infidels or profligates.—But a disposition to self-justification is strongly marked as a feature of man's character: when his criminality cannot be denied, he will vindicate or excuse it; and if he can plead not guilty as to a few gross outward wickednesses, he will deem this a compensation for all other offences: nay, a shortlived, reluctant abstaining from habitual sin, shall be pleaded as an atonement for all former gratifications, and even as an excuse for returning again to the commission of it, or indulgence and dispensation to do this! But when the Lord shall cause men to review their ways, and to know and see what they have done, "every mouth will be stopped, and all the world will be found guilty before him." (Notes, Ez. 16:60-63, v. 63. Rom. 3:19, 20.) Indeed they are often as much under the power of their lusts, and as regardless of consequences in gratifying their present inclinations, as the brute beasts; and as inaccessible to arguments, warnings, or motives, when urged against their impetuous cravings. It is vain in such cases to weary ourselves about them: the only hope is, that the painful effects of their vices will lead them to salutary reflection; or give some future opportunity of expostulating with them, and suggesting useful admonitions.

V. 25-37. Sometimes despair of mercy, or of victory over domineering evil habits and lusts, leads men to as unrestrained indulgence, as the most presumptuous infidelity could do. They think that there is "no hope" for them, and as they have loved their sinful pleasures, they may as well go on in them as not. To this case the abundant mercy and almighty assistance, proposed in the gospel, form a suitable remedy; and indeed the only one, which is at all adequate to the awful case.—Sinners, of every rank and distinction, must all stand before the Judge of the world: and most of them are conscious, that they cannot vindicate their conduct before him: then they will appear like the poor convict before the bar, on the day of his trial; when he stands to hear the ignominious sentence against him for his crimes. Even ungodly kings, princes, priests, and prophets will be thus put to shame before the assembled world: and the unreasonableness of men's conduct, whether they have been idolatrous infidels, or profane and profligate, will as much shame their understandings as their hearts.—It may be vain to expect help from God in the time of trouble, if we now turn our backs on him: yet many call upon him, when they think death at hand, who never before regarded him. As the Lord will not help the perishing sinner, who continues to the last impenitent; so all his other confidences will fail him, how many soever they may have been. This will be the awful case of those especially, who have hardened themselves against convictions and reproofs, and who have hated and persecuted such as have warned and instructed them.—Men do not forsake God, merely because they suppose his service unprofitable or injurious, or experience satisfaction in the ways of sin; but also because they are of a proud independent spirit, which scorns subjection and subordination, or to own their guilt and folly: and because they desire to be "lords, they will come no more unto him." In this manner they forsake their honour, privilege, interest, and happiness; and thus we all have too often, and too long, forgotten and neglected him.—Men may employ all their ingenuity and application in the cause of impiety; but they can find no happiness in it: they may teach other wicked ones their way, and thus be accessaries to their destruction; they may do much mischief, and thus "treasure up wrath against the day of wrath;" they may varnish the matter over with fair pretences, and shift from one sin to another, and seek safety and happiness by varied means: but confusion is their portion; "the LORD hath rejected their confidences, and they shall not prosper in them." (Note, Is. 50:10, 11.)

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1. (Note, 2:33-37.) The beginning of this chapter, in the original, seems to connect with the conclusion of the preceding. "In saying, if a man, &c." God would never prosper his professed worshippers, while they proceeded in their evil courses: and this appeared, not only by his threatenings and judgments, but even by his

CHAPTER III.

God invites Judah to return to him, with intimations of mercy; but with rebukes and expostulations, 1-5. Israel, though rejected for sin, is less criminal than Judah, who had not profited by the judgments inflicted on her, 6-11. Both are called to repentance, with gracious promises and predictions, 12-19. The people being severely reprimanded, are prophetically represented, as repenting and confessing their sins, 20-25.

THEY say, "if a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and become another man's, shall he return unto her again? shall not that land be greatly polluted? but thou hast played the harlot with many lovers; yet return again to me, saith the LORD.

2 "Lift up thine eyes (unto the high places, and see where thou hast not been lain with: in the ways hast thou sat for them, as the Arabian in the wilderness; and thou hast polluted the land with

4 Wilt ^athou not at this time cry unto me,
 My Father, thou art ^athe Guide of my youth?

5 Will ^ahe reserve his anger for ever? will he

calls to repentance and promises of mercy. For, in saying,
 'Return to me, and I will pardon thee, notwithstanding thy past atrocious crimes,' he in effect said, that he would not otherwise pardon them. "In saying," or "whilst thou sayest," or acknowledged, that the law of God (Deut. 24:1-4.) forbids a man to take his wife again, whom he had divorced; and who had gone from him and engaged herself to another: even thou hast gone from me, and hast had unlawful commerce with many lovers. ... Yet after all this, I give thee liberty to return to me, saith JEHOVAH. Blayney. To show that his ways and thoughts are unspeakably above those of man, (Note, Is. 55:8, 9.) God illustrates the subject from the law given by Moses; in which any one who had divorced his wife, was forbidden to take her back, if she had been married to another, (Note, Deut. 24:1-4.) and it must be allowed, that such a conduct would introduce a community of wives, and greatly pollute the land where it was practised.
 Yet after all the idolatries committed by the Jews, the Lord could honourably, and would certainly, receive them to full favour, if they returned to him. (Notes, 12-15. 2:20-24.
 Hos. 2:10-17. 3:1-3.)

V. 2, 3. The people might see the traces of their idolatries on every high place on which they looked: they were continually devising new species of idolatry, and tempting others to it: even as the prostitute sits by the way to seduce the passers; or as the Arabian robber waits in the desert for the traveller. (Marg. Ref. f, g, h. Notes, Ez. 16:23-34. 23:1-35.) Thus they polluted the land by their abominable idolatries and crimes: and when the Lord visited them with drought or famine, they persisted in them with the most shameless effrontery. (Marg. Ref. i, k. Note, 6:13-15, v.
 15.) 'The former rain' ... falls in autumn, after the long summer's drought: ... the latter rain ... generally comes about the middle of April: after which it seldom or never rains during the whole summer. ... The former being absolutely necessary for seedtime; and the latter for filling the ears of corn before the harvest comes on. Blayney. Rain falls also in the winter months; but scarcely ever in the summer: so that the parched land could not be sown, without the former rain. (Notes, 5:20-25, v. 24, 25. Joel 2:21, 24, v.
 23. Am. 4:7.)

V. 4, 5. Some interpret these verses as a reproof of the hypocrisy and presumption of the Jews. Notwithstanding their abandoned and obstinate wickedness, they would still call God their "Father and the Guide of their youth;" (Notes, 19. 31:9. Ps. 71:17, 18. Prov. 2:17. Is. 63:15-19. 64: 6-8.) the Friend, who had taken care of the nation from its infancy; and they presumed to expect help from him, though they continued to imitate the rebellious son, or the adulterous wife. (Notes, 7:8-11. Is. 48:1, 2. 58:1, 2.) Nor would they be induced to believe, that he would so reserve his anger for ever, as to bring his threatened judgments upon them: but they expected, that he would relent before matters came to this extremity; though they were conscious, that they had spoken and done evil to the extent of their ability, and were not restrained from transgression by any other hindrance, than want of power and opportunity.—This is a probable of Josiah the king, Hast thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? she is gone up upon every high mountain, and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot.

7 And I said, after she had done all these things, turn thou unto me: but she returned not.
 And her treacherous sister Judah saw it.

8 And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery, I had put her away, and given her a bill of divorce; yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also.

9 And it came to pass, through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks.

10 And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the LORD.

¶ And the LORD said unto me, The backsliding Israel hath justified herself more than treacherous Judah.

 north, and say, Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the LORD; and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you; for I am merciful, saith the LORD, and I will not keep anger for ever.

interpretation; but the passage is more commonly understood in a contrary sense. Would not the people, from this time, (when they were warned, corrected and invited to repentance, and favoured with a pious reforming king,) come and seek mercy from that God, who had always been the Father and Guide of Israel? Would they not entreat him again to take them under his fatherly guidance? Would they not do it immediately, without further delay? And would the Lord, in that case, reserve his anger for ever, and punish them to the end? (Notes, Ps. 77:5-12. 89:46-48. 103:9.) By no means: though they had done all in their power to provoke him, he was yet disposed to be merciful to them. (Notes, 1. 2:2, 3.)
 'Thy behaviour has been in direct opposition to these kind admonitions: thou didst still persist in malicious wickedness, and by thy actions showdest the utmost hatred and despite against God and goodness.' Louth.

V. 6-11. A new message seems to be begun in this place, which probably was delivered after Josiah had made great progress in his reformation. The prophet was called on to take a retrospective view of the wickedness of Israel, the kingdom of the ten tribes, which had apostatized, or turned away from God; and of the desolations which followed.
 The word "backsliding" seems to be taken from oxen, when they turned back, instead of drawing forward, in the yoke; and it is used for an individual, or a people, renouncing the worship and service of God. Israel had utterly renounced the temple, and almost wholly forsaken the worship of God; and they had committed idolatry in every part of the land. The Lord had also sent Elijah, Elisha, and several other prophets to bring them back to him; but in general "they returned not." The kingdom of Judah, descended from the same stock, was equally treacherous and unfaithful to the covenant of God with them, and they had witnessed all these transactions. At length God saw it necessary to put Israel away, as an adulterous woman: which he did by the kings of Assyria.
 (Notes, 1. 2 Kings 17:5-23. Is. 50:1-3.) Yet Judah took not warning, and was not afraid to continue, and to grow even more impudent, in the most abominable and senseless idolatries. And after all that Judah had heard and witnessed of the long-continued captivity and misery of Israel: the people in general did not fall in cordially with good Josiah's reformation, but only "feignedly," reluctantly, and hypocritically.
 (Notes, 2 Kings 23:26, 27. 2 Chr. 34:33. Zeph. 1:1-8.) So that all things considered, Israel was not so inexcusable as Judah was become: for Judah had been favoured with many pious kings, had enjoyed far greater advantages than Israel, had been borne with in greater patience, and had the doom of Israel set before them as a warning; and all these circumstances aggravated their guilt. (Notes, Ez. 16:48-55. 23:4 —21. Matt. 11:20-24.)

V. 12-15. The prophet was next ordered to proclaim his message toward the north, where the ten tribes were dispersed in captivity, in Assyria, Media, and other more distant regions.
 The prophet did not go into those countries to preach to the Israelites: but this order was intended to shame the Jews, and it implied that mercy was in reserve for Israel. They were thus called on to repent of their idolatries, and return to 13 Only "acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the LORD thy God, and hast scattered thy ways to the strangers under every green tree, and ye have not obeyed my voice, saith the LORD.

14 Turn, O backsliding children, saith the LORD; for I am married unto you: and I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion:

15 And I will give you pastors according to my heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding.

16 And it shall come to pass, when ye be multiplied and increased in the land, in those days, saith the LORD, they shall say no more, the ark of the covenant of the LORD: neither shall it come to mind; neither shall they remember it; neither shall they visit it; neither shall that be done any more.

17 At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the LORD; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it to the name of the LORD, to Jerusalem; neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart.

18 In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north, to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers.

the Lord: and he would no longer "cause his anger to rest upon them," being at all times disposed to mercy. They were exhorted to acknowledge that they had sinned against that God, whose professed and covenanted worshippers they had been; and that they had basely turned every way to seek out other objects of worship, which they preferred to him. (Notes, 4:1-2. Lev. 26:40-42. Deut. 4:29-31. 30:1-10. 1 Kings 8:33-34. Neh. 1:5-11, vv. 8, 9.) They were encouraged to repent and return to God, by an intimation that he still considered them as children, though rebellious; and as married to him, though adulterous; and that he had yet a favour towards them, on account of his ancient transactions with the nation. They were also to be assured, that he intended to take a small remnant of them, as one from the whole number of the inhabitants of a city, or two from a family, or subordinate division of a tribe; to bring them back to Zion, and place over them rulers and teachers like David; "men after his own heart," who should see them wisely and prudently, or with divine knowledge and wisdom, which are the proper food of the soul. (Notes, Is. 24:13-15. 27:2-6, 12, 13. 30:20-26.) This was in part accomplished, when some of the Israelites returned with the Jews from Babylon, and were ruled and taught with them, by Zerubbabel, Joshua, Ezra, Nehemiah, and others. But it refers to the gathering of the dispersed Israelites with the Gentiles into the Christian church, in the primitive times and in after ages; and to the future restoration of Israel.

I will not cause mine anger to fall, &c. (12) "I will not look down upon you with a lowering brow." Literally "I will not let my countenance fall upon you." So when Cain was wroth, it is said, that "his countenance fell." Gen. 4:5. On the contrary, the lifting up of the countenance upon any person denotes favour and good-will towards him. Num. 6:26. Blayney. (Notes, Num. 6:24-26. Ps. 4:6-8.)

V. 16-18. It is generally agreed, that the ark of the covenant was not found after the captivity, neither "was it made any more," and that nothing was substituted in its place: yet far more than this must be here intended. The ark was the chief symbol of the Lord's presence with Israel, the principal type of Christ, and the centre of the ritual law. (Notes, Ez. 25:10-22.) The meaning therefore seems to be, that the whole of that dispensation was about to be abolished; which took place after the multitude of believers had been greatly increased, by the conversion of the Gentiles, and of the Israelites scattered among them. The strong attachment of the Jews to externals, and their reluctance to part with them, seem to be denoted. They could not be weaned from these "beggarly elements," till Jerusalem and the temple were destroyed; then the observance of them became impracticable, and the Jewish converts to Christ perceived that they were no longer of any value; and thus they sunk into disuse, and gradually into oblivion. (Notes, Is. 66:3, 4. Matt. 24:

19 But I said, 'How shall I, put thee among the children, and give thee a pleasant land, a goodly heritage of the hosts of nations? and I said, 'Thou shalt call me, My Father; and 'shalt not turn away from me.

29-31. Acts 6:9-14, v. 14. Gal. 4:8-11.) At the same time the church "the Jerusalem from above," became more glorious: (Notes, Gal. 4:21-31. Heb. 12:22-25.) the Lord openly reigned there as on his throne, all the nations were gathered before him to worship, and no longer followed the imaginations of their own evil hearts, in the worship of idols. In this happy state of the church, it is predicted that the Jews and Israelites would lay aside their ancient contests, cordially unite in the worship of God, and enjoy together the peculiar privileges of his people. (Notes, 23:5, 6. 30:1-3, v. 3. 31:1, 3-7. Is. 11:11-16, v. 13. Hos. 1:11.)—As this is here introduced subsequent to the calling of the Gentiles, it evidently foretells the future calling of the tribes of Israel into the church, and their restoration to their own land. "That in the latter days they shall actually return from their several dispersions, to dwell as a nation in their own land, is declared in such express terms by most of the ancient prophets, that there cannot be a doubt, I think, of its being literally accomplished in due time." Blayney. (Notes, 30:1-11. 31:1-11. Is. 2:2-5, 11:11-16. 66:19-23. Ez. 37:16-28. Hos. 1:4-11. 3:4, 5.) "Whatever way we understand these promises, about the restoration of the Jews from captivity, or dispersion, it cannot annul the evidence of the chief predictions in view, viz. those relating to the abolishing of the ceremonial law, and the conversion of the Gentiles; begun by the calling or gathering in of many nations, and completed by "the gathering of all nations, to the name of the LORD." MacLaurin.

Neither shall it be done, &c. (16) "Neither shall it be made any more." The ark once lost was never to be made again." Blayney.

V. 19. The blessings, promised in the preceding verses, were exceedingly great; and a difficulty, apparently insurmountable, lay in the way of their accomplishment, arising from the deep guilt and depravity of the nation; for how could JEHOVAH, consistently with his justice and holiness, put such obstinate rebels among his children, and give them that pleasant and glorious land for their inheritance, which had been long possessed as an heritage by the nations and their armies? (Marg. Dan. 8:9, 10. Notes, Ez. 20:5, 6. Dan. 11:40-45. Luke 21:20-24, v. 24.) To this he answers, that he would bring them to repentance, faith, and prayer, and give them "the spirit of adoption," the temper of dutiful children: and then they would call on him and fear him, and love him as their Father: (Notes, Deut. 30:1-10. Rom. 8:14-17. Gal. 4:4-7.) and that he would so influence their hearts by his grace, that they should no more depart from him. It is implied, that when this took place, he would cast out their enemies before them, as he had done when their fathers were first put in possession of Canaan. (Notes, 31:31-34. 32:37-41. Ez. 11:24-20. 36:20-38. 39:23-29. Zech. 12:9-14.)

V. 20-25. This seems to be a prophetic representation of the manner in which the change before mentioned would be effected. The Lord would convince the people of their wickedness, in treacherously departing from him. Then the voice of their lamentations and prayers would be heard, even in the places where their crimes had been perpetrated: and this open confession was necessary, as they had so perversely forsaken the way of obedience, and forgotten their God. He then graciously invites them to return to him, and he will both pardon their guilt and heal their backslidings: establishing their hearts and healing the diseases of their souls, by his sanctifying grace. Thus encouraged, they readily declare their purpose of immediately returning to the Lord, who had a right to their worship and service. (Notes, 3:18, 9:18-20. 50:4-6, v. 4. Lev. 26:40-42. Deut. 4:29-31. 30:1-10. 1 Kings 8:46-53. Is. 26:12-18. Hos. 14:1-3.) They are now convinced that salvation, temporal or eternal, must be sought in vain from their idols or superstitions, and that it could only be had from the Lord. (Notes, Ps. 27:1-3. 62:1, 2, 5-7. 121:1, 2. Is. 45:15-17, 23-25. Hos. 1:6, 7.) They confess, that, for their sins, they had endured much disgrace and misery, having been violently robbed of their property, and bereaved of their children: they are now ashamed before God to reflect on their iniquities and idolatries, and those of their fathers, through all their generations: and, being thus penitent, they are reinstated in the family of God, and numbered among his children. (Notes, Is. 63:7-19. 64: Ez. 16: 60-63. 36:31, 32. Dan. 9:4-19.)—Some expositors consider the word “shame,” as relating to the shameful idolatries of Israel; especially the worship of Baal; for this idol is sometimes called Bosheth, the word rendered shame: (11:13. marg. Hos. 9:10. Note, Judg. 6:31, 32.) but this exclusive interpretation is not at all necessary or proper. The present dispersed and disgraced state of the nation is evidently the punishment of crimes, entirely distinct from gross idolatry, from which the Jews have long been free; and the recovery of Israel as a nation, from this abject condition, seems especially predicted.

From her husband. (20) “Her friend.” Marg. Hos. 3:1.—אשה seems to be the feminine of איש, an evil doer, or wicked person, and is thus to be joined with אשר. “As a wicked woman breaketh her faith.” Blayney.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11. The Lord is so “rich in mercy,” and has made such abundant provision for the honourable exercise of it: that he is ever ready to receive to full favour the vilest of transgressors: even when it would be contrary to the most approved rules of society, exactly to copy his example, in our conduct to those who grossly violate their relative obligations. But whilst he glorifies the abundance of his grace, by inviting rebels and apostates to return unto him; he will also bring their iniquities to remembrance: nor can any man expect the tokens of his favour, who is not humbled and ashamed on account of his sins, and in some proportion to their aggravations. If then we would escape rebukes, corrections, or ruinous judgments; we must judge ourselves, and examine, with minute exactness, all the sins which we remember to have committed, that we may condemn ourselves for them before God. In this frame of mind, the greatest transgressor may approach him as a kind Father, and may plead with him all the favours which he has bestowed, as the Creator, Preserver, and Saviour of men. All the mercies of God to his church in every age may suggest encouragement to the humble inquirer: and what can be so desirable for the young and inexperienced, in this ensnaring, perilous world, as to have the Lord Almighty for “their Father, and the Guide of their youth?” (Notes, Ps. 119:9. Ec. 12:1. 2 Cor. 6:14-18, v. 18.) Let young persons then daily and fervently pray for this mercy: and let parents direct and help their children in seeking it, and earnestly entreating God to bestow it on them. Let those, who have not hitherto begun to seek God, “from this time” begin to do it in good earnest: and if any have grown negligent in this important concern; let them without delay and with their whole heart, return unto him.—But it will not avail the obstinate and hypocritical, to use the most excellent words, and to presume on external privileges, and their relation to God: or on his mercy; as if he would not execute his threatened vengeance, especially on those who call him Lord and Father, while they continue to “speak and do evil as they can.”—Alas! how plainly do many of us find, on an impartial review of our conduct, that we have had it in our hearts to do far more evil, than it was in our power actually to perpetrate: and that we should have made ourselves far more criminal and mischievous, if we had had more liberty, health, riches, ingenuity, or opportunity; or if we could have got over the fear of reproach or punishment from man! And how few temptations, comparatively, have we resisted out of pure regard to God!—When we carefully mark the crimes of others, especially of such as break off from thine abominations out of my sight, then shalt thou not remove.

2 And thou shalt swear, The Lord liveth, for truth, in judgment, and in righteousness; and the nations shall bless themselves in him, and in him shall thy glory.

a religious profession, and despise warnings and convictions, we should also note the consequences; and then we shall generally see abundant reason to shun their evil ways. But when the Lord makes sinners a warning and beacon to their companions; and yet these fear not, but rush into similar iniquities, their guilt is greatly aggravated. He is the only competent Judge of characters; he knows perfectly how to estimate men's comparative advantages, with the warnings and the strivings of his Spirit, which they resist; the hypocrisy of their apparent good, and many other discriminating circumstances: and he alone can infallibly determine, whether the open infidel and profligate, or the designing hypocrite, be the more atrocious character. It is dreadful to be proved more criminal than those, who have actually perished in their sins: yet it will be no comfort to the condemned to know, that some others were even still worse than they.

V. 12-25. Blessed be God his word has been proclaimed in this our distant land, not only to dispersed Israel, but to us “sinners of the Gentiles” also: calling on us to return unto him, and declaring his plenteous mercy, and readiness to forgive. This goodness of our God should “lead us to repentance,” and humble confession of our sins. But alas! most men, “after the hardness of their impenitent hearts despise the riches of his mercy,” and proceed to “treasure up wrath against the day of wrath.” (Note, Rom. 2:4-6.) Hitherto only a small remnant has been called into the true church of God, even from that nation which was, as it were, “married to him;” and but few of this nation, which has been almost equally favoured. What abundant cause then have we to be thankful, if we be of this number? How ought ministers to pray for themselves, and how ought the people to pray for them, that they may be “pastors after God's own heart, to feed the people with knowledge and understanding;” and that very many such pastors may be raised up in all parts of the world.—In the primitive ages of the church, when the partition-wall was taken down, such pastors abounded, and the number of true Israelites was rapidly increased. But “yet there is room;” the holy nation may still be multiplied exceedingly, its worship may be rendered far more spiritual, its people more weaned from “the imagination of their evil hearts;” and they may be taught to be more of one heart and soul, and “to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.” Then Jerusalem will appear to be the glorious throne of JEHOVAH; Israel and Judah will become one in Christ Jesus, and all nations will be gathered unto him.—We are ready, on considering the character of hardened sinners, to say, “How can the Lord put such persons among his children, and give them those privileges, and that inheritance, which belong to every one of his family?” Yet surely the mercy and grace, which have sufficed for us, would suffice for the worst whom we know or can conceive of. He can teach all the nations of the earth to call him Father, and to exercise every filial disposition towards him: and without this change, no man can be partaker of the inheritance of the children of God. But, while professed Christians often treacherously depart from God; the voice of godly sorrow and prayer is sometimes heard from those who have been most wicked: they have indeed perverted their ways, and forgotten the Lord; and they humbly confess it. Let such then without delay come unto the God of Israel for salvation, that “their backslidings may be healed.”—Sincere penitents renounce all other hopes of salvation, as well as their idols and iniquities.—Whilst men harden themselves in sin, contempt and misery are their portion; but when they are covered with shame and confusion before God, they enter upon safety, comfort and honour: for “he that covereth his sins shall not prosper, but he that confesseth and forsaketh them, shall have mercy.” (Notes, Prov. 28:13. 1 John 1:8-10.)

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. 1, 2. These verses seem to be addressed to the ten tribes, and to continue the subject of the preceding chapter. (Note, 3:20-25.) They had been introduced, saying, “Behold we come unto thee, for thou art the Lord our God;” and here they are reminded to return, wholly and in good earnest, to him and his service: and not to rest in a partial or superficial reformation. (Notes, 3:6-11. Hos. 7:13-16.) and God assures them, that if they evidence their sincerity, by putting away all their abominable idolatries and iniquities, which they had wrought as in his sight, they shall be re-established in their ancient inheritance, and not remove from it any more, or wander about as they had done. (Note, Ez. 39:23-29.) This was a clear intimation to Judah also, by what means their removal might be prevented.—Thus they would become serious and devout in their religious worship; and they would use the name of the living God, and not that of any idol, in their solemn oaths: they would use it in sincerity, and with reverence and consideration, and not in a trifling manner, or on frivolous occasions: and they

V. 14. Some attention had been paid by the Jews to external reformation: but the heart of Jerusalem, or of its inhabitants, was still polluted, and the seat of idolatry and wickedness: vain and corrupt imaginations, desires, and affections, not only obtained admission, but lodged within, as welcome guests. (Notes, Ps. 66:18, 19. 119:113. Acts 8:18—24. v. 22.) The people still harboured with pleasure the thoughts of returning to their idols and iniquities; and vainly imagined they should be safe and happy in their evil ways; and prosper by their presumptuous confidence in the Egyptians or in their religious privileges. (Marg. Ref.) This had long been the case, and the prophet inquired, how long they intended that it should be so. (Notes, Prov. 1:21—23. Hos. 8:5, 6.) For it was absolutely necessary that their hearts should be washed, through true repentance and faith, and by divine grace, from the love and pollution of sin; since no external ablutions and purifications could save their city from desolation, or their souls from hell. (Notes, Is. 1:16—20. Matt. 23:25—28. Luke 11:39, 40. Jam. 4:7—10.)

V. 15—18. The prophet, in vision, beholds the invaders entering the northern border of the land. (Judg. 13:29. 20:1. Notes, 8:14—16.)—Babylon was indeed rather towards the east than directly north from Judah; but the destruction entered the land at the northern extremity of it. The report of this would spread swiftly from Dan through the nations which inhabited Ephraim: but the design of the invading army was especially against Jerusalem and Judah; they came from a far country to besiege the cities of Judah, and to watch around them, that no relief should be brought in, and no inhabitants escape out; as men are set to guard the field, and keep the cattle from getting out, or the robbers from breaking in. (Marg. Ref. s.) Thus the sword of the enemy, or the vengeance of the Lord, would pierce their vitals, to punish their atrocious rebellions. (Note, 2:14—19, vv. 15, 18.)—These things. (18) "Thy way, and thy doings, have brought a curse upon thee." Blayney.

V. 19—27. The prophet, to express his full conviction of the certainty of these predicted judgments, and to show that he had no pleasure in delivering such terrible messages, here speaks of himself, as in great anguish at what in vision he saw and heard. His bowels were in great commotion and agony; his heart was pained, and in a tumult through consternation; he could not hold his peace, but must speak of what he foresaw coming on his people, if they persisted in refusing to hearken to him. (Notes, Is. 16:8—11. 22:4. Lam. 2:11. Luke 19:41—44.) The whole scene was shown him, as if present before him. He heard the trumpet sound the alarm; it was reported to him that one city after another was destroyed; and the whole land was desolated, as easily and speedily as a few tents may be removed; he had continually before his eyes the standard of war, and the trumpet still sounded in his ears. (Note, 5—7.)—Upon this complaint the Lord himself speaks, to convince his servant of the propriety of his conduct in these awful judgments. He shows him that though the Jews were his professed people, they were foolish and ignorant, and knew him not, because they disliked his holy character and service: they were heedless and inattentive as children; yea, they were sottish, stupid, unteachable children, and seemed destitute of common sense. They had indeed some ingenuity in impiety and iniquity; but were perfectly destitute of understanding as to every thing good. (Note, 1 Cor. 14:20—25.)—In consequence of this declaration, the prophet is shown again, and still more distinctly, in vision, the whole land reduced to confusion and emptiness, like the original chaos: (Note, Gen. 12.) the heavens darkened, the mountains trembling, all the inhabitants, and even the fowls of the air, driven away. This represents, in the style of very sublime poetry, the entire subversion of their civil and ecclesiastical government, the termination of all their prosperity, and the total desolation of the land, after the most violent convulsions; which is more plainly predicted in what follows. "The assemblage is finely made, so as to delineate altogether a most striking and interesting picture of a ruined country; and to justify what has been before observed of the author's happy talent for pathetic description. The earth is brought back as it were to its primitive state of chaos and confusion, the cheerful light of the heavens is withdrawn, and succeeded by a dismal gloom; the mountains tremble and the hills shake under dreadful apprehensions of the Almighty's displeasure; a frightful solitude reigns all around; not a vestige is to be seen of any of the human race; even the birds themselves have deserted the fields," Blayney. (Notes, Is. 13:9—15. Matt. 24:29—31.) Yet it is also intimated, that this ruin of the nation would not be final. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 30:10, 11. 46:27, 28.)

V. 28, 29. (Notes, 23—27. Is. 5:26—30. 50:1—3.—I have purposed, &c. 28) Notes, 18:7—10. Ps. 110:4. Is. 14:24—27, 46:10, 11.—Not a man, &c. (29) This was exactly fulfilled by the Chaldeans, and afterwards by the Romans. (Note, Is. 6:11, 12.)

V. 30, 31. Jerusalem is here represented as a harlot: and it is inquired what she would do when these judgments came upon her. Her gay clothing and costly ornaments, and her painting, (which for the present might cover the defects of the face, but afterwards would rend it, and make it deformed,) could be of no avail. (Notes, 2 Kings 9:30—37. v. 30. Is. 3:16, 17.) That is, none of Jerusalem's outward privileges, or hypocritical professions, none of her contrivances and efforts would prevent her destruction: for even the nations which had seduced her to idolatry, would despise her. (Notes, 22:20—23. Lam. 1:1, 2, 18—22. Ez. 23:1—27.) The city is therefore next represented under the image of a travelling woman, in her first labour, when her pains and fears may be supposed the greatest: for in this manner, and under 30 And when thou art spoiled, what wilt thou do? Though thou clothest thyself with crimson, though thou deckest thee with ornaments of gold, though thou rendest thy face with painting, in vain shalt thou make thyself fair; thy lovers will despise thee, they will seek thy life.

31 For I have heard a voice as of a woman in travail, and the anguish as of her that bringeth forth her first child: the voice of the daughter of Zion, that bewaileth herself, that spreadeth her hands, saying, Wo is me now! for my soul is wearied because of murderers.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. The Lord will assuredly pardon and bless all those, however criminal, who "return to him with their whole hearts," and show that they are sincere penitents, "by putting away all their abominations," as in his sight, who "requires truth in the inward parts," but a formal or a partial reformation will be of no avail.—While Christians, so called, are notoriously addicted to injustice, fraud, lying, and oppression; while they trifle with the most solemn subscriptions, engagements, and oaths, which are administered without reverence, taken without consideration, and violated without hesitation; while these are multiplied on such frivolous occasions, and men show a contempt of God and of justice, at the same time, by rash, as well as profane swearing; it cannot be expected that Pagans or Mohammedans should be impressed in favour of Christianity, or expect much good from embracing it. But whenever a contrary conduct shall distinguish the disciples of Jesus from all other men, in all parts of the world; one grand obstacle to the conversion of the nations will be removed, and we may confidently hope, that they will be induced to "bless themselves, and glory" in our God and Saviour. It should therefore be our constant aim to prevail, if possible, with professed Christians, to "break up the fallow ground, and not to sow among thorns;" that, not content with empty forms and notions, they may seek for a humble, serious, and broken heart, in which the word of God may take root, and bring forth fruit to perfection. (Note, Luke 8:4-15.) And we should begin with ourselves; for without serious self-examination, deep convictions of our guilt and depravity, fervent prayers, and constant endeavours to be influenced in our conduct by the truths which we receive; all the advantages of revelation, and all the labours of the minister, will to us be in vain. Let us then recollect that the true baptism, as well as the true "circumcision, is that of the heart;" and as the Lord commands us to "put off the body of the sins of the flesh," and to remove all the impediments of our corrupt nature, that we may fear, trust, and love him; let us turn these precepts into prayers, and entreat him to "create in us a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within us." For "except a man be born again, he cannot see," or "enter into, the kingdom of God;" and if men die unchanged, "his fury will come forth like fire and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of their doings." In a case therefore of such urgent necessity, the less we can do of ourselves, the more need we have to cry incessantly to the Lord for help. (Note, 31: 18-20.)—He commonly warns before he strikes: but if his warnings are despised, they will soon be realized in judgments; and when he arises to execute vengeance, sinners will find it in vain to combine for mutual defence, or to flee any whither for refuge; and no "roaring lion," or "destroyer of the nations," is to be dreaded, in comparison with "him who is able to destroy both body and soul in hell." Yet when he uses ambitious men, besides their intention, as his instruments of temporal punishment, the sufferers are made to howl and lament most dolefully. When he contends, men are soon dispirited and infatuated; their resolution and capacity fail them, and their hearts sink and perish within them: but none are more stupefied with astonishment and terror on such occasions than ungodly priests and false teachers.—The justice of God, in leaving sinners to be deceived, and to "expect peace when vengeance reacheth to the soul," is very awful. The faithful servants of God deprecate from the people this judgment, above all others: yet they often perceive that he sees good to inflict it. On this account they are treated as malevolent, censorious, and spiritually proud: for they cannot but remind their hearers of the distinction betwixt a faithful minister of the gospel, and a blind guide, or a teacher of lies in the garb of a priest: but the event will justify their conduct, and convince all the world of the reality and immense importance of this disregarded distinction. When light calamities are not effectual to fan and cleanse the congregations, churches, or nations professing Christianity, God will give sentence upon them: a whirlwind and storm of vengeance will be commissioned to execute his word; and then it will be unavailing to say, "Wo unto us! for we are undone."

V. 14-31. Exhortations and encouragements should be blended with warnings; that men may neither presume, nor be left without hope; but we must still insist upon it, that without "the heart be washed from wickedness," and vain thoughts and desires dislodged from it, there can be no salvation. (Note, Is. 55:6, 7.) We can also point out that Fountain, in which the most polluted may wash and be clean; and direct them to One, that is able and willing to assist them in this work: we can assure them, that all who are thus washed shall be saved; and we should distinguish between those, who "hate vain thoughts" and sinful imaginations, but are often harassed by them; and those, who love, entertain, and lodge them in their hearts.—This has too long been the case with us all: but how long do sinners intend that it should be so with them? Would they be willing to die, when their hearts are thus occupied with evil imaginations and lustings; and remain to eternity the proud carnal enemies of God and holiness? If not, no time should be lost. For his word declares from afar, that misery is speedily approaching, especially against wicked professors of the gospel: and when this overtakes them, it will be evident, that their rebellious "ways and doings have procured these things unto themselves;" and that the fruit of wickedness is bitter and the end fatal.—Those who believe and preach the word of God, clearly foresee that destruction of sinners, of which others have little apprehension; and the prospect often pains them to the heart: yet because they cannot hold their peace, but must warn, exhort, and expostulate with sinners, and entreat them to "flee from the wrath to come," they are deemed troublers of the city: and are even accused of taking pleasure in denouncing damnation; whilst their aim and constant prayers are, that men may be wise and make haste to escape it; and while their benevolence, and compassion towards even their revilers, in their temporal distresses, fully refute the injurious charge. But often neither warnings nor judgments make due impression, even on men called Christians; they show themselves foolish and rebellious, and prove that they know not the Lord; yea, sottish children, without common sense in the concerns of their souls, though in other respects ingenious, and reputed as oracles. But what a wretched thing is it to be "wise to do evil," and treasure up wrath; but to have no understanding to do good! Whatever else we know not, may the Lord make us to be "of good understanding in the way of godliness!"—How has sin marred God's fair creation, and almost reduced it again to a confused chaos! They, whose treasure is on earth, may be soon bereaved of it, by revolutions in kingdoms or human affairs, or removed from it by death: and ere long the visible creation will pass away, and be no more seen. (Notes, 2 Pet. 3:10-13. Rev. 20:11-15.) But the Lord will not make a full end of his people. As for his enemies: their light will soon be put out in utter darkness; and all those things, which have here appeared admirable or honourable in them, will terminate in contempt and misery, of which no images in nature can give us an adequate conception.

NOTES.—CHAP. V. V. 1, 2. We are not informed at what time this message from God was delivered: if it could be supposed to have been in the latter part of Josiah's reign it might serve to explain the mystery of Providence, in removing so prematurely that pious king. Yet it can scarcely be conceived, that the external conduct of the Jews was so very abandoned during his life: and therefore it may perhaps be referred to the time immediately succeeding his death, when their wickedness burst forth the more impetuously, for the temporary restraint which had been put upon it. (Note, 2 Chr. 24:17-26.)—The Lord speaks to the prophet, and a very few others who interceded for the people; and directs them to make a diligent and accurate survey of Jerusalem of her streets, and the broad places where business was transacted, and where justice should have been administered and let them see whether they could find a man, who executed justice and sought the truth: and if they could he 15 Lo, I will bring a nation upon you from far, a house of Israel, saith the Lord: it is a mighty nation, it is an ancient nation, a nation whose language thou knowest not, neither understandest what they say.

17 And they shall eat up thy harvest, and thy bread, which thy sons and thy daughters should eat: they shall eat up thy flocks and thy herds: they shall eat up thy vines and thy fig-trees: they shall impoverish thy fenced cities, wherein thou trustedst, with the sword.

18 Nevertheless in those days, saith the Lord, I will not make a full end with you.

19 And it shall come to pass, when ye shall say, Wherefore doeth the Lord our God all these things unto us? then shalt thou answer them, Like as ye have forsaken me, and served strange gods in your land, so shall ye serve strangers in a land that is not yours.

20 Declare this in the house of Jacob, and publish it in Judah, saying,

21 Hear now this, O foolish people, and without understanding; which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not:

22 Fear ye not me? saith the Lord; will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the sword for the bound of the sea by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it: and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it;

23 But this people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart; they are revolted and gone.

24 Neither say they in their heart, Let us now fear the Lord our God, that giveth rain, both the former and the latter in his season: he reserveth unto us the appointed weeks of the harvest.

25 Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have withholden good things from you.

26 For among my people are found wicked men: they lay wait, as he that setteth snares; they set a trap, they catch men.

27 As a cage is full of birds, so are their houses full of deceit: therefore they are become great and waxen rich.

28 They are waxen fat, they shine: yea, they overpass the deeds of the wicked: they judge not the cause, the cause of the fatherless, yet they prosper; and the right of the needy do they not judge.

29 Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

30 A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land;

31 The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so: and what will ye do in the end thereof?

the Jews did not understand, they would be more regardless of their complaints, and cruel in their oppressions. (Note, Is. 33:17-19.) When they opened their quivers, destruction would be the certain consequence; as the opening of a sepulchre denotes that death has taken place. (Note, Ps. 5:9.) Thus the Jews would endure every misery, as far as consisted with their escaping total extirpation. (Notes, Deut. 28:30-34.)—Some indeed suppose the words, "I will not make a full end with you," to mean, that God would still have further judgments in reserve for them. "For all this his anger is not turned away; but his hand is stretched out still." (Note, Is. 5:24, 25.) In either sense it is a most remarkable prediction.—The vengeance executed on the Jews, for "crucifying the Lord of glory," was far more terrible, and has been of far longer continuance, than that brought upon them by the Chaldeans; and yet "a full end has not been made" of the nation, which is at present exceedingly numerous, and is preserved distinct from other nations, no doubt for very important purposes in Providence. (Marg. Ref. on 10, 4:27. Notes, 30:10, 11. 46:27, 28. Is. 6:13. 65:8-10. Matt. 24:21, 22.)

V. 19. "Those that fall under the severity of God's judgments, are apt to think so favourably of themselves, as to wonder why they should be singled out as examples of the divine vengeance, and of terror to others. And particularly the Jews thought this severe proceeding scarce consistent with those many gracious promises God had made unto their nation." Louth.—Yet the very books of Moses, if they had been duly attended to, were fully sufficient to silence for ever this presumptuous objection. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2:10-13. Deut. 4:25-28. 25:23, 29. 19:19-28. 1 Kings 9:7-9.)

V. 20-25. The whole seed of Jacob, but especially the Jews, are here called upon to hear the rebuke of God. He had given them senses, rational powers, and abundant opportunities of information; yet they continued as senseless, as if destitute of eyes, ears, and understandings. (Notes, Is. 6:9, 10. 44:18. Matt. 13:13-15. Mark 8:17-21.) The restless and impetuous waves of the ocean seemed to stand in awe of that decree, which God had given from the beginning, to continue in perpetual force, that they should not pass the bounds of the sandy shore. (Notes, Gen. 1:9. Job 38:8-11. Ps. 33:7, 8. 104:6-9. Prov. 8:27-36.) Yet Israel, more senseless and unruly, did not reverence the authority of God, nor tremble at his wrath; but burst all the restraints of his law, in the rebellion of their apostate hearts, and were wholly revolted and gone into idolatry, impiety, and wickedness! Neither had they understanding to consider their own interest. When they adhered to the worship of God, he gave them seasonable rains and plentiful harvests: yet when their apostasy had caused him to withhold these good things from them, they could not be induced to return to him, in order that they might recover them. (Notes, 3:2, 3. 14:19-22. Job 2:12-17. Acts 12:20-23, v. 20.)—Fear ye not me? (22) Notes, 10:6-8. Matt. 10:27, 28. Rev. 15:1-4.

V. 26-29. Men as atrociously wicked might be found among the people of JERUSALEM, as among the worst of the Gentiles. They were generally occupied in overreaching and defrauding one another; and thus their houses were replenished with the gains of deceit, as the fowler's cage with the birds that he has ensnared. In this manner they lived in luxury and magnificence, and even surpassed in wickedness the worst of sinners in other ages and nations. Nor did the rulers redress the wrongs done to the poor, the widows, and orphans, being induced to connivance by bribes, and interested motives: yet by these means they prospered, whilst the Lord was preparing vengeance against the whole nation. (Marg. Ref. Note, 7-9. 9:3-6. Ps. 10:2-11, vv. 8-10. 101: Prov. 1:10-14. Hos. 12:7-9. Mic. 6:10-15. "1-4. Hab. 1:12-17, vv. 14-16. Mal. 3:5, 6. Jam. 5:1-6.)—The last clause is very expressive in the original. "Shal, not my soul avenge itself on a nation, which is like unto this?"—Yet they prosper. (28) "The cause of the orphan, so as to cause it to prosper." Blayney.

V. 30, 31. The most wonderful and horrible wickedness that was committed in the land, and which above all things hastened the ruin of the nation, was the combination of the false prophets and ambitious priests, to seduce the people into a presumptuous security. The prophets accommodated their predictions to the humour of the chief priests, and the princes who were influenced by them; and thus the nation was deceived into the expectation of permanent prosperity, and submitted quietly to the despotic domination of the ungodly rulers and teacher: for they loved the flattering delusion which encouraged them in sin; and emboldened them to despise the disagreeable messages of the true prophets. (Notes, 23:9-15. 26:9-11. Is. 30:8-11. Ez. 22:25-28. 34:2-6. Mic. 3:8-12.) But what would they do, when the event should verify those dreadful denunciations, which they now treated as the effect of a gloomy imagination, or a malevolent disposition? (Note, Is. 10:1-4. Ez. 22:14. Zech. 1:5, 6.)

ments! Alas, impiety and iniquity greatly abound in this our land; yet we may find a considerable number, who are both conscientious in their whole conduct, and steady friends to the truths of God: and for their sakes, in answer to their prayers, and by his blessing on their endeavours, we hope that the Lord will yet spare us. It must, however, be confessed, that the more carefully we investigate the state of religion, comparing it accurately with the standard of Scripture; the worse opinion we shall generally be constrained to entertain of it: and too often we find that an attachment to the truths, and an attendance on the most sacred ordinances of religion, are made subservient to mere secular designs. But nothing more provokes the Lord, than our multiplied perjuries, profligate subscriptions in sacred things, and prostituted sacramental engagements.—We are sure that “the eyes of the Lord are upon the truth;” and, believing him to be righteous in his most mysterious dispensations, we shall gradually be led to see something of the reasons of his conduct; by observing the ingratitude, perverseness, and obstinate rebellion of sinners, who harden their hearts against his mercies, rebukes, corrections, and convictions. This is readily allowed to be the case of numbers in the lower orders of society, who are as profligate as ignorant; who neither know, nor desire to be taught, the way of the Lord; and who plead their want of learning and leisure as an excuse for the most abandoned vice and impiety. But if the faithful minister of God, discouraged by his ill-success among them, and by their unteachableness and obstinacy, should embrace some opportunity of betaking himself to those in superior stations, and such as possess authority, affluence, dignity, or learning; he will commonly have cause to mourn under still greater discouragements. He will find their pride of superiority; their habits of being flattered, humoured, and submitted to, by every one, and indulged in every thing; their infidel contempt of sacred things, which they have earned sophistically to defend; and their enmity to the truths and precepts of the gospel, which run counter to all their maxims, habits, and pursuits; to be far more insurmountable obstacles to his success, than even the ignorant profligacy of the unprincipled poor. So that, in our land, though we have a few exceptions, to the honour of divine grace to which nothing is impossible; it may be said of most of the great and noble, that “they have altogether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds.” Nay, in one respect they are worse than the Jewish nobles; for many of them are more unacquainted with the Scriptures than the untutored multitude. This is an alarming symptom of the decayed condition of our constitution in church and state: and as “our transgressions are multiplied, and our apostacies increased,” we cannot but fear that national judgments, though mercifully retarded, will at length overtake us. And indeed how can we expect, that the Lord should always bear with us and pardon us; when our youth are trained up in infidelity and impiety; when they abuse the bounty of Providence in licentious excess, and learn early to “commit adultery, and assemble themselves by troops in the harlots’ houses;” and when such numbers, whose example should discountenance vice, not content with every other indulgence of their unbridled lusts, are “like fed horses in the morning, every one neighing after his neighbour’s wife?” “Shall not the Lord then visit for these things? and will not his soul be avenged on such a nation as this?”—But in general the minister of God must expect to be disregarded, when he protests against these and similar abominations, and warns ungodly men to beware of temporal judgments, and of eternal punishment. For their presumption commonly equals their profligacy; and frequently they deem themselves entitled to the special protection of God, and deserving of his favour, notwithstanding their enormous wickedness! We must therefore lay our account with being called misanthropes, hypocrites, or fanatics, if we faithfully “declare the whole counsel of God.” But, whilst men thus revile or ridicule those who “speak according to the oracles of God;” they treat Him as a liar, his word as an imposture, and his denunciations as a bugbear; and they will surely find at length, that the words which they despised will prove fire, to consume them, as the fuel for the Lord’s indignation.

V. 15-31. Ministers are not at present authorized to predict national judgments, or to declare what instruments God intends to employ, or in what way he will punish sinners; but they are commissioned to declare, that all the prosperity and confidence of the ungodly will shortly fail, and leave them in everlasting misery and despair. If men will yet inquire, “Wherefore doeth the Lord these things unto us?” let them be referred to their unnumbered iniquities, and manifold ungodliness, for an answer. And let them be reminded that the most tremendous effects of their sins might yet be prevented, if they could but be prevailed on to their senses, faculties, and advantages in a proper manner. But alas! for this they have no disposition; “having eyes they see not, having ears they hear not,” and their rational powers leave them without understanding. So that, whilst all nature proclaims the perfections, and obeys the mandates, of her Creator; man, when left to himself, with all his boasted powers, neither fears his wrath, regards his authority, is grateful for his mercies, nor values his favour; but his revolting and rebellious heart carries him far off from the worship and service of his Maker. And whilst the Lord, year after year, gives plenteous seasons, and “reserveth to us the appointed weeks of harvest;” men live on his bounty, and are thus emboldened to increase their transgressions against him. Nay, when their “iniquities have turned away these good things from them,” they seldom so far consider even their temporal interest, as to use any means of recovering his favour; but vent their disquietude in rebellious complaints, and bitter revilings of one another! It is notorious, that wickedness of every kind prevails among multitudes of nominal Christians, as much as among heathens; nay, that in some respects they even exceed them: so that they treat their brethren as lawful prey, and set traps and lay snares for each other, to plunder, defraud, enslave, or murder them, and thus fill their houses with abundance, through deceit; they wax rich and great, and live in luxury and splendour on the spoils of the poor. It is also to be lamented, that even rulers, out of interest and policy, often leave such men unmolested, and do not judge the cause of the orphan, the widow, the destitute, the oppressed. But, whilst these things ripen guilty nations for vengeance, and ruin the souls of men; nothing is in reality so horrible and lamentable, as the ambition, avarice, ignorance, unfaithfulness, and wickedness of numbers, who are the nominal priests and prophets of the Lord. (Note, Is. 56:9-12.) Too many, who profess to teach religion, prophesy falsely; others enjoy affluence, dignity, and authority by their means; and most of the people love to be thus soothed into a false and fatal security. But what will they do in the approaching day of judgment, and final retribution? “Oh, that men were wise, that they understood these things, that they would consider their latter end!”

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 1. This chapter proceeds with the subject of the foregoing, and predicts the increasing wickedness of the Jews till the captivity; as well as the desolations which then took place. Part of Jerusalem was situated in the lot of Benjamin, and inhabited by that tribe: (Note, Deut. 33:12. Josh. 15:63.) and the Benjamites are here warned to prepare with concert and earnestness to leave the city, that they might seek refuge in some other place.—In the beginning of the Chaldean invasion, the people no doubt flocked to Jerusalem as a place of safety; (25) but this prophetic warning intimated, that it would soon be so straitened by the siege, that its old inhabitants would be glad to leave it. (Note, Matt. 24:15-18.)—The signals, here mentioned, were those at that time in use.—Beth-hacerem was about three miles from Jerusalem, in the road to Tekoa. (Marg. Ref. Neh. 3:14.)—North.] Notes, 1:13, 14. 4:15-18.

V. 2, 3. The prophet here compares Jerusalem to a beautiful woman, accustomed to a delicate and self-indulgent life, who would be soon exposed defenceless to brutal violence: or, as some render it, to “a luxuriant pasture,” which allures the shepherds to bring their flocks to eat it up. Thus the Chaldean invaders were induced by the riches and prosperity of Jerusalem, to encamp in companies against her, and, meeting with feeble resistance, they soon devoured her and shared the spoil. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)

V. 4-8. The Lord here commissions the Chaldeans to prepare war against Jerusalem: and immediately they are represented, as all in earnest and in motion, exciting each other to despatch, lamenting that the least time is lost, and beginning or continuing their march even during the night, as in haste to destroy her palaces. The Lord purposed that they should execute his judgments on that city, which was to be visited for her oppression and impiety; and they were as effectually induced to besiege it, as if he had headed their troops, and given the word of command. The wicked lives of the inhabitants sprang from their corrupt principles and depraved affections, as naturally and plentifully, as waters from the fountain. (Marg. Ref. r. Notes, Prov. 4:23. Matt. 15:15-20.) The cries of those, who suffered violence and oppression, were continually heard in the city; and the Lord meditated to repay the wickedness of the oppressors with grief and wounds. Yet still instruction was given, and mercy proposed; which would leave the obstinate transgressors more inexcusable, but would give encouragement to the few who might repent: and the people were warned to profit by their corrections and rebukes, as well as by their peculiar advantages, otherwise the special favour of God for them as a nation would be discontinued, as well as their land left utterly desolate. (Notes, Hos. 9:9-14.) 'This threatening God fulfilled afterwards, when he suffered the city and nation to be utterly ruined and destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar: but it still received a further completion, in that final desolation brought upon them by the Romans.' Louth.—Prepare, &c. (4) Or, "Sanctify" (Note, Is. 13:2-5).—Hew ye down trees, &c. (6) Notes, Deut. 20:19, 20.

V. 9. The Chaldeans would not only carry away captive the principal people of the land; but they would return again and again, to gather the poor remains, till all were gone: as the gleanings of the vine are gathered; when the gatherer, having put some of the grapes into his basket, turns back his hand to collect those which yet remain, and to convey them to the same place. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 49:9-11, v. 9. 52:24-29. Is. 17:4-8, v. 6. 24:13-15, v. 13.)

V. 10-12. (Notes, 5:3-6. Is. 28:9-13.) The prophet had, without success, addressed both the poor and the rich: and to whom should he now testify, or give warning? (Note, 1 Thes. 4:6-8, v. 6.) Pride, prejudice, and the love of idols and iniquities, so closed their ears, that the word of God could find no entrance: they could not hearken, because they hated God and his service; and their inability aggravated their guilt. (Notes, 4:3, 4. Is. 6:9, 10. John 5:39-44, v. 44. 12:37-41. Acts 7:51-53.) They counted his precepts, warnings, and reproofs to be a reproach to them: they were affronted at the prophets for describing their characters, exposing the ingratitude and rebellion of their conduct, and showing what punishment they deserved and were exposed to: they could not endure those teachers, who were always reproaching them with their sins; but preferred such as had a better opinion of them, and gave them more encouragement. (Notes, Luke 11:45. 2 Tim. 4:1-5.)—The prophet, perceiving them set against his testimony, seems to have been tempted to decline his work: but he was inwardly constrained to speak, being full of the furious indignation of the Lord against their sins, and not able to withhold himself from declaring it. (Note, 20:7-9.) He would therefore pour his warnings out before the first persons that he met with; though they should be the children playing in the streets, or the young men assembled for their pleasure and diversion: as he clearly foresaw desolating judgments coming upon all the inhabitants of the land, without distinction of age or sex.

Assembly. (11) 'רָעָם signifies properly a private consultation, or cabal. Blayney.—Aged, and full of days.] Those advanced in life, and those who were arrived at its latest period.

V. 13-15. The words, rendered "given to covetousness," are peculiarly emphatical.—Both the priests and the prophets dealt falsely for filthy lucre's sake. (Marg. Ref. k. Notes, 5:26-31. 8:10-12. Is. 56:9-12. Mic. 3:8-12.) They ought to have probed the consciences of the people, and faithfully shown them their real state and character, with solemn warning, reproofs, and expositions; and, taking the opportunity of public calamities or perils, have attempted to lead them to true repentance and conversion: but, instead of treating them in this faithful and skilful manner, which would have put them to some pain, yet might have effected a radical cure; being themselves slaves to avarice and other corrupt passions, they only directed them to superficial observances, and then confidently assured them of peace and prosperity. Thus the wound was skinned over without being cured, and was sure to break out more fatally in a little time. (Notes, 4:10. 5:30, 31. 14:13-16. 23:13-17. 28:2-4. Is. 15:6. Ez. 13:10-23. Mic. 3:5-7.) This seems especially to be the abomination, of which the prophet next speaks; and which having committed, they were not ashamed of: nay, when the event showed them to be lying prophets, they could not be put to the blush, but fixed it out with the utmost effrontery; and still carried on the same infamous business for filthy lucre's sake. The Lord had therefore determined, that the covetous priests and lying prophets should be especially marked for destruction, among those that would fall by the sword. (Marg. Ref. o-q. 8:10-12.)

V. 16, 17. The Lord here reminds the people of the directions, which he had always given them אֲשֶׁר his prophets, in order that they might know and walk in his ways. They were called on to attend to instruction, and to inquire for the old way, which had been prescribed by Moses and the ancient prophets, and which was marked with the footsteps of the patriarchs, and their pious ancestors in more prosperous days. Thus, by diligent inquiry they would find the good way of repentance, faith, and holy obedience, and, walking in it, they would "find rest to their souls." (Notes, Cant. 1:7, 8. Is. 28:12, 13. Matt. 11:28-30.) But they resolved, and avowed their determination, not to walk in those ways. And when the Lord had set his prophets, as watchmen, to sound the alarm of approaching judgments, they determined not to take warning! (Notes, 25:3-7. 43:1-3. 44:15-18. Ez. 3:17-21. 33:2-9. Matt. 11:16-24.)—Old paths. (16) עֲדָתֵינוּ Note, Is. 64:5.

V. 18-20. The heathen nations, as well as "the congregation" of Israel, are here called upon to hear and understand the wickedness, which was found among the people of יְהוֹנָח: for which he would bring evil upon them. This would be the natural consequence of their rebellious thoughts and devices, and of their contemptuous rejection of his law and authority, and his messages by the prophets. (Note, 31:10-14, v. 10.) And how could they expect, that their hypocritical burning of costly incense and perfumes, and their ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, *We will not walk therein.

17 Also I set watchmen over you, saying, *Hearken to the sound of the trumpet. But they said, We will not hearken.

18 ¶ Therefore hear, ye nations, and know, O congregation, what is among them.

19 Hear, O earth: behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts, because they have not hearkened unto my words, nor to my law, but rejected it.

20 To what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba, and the sweet cane from a far country? your burnt-offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices sweet unto me.

21 Therefore thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will lay stumblingblocks before this people, and the fathers and the sons together shall fall upon them; the neighbour and his friend shall perish.

23 They shall lay hold on bow and spear;

V. 21. The Lord, provoked by the sins of the Jews, was determined so to order his providential dispensations, as to occasion their judicial infatuation. Thus they would, through their own perverseness, stumble and fall, by choosing those measures which directly tended to their ruin. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 13:15-17, v. 16. Is. 8:11-15. Ez. 14:1-11. V. 24-26. The people seem to be here prophetically represented, as in conversation on the report of the Chaldean invasion: and, being filled with anguish and dismay, they exhort one another to keep close within the walls of Jerusalem; as all other places were exposed to the ravages of the enemy, and full of terror and destruction. And while thus employed, the prophet is sent to warn them and the whole nation, (called, "the daughter of my people,") to show every token of the deepest sorrow and distress, as they would suddenly be plundered, with immense slaughter, by the victorious assailants. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 4:5-13, 9:17-19. Jon. 3:5-9. Mic. 1:10-16. Zech. 12:9-14, v. 10.)

V. 27-30. The Lord had raised up the prophet, made him courageous and firm in his duty, and secured him as a fortress against every enemy: (Note, 1:17-19.) not in order to preserve the city from ruin; but to prove and discover the temper of the people, to show their incorrigible wickedness, and to illustrate the divine justice in punishing them; thus he was appointed to investigate their whole conduct, and to bring in his report concerning them. For they were most grievous rebels and apostates, who slandered the ways and prophets of God to excuse themselves, and employed themselves as talebearers. (Note, Lev. 19:16.) They seemed to be gold or silver: but indeed they were base metal, without any mixture of precious ore; and they continually corrupted one another more and more. (Note, Is. 1:4.) The prophets, whom the Lord used as instruments to assay, refine, and purify them, were not only worn out by useless labour, but put to death for attempting it; as if the refiner's bellows were thrown into the fire, and his lead consumed to no purpose: nay, all the judgments and mercies of God were in vain; for wickedness was not separated from among them. (Notes, 9:7. Prov. 17:3, 25:4, 5. Is. 1:21-27. Ez. 22:18-22. Zech. 13:8, 9. Mal. 3:1-4, v. 3. 1 Pet. 1:6, 7.) Indeed the whole mass was proved to be refuse metal; and not silver, as it had once appeared to be: and men would treat them with contempt, because God no longer regarded them as his people.—Their impudence resembles brass, and their obstinacy may be compared to iron. . . . PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9. Ungodly prosperity, when the Lord is provoked to withdraw his protection, renders men the richer prey to the rapacious, and affords them no security against their depredations; and the more admired, indulged, or delicate they are, the more dreadful will they find it to endure hardship.—Those who are intent on worldly gain, or glory and dominion, (though by inflicting miseries on others,) are assiduous and indefatigable; they lose no time, deny themselves even ordinary refreshments, and consider hindrances as grievous calamities: how shameful then is it, that we should be so attached to our own ease and indulgence, when the glory of God, the welfare of our neighbours, and the salvation of our own souls, demand our vigorous and patient activity!—(Notes, Luke 16:1-8, v. 8. 1 Cor. 9:24-27.)—The Lord uses wicked men as the executioners of his vengeance; and he girds, directs, and prospers them, though they know him not; but it is far more desirable, in the humblest station, to promote the good of our brethren; and it will meet with a far different recompense.—The wickedness of men's lives springs from the corrupt nature of their hearts: this fountain may, in part and for a time, be stopped; yet it will "cast forth its waters," and unless it be cleansed and changed, we can do nothing spiritually good. (Note, 17:9, 10.)—All the secret, as well as the open iniquity in the world is continually "before the eyes of the LORD;" and he will repay oppressors with more terrible miseries, than they can inflict on their poor brethren.—To be separated from God and his favour, is the greatest evil which can befall a rational creature; yet numbers hear the words of the Judge himself declaring, that he will at last say to all the wicked, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels;" and yet they continue careless and unconcerned! Nay, they even seem to "say to the Almighty, Depart from us, we desire not the knowledge of thy ways!"—So long as men continue uninstructed amidst opportunities of instruction, and unsanctified amidst the best means of sanctification, and under repeated salutary chastisements, there is reason to fear, that the Lord will depart from them in final indignation; and he will surely withdraw the light of his gospel from those, who generally despise and abuse it: and this is a more grievous judgment, than any temporal calamity.—When he shall arise to take vengeance, no sinner, of any age, rank, or sex, can possibly escape; but they shall every one be collected, as grapes are gathered to be cast into the wine-press.

V. 10-15. The most obvious and undeniable truths are, alas! properly noticed by very few. Most men stop their ears against all salutary warnings and instructions; and their pride and lusts render them incapable of hearing, understanding, believing, and obeying the gospel of Christ. They count the faithful preaching of God's word "a reproach," and affront to them; and either neglect all religious instruction, or "turn away their ears from the truth to hearken to fables."

CHAPTER VII.

Jeremia is sent to the temple, to call the Jews to repentance, that they might not be removed, 1-3; to reprove their presumptuous confidence in the temple, while living in gross wickedness, 4-11; and to predict that Jerusalem would be desolated, like Shiloh; and the people carried captive, as Israel had been, 12-15. God directs the prophet not to pray for them. He shows him their idolatries, and the judgments about to come on them, 16-20. He rejects with disdain the sacrifices of the disobedient; and exposes the perverse conduct of the nation, from their departure out of Egypt, 21-28. A call to mourning for the prevailing abominations, and a denunciation of desolating judgments, 29-34.

THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Stand ⁱⁿ the gate of the LORD's house, and proclaim there this word, and say, ^bHear the word of the LORD, all ye of Judah, ^cthat enter in at these gates to worship the LORD.

3 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of

This often so discourages the zealous minister, that he has little heart to speak any more: yet a sense of duty, zeal for the honour of God, holy indignation against sin, and a hope of rescuing a few at least from perdition, constrain him to proceed, and to declare the wrath of God against the impenitent workers of iniquity: and, being weary of holding in, he may sometimes introduce the important subject in such places and companies, as may appear unseasonable and improper. But every man is concerned in it: very few are duly sensible of its importance, and of their own danger: and those scenes of amusement and pleasure, which engross the time, the thoughts, and affections of the young and gay, are proofs what need they have of being "warned to flee from the wrath to come." But that "covetousness," to which elder persons are addicted, is a more dangerous obstruction to the care of the soul than the diversions of children, or even the dissipated pleasures of youth. If we judge of this vice by the word of God, we shall find immense multitudes, in every rank of life, given up to it: and too often we shall have to lament, that even the ministers of religion are by it induced to deal unfaithfully and falsely, in the most sacred concerns and transactions, which involve the most awful responsibility. Many are so taken up with forming connexions, and seeking preferment, that they neglect the study of the Scriptures, and the discharge of their duty; they adopt smooth, fashionable, soothing systems of divinity; like unskilful surgeons, they heal every wound slightly; either because through negligence or pride they know no better; or because they do not choose to avow sentiments unfavourable to their interests, or to utter things grating to the ears of their generous patrons. Thus, they speak "Peace, peace, when there is no peace:" but what a dreadful account will be at last required of them!—Whilst sinners are ashamed of the abominations, which they have committed, their case is hopeful: but when they are incapable of blushing, and can "glory in their shame," they ripen apace for destruction.

V. 16-30. If we would learn the safe and happy path, amidst the discordant opinions that prevail on every side; let us look well to our steps, put ourselves in the way of instruction, ask wisdom of God, and reduce what we know to practice: especially let us diligently inquire for the old paths, in which patriarchs, prophets, apostles, martyrs, and other honoured servants of God, have walked, and which they have pointed out to others. (Notes, Heb. 11: 121.) Following their steps we cannot fail of finding "rest to our souls." But many know nothing of these ways, and take no pains to inquire after them: many prefer modern improvements and discoveries: nay, many treat these ancient ways, as novel inventions, and enthusiastic reveries; and others who have some speculative knowledge of them, do not walk in them. But if men will not obey the voice of God, nor take warning when his watchmen sound the alarm, nor flee to his appointed refuge; it will appear at the day of judgment to all the world, that their ruin originated from their own wicked thoughts, because they did not hearken unto the words of God, but rejected them. Nor can any man reasonably expect, that the Lord should accept the most costly oblations or services, which are offered in impenitence, or in proud contempt of the sacrifice and intercession of our great High-Priest. To such men, even this "tried Foundation" becomes "a Rock of offence:" every doctrine, and ordinance, and providential dispensation, concurs in blinding and hardening them to their perdition: and thus unbelievers will perish together, being unable to help one another. They despise indeed the distant report, both of temporal judgments and of eternal punishment; but their near approach will soon cause their courage to fail, and then anguish will seize upon them; for the sword of the most cruel enemy is as nothing, in comparison of the final wrath of almighty God. (Note, Ps. 90:11.) In short, sinners must lament and mourn, either here in penitent sorrow and self-abasement; or hereafter with doleful, unavailing, and eternal "wailing and gnashing of teeth." If the bold and faithful ministers of God are not instrumental to the conversion of those whom they address; they will be

NOTES.—CHAP. VII. V. 1, 2. This chapter begins a new prophecy, which seems to have been delivered some time after the preceding. The prophet was commanded to station himself in the entrance of the temple, and there to proclaim his message to all those who came thither to worship, probably, on some of the solemn feast-days. This must have given great offence to the chief priests, and to those who had authority in ecclesiastical concerns. (Notes, 26:2-9. Matt. 21:23-46. Acts 5:17-28.)

V. 3, 4. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 5-15.) The people gloried and trusted in the temple of JEHOVAH, even when they were given up to idolatry and wickedness: and when the prophets foretold judgments from God on the city and nation: they boasted that the temple, with its courts and solemnities, belonged to the Lord; and they were confident that he would spare the city on that account; and not suffer his sanctuary to be defiled by the heathen. Thus they "trusted in lying words," which the false prophets spake to them: as if they were so unalterably the favourites of heaven, that they might be sure of protection, whatever wickedness they committed.—The three fold repetition seems only to mark the rash and presumptuous confidence of those who used the words (Notes, 18:18; Is. 66:1, 2. Mic. 3:8-12. Acts 6:14-14, v. 13, 14; 7:44-50. 21:27-30.)

V. 5-7. As the omniscient God foresaw, that the Jews would not thus repent, and amend their lives; the absolute predictions of desolating judgments were in no wise inconsistent with these conditional promises. It was their undeniable duty, "thoroughly to amend their ways and their doings," and to "do justice, love mercy, and walk humbly with their God;" and it was peculiarly honourable to him, thus to hold out encouragements to them, in case they attended to his exhortations.—The prescience or decrees of God cannot be the rule or motive of man's duty: and the exhortations, promises, and threatenings should always be considered, as abstracted from that incomprehensible subject; because this is the scriptural and rational way of stating the matter: for "the secret things belong unto the LORD our God; but those things which are revealed belong to us, and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law." (Note, Deut. 29:29.)—Amend, &c. (5) "Make good your ways." These had been very bad. (Marg. Ref. Note, 2:33-37.)—For ever and ever. (7) Note, Gen. 1:7, 8.

V. 8-11. (Note, Ez. 23:39.) The Jews acted, as if God had delivered and protected them, that they might have the opportunity of committing every kind of abomination; thus men sometimes appear very penitent, when they are sick and think themselves near death; but when they recover, they return to wickedness, as if they supposed that God had restored them for that purpose. Or, they thought, that an attendance on the worship at the temple had delivered them from the guilt of their past sins, and that they might now without concern return to their idolatries and iniquities: as some men task themselves with fastings and devotions, and come to the Lord's table; that having, as they think, settled the old account, they may return to their former course of life without scruple, till the next reckoning day. Or, they prayed, "Deliver us, that we may do all these abominations." This was the real import of their devotions. Thus they made the house of God a den of robbers, by frequenting it in the midst of their unrepented frauds, oppressions, murders, adulteries, perjuries, and idolatries, and yet they thought, that the temple, which they so scandalously profaned, would be their protection! (Marg. Ref. Notes, Matt. 21:12, 13. John 2:14-17.)—I have seen, &c. (11) Notes, Ps. 94:9. Mal. 3:5, 6, v. 5.

V. 12-15. The tabernacle and ark of God had been long stationed at Shiloh; till at length the impiety of Eli's sons, and the wickedness of the people, provoked God to give up

8 Behold, ^{ye} trust in lying words, that cannot profit.

9 Will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, and walk after other gods whom ye know not;

10 And ^{come} and stand before me in this house, which is called by my name, and say, We are delivered to do all these abominations?

11 Is ^{this} house, which is called by my name, become a den of robbers in your eyes? Behold, ^{even} I have seen it, saith the LORD.

12 But go ye now unto ^{my} place which ^{was} in Shiloh, where I set my name at the first, and see what I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel.

13 And now, because ye have done all these works, saith the LORD, and I spake unto you, rising up early and speaking, but ye heard not; and I called you, but ye answered not;

14 Therefore will I do unto ^{this} house, which is called by my name, wherein ye trust, and unto the place which I gave to you and to your fathers, as I have done to Shiloh.

15 And ^I will cast you out of my sight, as I have cast out all your brethren, ^{even} the whole seed of Ephraim. [Practical Observations.]

16 Therefore ^{pray} not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me: for ^I will not hear thee.

19 Do ^{they} provoke me to anger? saith the LORD; do they not ^{provoke} themselves to the confusion of their own faces?

20 Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold, mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man, and upon beast, and upon the trees of the field, and upon the fruit of the ground: and it shall burn, and shall not be quenched.

21 ^{Thus} saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; ^{Put} your burnt-offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh.

22 For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them, in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices:

23 But this thing commanded I them, saying, Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people: and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you.

24 But ^{they} hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but ^{walked} in the counsels, and in the imagination of their evil heart, and ^{went} backward, and not forward.

25 Since ^{the} day that your fathers came forth out of the land of Egypt unto this day, I have ^{been} sent unto you all my servants the prophets, daily rising up early and sending them:

Queen of heaven. (18) This may be understood of the moon, or of the whole frame of the visible heavens, of which the people had some image or symbol, that they worshipped with great earnestness. (Notes, Deut. 4:19, Job 31:24-28.)—Some think, that the cakes here mentioned, were stamped with the likeness of the idol, to which they were offered.—It is remarkable that the papists have adopted this title in the worship of the Virgin Mary, styling her 'The queen of heaven'; as if they were ambitious of resembling the Jews in their idolatry.

V. 19. The people committed wickedness, as if they meant it on purpose to affront the Lord: (18): but did they think they could do him any real harm? Or could they expect any other, than to expose themselves by it to confusion and misery? (Notes, Ez. 8:17, 18, 1 Cor. 10:18-22.)

V. 20. Marg. Ref. Notes, 4:19-27, 9:10, 11, 12:1-4, Deut. 33:2, Lam. 4:11.

V. 21-23. The Jews confided in their sacrifices, especially the burnt-offerings, which were wholly consumed on the altar, (Notes, Lev. 1:) as if by them they made the Lord their debtor. But he indignantly bade them take these and add them to the peace-offerings, on which the priests and offerers feasted; (Notes, Lev. 7:12-18, Deut. 12:5-7.) for he would not accept them at their hands. It was the grand design of the whole revelation to Israel at Mount Sinai, to lead the people to obedience, and the sacrifices were appointed in subserviency to that end: and not merely as external observances, pleasing to God, however offered, or by men of any character. They were in themselves instances of obedience; they formed an expression of the offerer's repentance, and faith in the promised Saviour; and they were 'means of grace,' and of communion with God; all which, when genuine, conducted to the conscientious obedience of holy fear and love. In this way the Lord would have been their God, and they would have been his people; but all their external observances were worthless, when this obedience was wanting. (Notes, 1 Sam. 15:22, 23, Ps. 50:7-15, Is. 1:10-15, 66:3-4, Hos. 6:6, 8:13, Am. 5:21-24, Mark 12:28-34.)—Concerning. (22) Or, 'For the sake of, &c.' This the word properly signifies.

V. 24-26. The prophet ought not to be discouraged, as if his labours were singularly unsuccessful: for the people had always been disobedient and obstinate, notwithstanding all the means which God, by his servants the prophets had the ark into captivity: then it was finally removed from Shiloh, which was afterwards reduced or desolated. (Notes, Josh. 18:1, 1 Sam. 2:13-16, 22-34, 43-48, Ps. 78:56-69.)—Probably, Shiloh was wholly destroyed when the ten tribes were carried captive. Yet the inhabitants of that city had had as good ground to presume, that God would preserve them for the sake of his sanctuary, as the inhabitants of Jerusalem now had; especially as the latter were become still more abandoned than they, in the midst of more abundant means and advantages. Accordingly, the Lord assured them, that he would deal with Jerusalem as he had dealt with Shiloh; destroying the temple, removing all the sacred utensils, and utterly desolating the city: and that he would drive the inhabitants out of their favoured land, into heathen countries, as he had done the inhabitants of the kingdom of Israel; banishing them, as it were, from the sight of his eyes. (Note, Deut. 11:12, Is. 50:1-3.)—"Rising up early" (13) signifies diligence and assiduity. The same sense is elsewhere expressed in the Hebrew by doing any thing in the morning; which our translators render early. Ps. 46:5, 90:14, Louth. (Notes, 25:3, Is. 50:4.)

V. 16. The prophet, hoping that the threatenings were not absolute, continued to intercede for the people. But the Lord not only said to him "Let me alone;" (Notes, Ez. 32:7-10, p. 10,) but he absolutely forbade him to pray for them any more, for he would not hear him: nor would he have him pray in vain. (Notes, 14:7-12, 15:1, Ez. 14:13-21.) He might pray for the conversion and salvation of individuals; for the mitigation of national judgments; for the preservation of the Jews during the captivity, and for their restoration; but he was not allowed any more to deprecate the destruction of the city and temple, the desolations of the land, and the captivity of the people. (Note, 5-7.)—Nothing but an universal reformation, which God foresaw would not be effected, could deliver the Jews from . . . captivity and desolation. . . The divine decree, being without repentance irrevocable, 4:28, 14:11, 12. God forbids Jeremiah to interpose by his prayers for the reversing of it. Louth.

V. 17, 18. To convince the prophet, that the irreversible sentence was most just, the Lord calls his attention to the unanimous zeal of old and young, men and women, for their abominable idolatries. (Notes, 44:15-18, Lev. 24-8, Num. 28:5-7.)

27 Therefore thou shalt speak all these words unto them; but they will not hearken to thee: thou shalt also call unto them; but they will not answer thee.

29 ¶ Cut off thy hair, O Jerusalem, and cast it away, and take up a lamentation on high places; for the Lord hath rejected and forsaken the generation of his wrath.

30 For the children of Judah have done evil in my sight, saith the Lord: they have set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to pollute it.

31 And they have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire; which I commanded them not, neither came it into my heart.

32 ¶ Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be called Tophet nor the valley of the son of Hinnom, but the valley of slaughter: for they shall bury in Tophet, till there be no place.

33 And the carcasses of this people shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth; and none shall fray them away.

34 Then will I cause to cease from the cities of Judah, and from the streets of Jerusalem, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride: for the land shall be desolate.

perseveringly used to reclaim them. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Zeph. 3:5-7. Zech. 1:2-6.)—The command given to Jeremiah to speak all the words of God to his people, though previously assured that they would not believe and obey them, shows that invitations, exhortations, and expostulations, are in no wise inconsistent with the presence of God, that men will not regard them; nor with his decree to "give them up to their own hearts' lusts." Such protestations, indeed, tend eventually to manifest the divine justice in pouring out his vengeance on hardened rebels, and answer most important purposes in the moral government of God.

Ref. 1.*) Thus Jerusalem was ordered to cut off her hair, as about to be profaned and trodden down by the Gentiles: she was also to use every token of deep distress; for that generation of Israel would endure the severe wrath of God, and be rejected and forsaken by him. V. 31. The Lord had never commanded such unnatural and cruel sacrifices as are here described, or the people might have had some excuse for renouncing his worship. But indeed he had expressly prohibited them; nay, he abhorred them as most detestable; and yet the people preferred the worship of Molech, which imposed on them so hard an injunction, to his reasonable and spiritual service! PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-15. The great doctrines and precepts of the Scriptures should be proclaimed in the most public manner; and those who are employed in this service, must not fear the faces or respect the persons of men, whatever be their rank or office.

Faithful preaching ought to attend on the administration of other sacred ordinances; that men may be warned not to rest in forms, and to beware of irreverence and hypocrisy.—No observances, creeds, or experiences, in which men glory and confide, will profit them; if they do not sincerely and thoroughly amend their ways and doings. They may in various ways "trust in lying words," and in the words of lying teachers, presuming themselves to be the people of God, and entitled to all the blessings of his covenant; whilst they neglect justice and equity, oppress the stranger, the fatherless, and widow, or commit other atrocious crimes: but if God would not suffer Israel to inhabit Canaan, when they thus abused their privileges; will he admit those into heaven who copy their example? He graciously pardons and saves the most atrocious criminals, who embrace his gospel; and his "saving grace teaches them to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world;" but no one can have any ground to deem himself a partaker of this salvation, who allows himself in the practice of one known sin, or the habitual neglect of one known duty. But presumptuous hypocrites deny, overlook, or evade these conclusions, by various subterfuges; and they shift from one delusion to another, as times and circumstances change. The legal Pharisee, for instance, pays a sort of quit-rent to the Lord, by a task of austerity or devotion; and thus he purchases the liberty, as he supposes, to live the rest of his time according to his own plan. And many of this description, after all their sanctimonious scrupulosity, will cheat, lie, perjure, commit adultery, or any other wickedness, which they hope may escape detection and punishment from man. The evangelical Pharisee, and antinomian enthusiast, receive a mutilated and distorted evangelical creed, into a carnal heart; they contend earnestly for the doctrines of free grace; they mistake some change of sentiment, or sect, or some lively impression on the imagination or affections, for "a new creation" unto holiness; they call the most open apostacy, "backsliding;" or the most notorious and unrepented vices, "the spots of God's children;" and then by perverting the doctrine of final perseverance, they hope to live the life of the wicked, and at last to "die the death of the righteous!" Thus men "sin on that grace may abound;" they think themselves delivered from wrath, to commit all kinds of abomination; and speak of the church of God, as if it were a den of robbers, and adulterers, and covetous oppressors, or of contentious and ill-tempered neighbours and relatives! Those who are not conversant with such matters, can scarcely deem it possible, that men should hold such impious sentiments; yet it is, alas! too true that many do; and it is no more incredible, than that the Jews should come from their idols and wicked practices, to the temple of God, and then be confident of his protection, because his ordinances were thus profaned among them! If any thing could break this "strong delusion," the dealings of God with his ancient people might teach men another lesson: but the cross of Christ, when duly understood, forms the most effectual antidote to these detestable sentiments. Did the Son of God then indeed give himself for our transgressions, to show the justice and holiness of God, the excellency and obligation of the violated law, and the evil and desert of sin? and was this in order to give his followers leave to commit sin with impunity? Who can adequately abhor such a thought!

V. 16-34. When the professed worshippers of God have been deluded into a vain imagination, that the practice of allowed sin, and the enjoyment of the divine favour may, by some means or other, be reconciled; they are seldom recovered. We are not indeed forbidden to pray for any person, or people, by name; yet there are some, respecting whom we feel discouragement, whenever we attempt to plead in their behalf; as if the Lord said to us, "Make no intercession for them, for I will not hear thee." (Note, 1 John 5:16-18, v. 16.)—Whatever enormity we witness in the conduct of the ignorant and profane, there remains hope concerning them; but presumptuous professors of religion, who commit and plead for sin, must in general be let alone. If, however, they will learn nothing from us; we may learn from them, "whilst we think we stand, to take heed lest we fall;" and to be as diligent and as careful in instructing our children in the truths of God, and in habituating them to attend on divine ordinances, as they often are in initiating them in the mysteries of iniquity.—Hardened sinners often delight in showing their contempt of God, as if this could interrupt his happiness, when it only provokes him to hasten and enhance their misery. Nothing can avert the ruin of those who persist in disobedience; and we understand the gospel as little as the Jews did the law, if we think that a notional belief and a high confidence that we are the people of God, can avail us, if we persist in rebellion; or that he will accept any particular services, which are intended as compensations for continuing in the practice of some beloved iniquity. The way is indeed open for the sinner to return: and when we are brought to obey the gospel, all former offences are pardoned, imperfect services are accepted, the Lord becomes our God, and numbers us among his people; we learn to walk in his ways, and "it is well with us;" his gospel furnishes us with motives, encouragements, and assistance; and his ordinances are means of grace to our souls. But he abhors external services, when men continue to follow their own counsels, to walk after their own evil imaginations; and when they grow worse in the midst of opportunities of improvement.—The minister must speak all the message of God, though men will not hear: he must call on them to repent, and invite them to come to Christ, even could he know that they would reject his message: and when individuals or nations cast off the authority of God, and "refuse correction;" or become so addicted to dissimulation and hypocrisy, that "truth perisheth, and is cut off from their mouth;" their guilt should be charged home upon them, and warning given to them and to others.—The Lord hates sin the most, when it is nearest to him; and the profanation of his solemn ordinances is the worst of all impiety.—If men were required to endure such losses, hardships, weariness or expense, in the service of God, as they often impose on themselves in their sinful pursuits, they would complain bitterly of his commandments. But they are frequently cruel to themselves, their families, and children; they ruin their health or circumstances, and act contrary to natural affection, without complaining, when serving sin and Satan.—All the precepts and prohibitions of the Lord are "holy, just, and good;" and the self-denial which he requires, rational and salutary. But the devil is a cruel tyrant as a tempter in this world: what then will he be as a tormentor in the next? There all joy will for ever cease from the workers of iniquity. May we then learn to relish holy and spiritual joys, and to sit loose to all other satisfactions, however lawful in themselves.

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 1-3. When the Chaldeans had taken Jerusalem, without doubt they accomplished this prediction: and being enraged at the Jews, especially at the rulers and teachers, who had violated their treaties, and made so obstinate a resistance; they absurdly vented their indignation by abusing the bodies of the dead, as well as by massacring the living. Thus the bones of the principal persons especially were taken from the graves, and spread before the sun, moon and stars: and they were disgraced, and left as dung on the earth; (Notes, 22:13-19, v. 19. 36:30,31. 1 Kings 21:23. 2 Kings 9:30-37, v. 35-37. Is. 14:16-20.) as it were in the presence of those creatures, whom they had worshipped and served, instead of the great Creator. Their idolatry is spoken of in a variety of phrases of similar import, to show their excessive attachment to it. And the remains of Israel, (no more worthy to be called "a holy nation," but an "evil family,") being dispersed into distant countries, would encounter such miseries, as would cause them to envy those who were slain at the taking of the city. (Notes, Lam. 4:6-9. Rev. 9:6.)—Some think that the Chaldeans broke open the monuments of the great men, in searching for the treasures which were supposed to be laid up in them.—The latter part of the second verse might be rendered "Because they loved them, and because they served them, &c." They were thus disgraced by the just judgment of God, for their idolatry.

V. 4-7. 'Some explain the fourth verse in this sense: Are they so far plunged in sins, and the miseries consequent thereto, that there is no hope of their recovery? ... If they will turn to God, will not he immediately be pacified and return to them? Louth. The same word is in that verse rendered turn and return; but if a man ha-e turned out of the way, he must turn again, in order to return into it: so that the same sense is preserved by the interpretation given below, which seems most agreeable to the context, and the scope of the prophet's keen expostulations. If men fall into a pit, or fall down by the road, they attempt to rise again, and are glad of assistance: when they fall into trouble they endeavour to extricate themselves: and if a traveller have lost his way, he will bear to be told of his mistake, and be ready to ask for information, and to return back to the road. Why then did the people of Jerusalem persist in apostasy from God? Why were they so obstinate in idolatry, notwithstanding all the methods used to reclaim them? It was undeniable, that they were fallen into sin and misery: and yet they held fast the delusion, and could not be induced to return to the worship and service of God! They were fallen into a pit, and would not attempt to get out of it! they had wandered from the way, and would not attempt to return to it! The Lord had his eye upon them in all their trials: but saw no man who spake aright, and as it became sinners in such circumstances. None of them repented of their sins, or condemned themselves for their rebellion, ingratitude, and folly. On the contrary, every one of them returned to his sinful practices, as eagerly, and with as little regard to consequences, as the impetuous horse rushes into the battle. (Note, Job 39:19-25.) Even the birds of passage knew the times, which Providence had appointed for their removal from one climate to another; but the Jews, more stupid than they, could not perceive "the signs of the times;" they did not see that the Lord was about to execute judgments, which could not be shunned, without repentance and conversion; indeed, they knew neither their duty, nor the rules of the Lord's dealings with them. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Prov. 6:6-11. Is. 1:3.)

V. 8, 9. (Notes, Rom. 2:17-23.) The Jews valued themselves upon their superior wisdom and knowledge, and upon having the law of God among them. But what ground had they for such glorying, when they were guilty of the most atrocious idolatry and iniquity? They might as well have been left in ignorance, with the poor Gentiles. The Lord had given the law, and the scribes laboured in writing copies of it, and expounding it, to no purpose, if obedience was not rendered to it. Indeed their politicians and counsellors could not prevent the ruin of the state: they would be frustrated in all their devices, put to shame, dismayed, ensnared, and taken prisoners. For what wisdom could be in such men as rejected the truths, precepts, and warnings of God's word? (Note, Is. 8:20.) The title of Scribe, as applied to the skill of transcribing or interpreting the law, is first given to Ezra: (Ezra 7:6.) who was not merely a copier of the law, but likewise an explainer of the difficulties of it. (Neh. 8:9, 13.) And it is likely none made it their business to write copies of the law, but those who were well versed in the study of it; which would best secure them from committing mistakes in their copies: from hence the word signifies, in the New Testament, those who were learned in explaining the law. Louth. (Notes, 36:4. Ezra 7:6—10. Neh. 8:1—13. Matt 13:51, 52.)—As Ezra lived long after Jeremiah; the quotation can refer only to the order of books in our Bibles.—The word (כֹּהֵן), rendered “in vain,” generally signifies “a lie,” (“^{dealt} falsely,” the same word, 10.) and perhaps it refers to the false interpretations of the scribes. (Notes, Matt. 15:1—6.)

V. 10—12. Not only would the women be carried captive, the fields ravaged, the crops carried off, and the cattle driven away; but God would give the estates of the Jews to those, who would permanently possess them, as their own inheritance.

Given to covetousness. (10) One effect of covetousness, in the ministers of religion, (Note, 6:13—15. P. O. 10—15.) may here be noticed; and it is too important to be omitted: namely, that of those, in highly responsible stations in the church, who appropriate to the emolument of their own families and connexions, what was intrusted to their stewardship for the common benefit of the souls of men.

V. 13. This verse may be literally translated, “In gathering I will consume them, saith JEHOVAH. There are no grapes on the vine; no figs on the fig-tree; the very leaf is fallen; and ^{what} I gave them shall pass away from them.” Israel was a vine, or fig-tree; but there was no fruit on the vine, or fig-tree, even the profession of true religion was cast off; and therefore God would take away from the people all he peculiar advantages which he had afforded them. (Notes, s. 5:1—7. Matt. 21:17—20, 33—44. 25:24—30. Luke 13:6—9.)

V. 14—16. The Jews are again introduced, conferring together on the report of the Chaldean invasion as already arrived. They excited one another without delay to leave the villages and open country, that they might take refuge in the defended cities; and there remain silent and inactive, as resistance seemed hopeless: for they saw the hand of God in the visitation, and this damped their expectations and enervated their efforts; as he had, for their sins, given them water mingled with gall, hemlock, or poison, to drink. bled themselves under the afflicting hand of God; or of those, who counted him their inexorable enemy, and sat down in sullen despondency. (Am. 6:9—11.) The former had hoped, that their brethren would have joined with them in repentance and prayer, and that the storm would have thus been averted: the latter, through their own presumption and the deception of their false prophets, had expected peace and deliverance, when these desolating judgments came upon them.—The snorting of the horses in the Chaldean army, being heard in the northern extremity of the land, terror would soon diffuse itself in every place, and speedily be followed by tremendous devastations; not only in the open country, but in Jerusalem itself.—This last verse is awfully sublime. (Note, 4:19—27.)—“Nebuchadnezzar, having subdued Phenicia, passed through the tribe of Dan, in his way to Jerusalem.” Blayney. (Notes, 1:13, 14. Judg. 18:7—10, v. 7.)

V. 17. The Chaldeans are here represented as pestiferous serpents, on account of their motives and conduct in this invasion, and of its fatal effects upon the Jews. The invaders were so cruel, subtle, and malicious, and so intent upon the spoil, that they were deaf to all arguments and entreaties; nothing could mollify them, or interrupt their progress, or escape their ravages. (Note, Ps. 58:3—5.)—Serpents. נחשים. Gen. 3:1. Heb.

V. 18, 19. The prophet complains, that his heart was ready to faint under the pressure of his sorrow: he had endeavoured to comfort himself in submission to the will of God; but Jerusalem and her inhabitants, exposed to be plundered and massacred, continually haunted his imagination, and the cries of the sufferers seemed to sound in his ears. Even before these calamities arrived, the people distressed him by inquiring whether JEHOVAH did not inhabit Zion; and whether their king were not of David's line, and of God's own appointment: or, whether God himself, the King of Israel, was not in her. (Notes, Is. 12:4—6. Zeph. 3:14—17. Zech. 2:10—13. 9:9, 10.) How then could he leave his city to be profaned and spoiled by idolaters? Would not this dishonour his great name?—In answer to this the LORD demands, why the Jews had renounced his worship, and provoked him to anger with their multiplied idolatries and lying vanities, invented in foreign countries. They had broken the covenant and defiled the city and temple, and his honour required him to execute condign punishment on them.—The word may be rendered, more agreeably to the Hebrew thus: “The voice of the cry of the daughter of my people, from a land afar off.” . . . So that the prophet represents the doleful complaints of the Jews, under a state of captivity, as if God had quite forsaken and disowned them. . . . “But why have ye provoked me? &c.” Louth.—The instruction is the same, whether our translation be adhered to, or this be adopted.

V. 20. The people seem here to speak. When pressed closely by the siege, they had waited for deliverance in vain. The Egyptians had been expected to come to their relief; but the harvest and the summer were passed, and they were not delivered; so that immediate destruction now stared them in the face. (Notes, Luke 19:41—44. Heb. 3:7. 3.)

The prophet shows the excess of his grief for the miseries of his people, and his abhorrence of their crimes; and also the justice of God in his dealings with them, 1-16. his people in their troubles; for he was melancholy, disconsolate, and stupified with astonishment. He saw the nation lying in the condition of a man expiring of wounds, to which no proper remedy was applied: yet as Gilead produced medicinal balm, (Marg. Ref. c.) and there were physicians, or surgeons, who had skill to use it for healing wounds; so in this case likewise, effectual relief might be obtained. The Lord was ever ready to deliver his people, when they returned to him; his mercy and grace were proposed to all who sought them; and his prophets were sent to exhort and instruct them. Why then did they remain in so hopeless a condition? Because they were set against their only remedy and physician, and were vainly employed in seeking help in other ways, and from other quarters.—"I am black;" I look ghastly, as those who are dying. . . . God had sent his prophets, as so many spiritual physicians; and they had given the best advice: but the fault lay wholly in the patients themselves, who refused to submit to their prescriptions. Louth.—The wickedness and negligence of the rulers and priests might likewise be assigned as a reason. (Notes, 6:13-15, v. 14. 30:12-18, vv. 13, 14. Is. 1:5, 6, 21-24.)—It is not agreed what kind of gum is meant by the balm of Gilead: but it was considered in those days as a very efficacious healing medicine.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. The Lord can employ the most ferocious conduct of insulting victors to execute his own righteous purposes; and, though no real harm can be done to a dead body; yet, when ringleaders in atrocious crimes are disgraced after death, it has a tendency to impress terror on the minds of survivors; and it affectingly teaches us, that the vengeance of God after death is most to be dreaded. This will be executed without respect of persons; and those who have abused superior talents and done the most mischief, will have the largest share of contempt and misery.—The example even of zealous idolaters may instruct us, how we ought to love and serve, to walk with, obey, imitate, seek after, and worship the Lord our God, as our one great privilege, business, and delight. But, as the conduct of mankind is generally the reverse of this, we need not wonder that his jealous indignation renders them miserable even in this world. Thus many are led to prefer a hopeless death to a joyless life; and then rashly and rebelliously to rush into the presence of their angry Judge, with all their unrepented sins upon their heads, even by the commission of another most atrocious crime! But, whatever comes upon us here, let us humble ourselves before God, "submit to his righteousness," and seek his mercy. Then we shall be enabled to "possess our souls in patience," and to wait the appointed season of deliverance: then we shall be willing to live, though afflicted, and yet "count it far better to depart, and to be with Christ." (Note, Phil. 1:21-26.)—But men do not act in the concerns of their souls as in other matters. They fall into sin and suffer for it; they are consumed with terrors; and they are conscious that they are in the road to misery, and not felicity; yet they will use no proper means of escape! Nay, they are affronted by the offer of help or counsel! They rush into dissipation to banish reflection, and strive to forget present sorrows by ensuring severer in future. Thus men depart from God "with a perpetual backsliding;" when they can find a soothing delusion, either by infidelity, or some false system of religion, "they hold fast the deceit and refuse to return." In this way many professors of the gospel turn aside, and "their last state is worse than the first." So that, after all the warnings and invitations of the sacred oracles, and the present painful effects of men's sins, even the all-penetrating eye of God sees no man disposed of himself to true repentance; but many return, even after convictions, to their evil courses, with the most irrational impetuosity. Yet some do speak aright; do examine, judge, and condemn themselves; repent, forsake their sins, and do works meet for repentance: they "work out their own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God who worketh in them to will and to do of his good pleasure." If then one thought or desire of escaping the wrath of God be excited in any person's mind, it should be turned into a prayer, that "God would give him repentance and his Holy Spirit," that he may be made wise unto salvation. For though many boast of religious knowledge, and value themselves on being acquainted with the Scriptures; yet, except taught by the Spirit of God, the instinct of brutes will prove a far surer guide, than man's supposed wisdom: for the most sagacious in other respects act foolishly in the most important concerns, and know not aright the truths, precepts or ordinances of God; they neither profit by the dispensations of Providence, nor prepare for the judgment to come. When we see how men oppose, neglect, abuse, or despise the Scriptures; we may sometimes be ready to conclude, that they were given in vain, and that preachers and expositors labour to no purpose. Yet, while many "wrest them to their own destruction," others are "made wise to salvation." But there is nothing worthy of the name of wisdom in those who reject revelation: and they will soon be ashamed of all the systems which they now adopt; they will be dismayed at the approach of those judgments, which they now deride; and find themselves caught in a snare, of which they now have no conception.—Selfish teachers indeed speak in a more soothing strain, and promise "peace when there is no peace;" thus men encourage each other in committing abomination without shame or fear; but, "in the day of visitation," their abused plenty will be torn from them, and they will have no refuge to flee to.

V. 13-22. Happy are they, who by calamities, or by any means, are brought to be silent in submission and self-abasement before God: (Note, Ez. 16:60-63, v. 63.) for all, who are not thus humbled, will be silenced before his judgment-seat, and made to drink the water of gall for their sins. (Note, Rom. 3:19, 20.)—While transgressors look for peace and prosperity, sudden destruction overtakes them; and there will be no charming or escaping the executioners of divine vengeance; no comforting of themselves under these sorrows. But, however the servants of God may grieve for the miseries, which they foresee coming upon those whom they love; they will soon be satisfied with the reasons of the divine conduct, and "their sorrow will be turned into joy."—The justice of God is peculiarly manifest in the punishment of those who deem themselves secured, by the engagements of the new covenant and their relation to God; whilst they idolize the world and are slaves to their lusts.—As salvation by Christ can only be found in this life, so the present opportunity should be seized; lest at the hour of death, or the day of judgment, any should dolefully exclaim, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved."—The Lord hath graciously become our Physician; and the blood of Christ, and the influences of the Holy Spirit are more effectual to heal the wounded conscience, and the distempered heart, than any medicines to cure the diseases of the body. Why then are sinners not healed? Is there no Saviour, no sanctifier? Alas! they deem themselves whole, or are in love with their disease, or hate the Physician and his means of cure, or employ "physicians of no value," and madly attempt other methods of recovery. Thus they die unpardoned and unchanged; for they will not come to Christ for life and salvation. (Note, Matt. 9:10-13, v. 12.)

NOTES.—CHAP. IX. V. 1, 2. The prophet did not think himself sufficiently affected by the foresight of the miseries, which he was sent to predict: he longed to be more deeply and evidently impressed and in earnest; and by the excess of his sorrow to show the people his assured belief of what he spake, and his tender love for them, and to affect them by his example. (Marg. Ref. a-c.) He therefore pathetically exclaimed, 'Oh, that one would grant me, (marg.) that my head were a well of waters, and mine eyes as fountains, whence tears might flow without intermission, for the calamities which I foresee can never be sufficiently lamented.' "The same word in the Hebrew signifies both the eye and a fountain: as if, in this land of sorrows, our eyes were designed rather for weeping, than seeing." Henry.—At the same time the prophet spake with equal energy of his abhorrence of their crimes. "Dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing," he "vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds," by which God was dishonoured, and vengeance was brought down upon them. He would therefore have preferred some mean hut in the wilderness, erected by travellers for a temporary accommodation, or the life of a hermit, to his present situation; had not his duty made it necessary for him to continue among them.—'The prophet sheweth the great compassion that he had toward his people: . . . which is a special note to discern the true pastors from the hirelings.' (Notes, 8:21, 22, 13:15-17, v. 17. Luke 19:41-44. Rom. 9:1-3.) The word adulterers may mark, either the licentiousness, or the idolatry, of the people; or both combined, which was generally the case.

A lodging place of wayfaring men. (2) 'If the weary traveller . . . passes through the desert, it is well for him, if he can light on a cave, or a hut, which some one before him may have erected for a temporary shelter. And this last I conceive to be here meant.' Blayney.

V. 3-6. The people cultivated the art of lying; men prepare bows and arrows for war. (Note, Ps. 52:3-5.) They habituated their tongues to lies, that they might utter them, without hesitation and with confidence: they devised ingenious methods of deception, and strove to get over the restraints of shame and conscience. They were ambitious for lies: but they are not valiant for the truth upon the earth; for they proceed from evil to evil, and they know not me, saith the Lord.

4 Take ye heed every one of his neighbour, and trust ye not in any brother: for every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbour will walk with slanders.

5 And they will deceive every one his neighbour, and will not speak the truth: they have taught their tongue to speak lies, and swear themselves to commit iniquity.

6 Thy habitation is in the midst of deceit; through deceit they refuse to know me, saith the Lord.

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will melt them, and try them; for how shall I do for the daughter of my people?

8 Their tongue is as an arrow shot out: it speaketh deceit: one speaketh peaceably to his neighbour with his mouth, but in heart he layeth this wait.

9 Shall I not visit them for these things? saith the Lord: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

10 For the mountains will I take up a weeping and wailing, and for the habitations of the wilderness a lamentation, because they are burned up, so that none can pass through them; neither can men hear the voice of the cattle: both the fowl of the heavens and the beasts are fled, they are gone.

of being adepts in the whole system of dissimulation, and were continually employed in slander, flattery, cheating, and overreaching. They were very bold in this work, and sought to obtain authority by these base practices; instead of being valiant for the truths of God, or in maintaining truth and justice in judicial proceedings. They were indefatigable in committing iniquity, and mutual deceit and fraud were so universal, that the nearest relations and neighbours could not safely trust one another,—Whilst the prophet thus complained of his people, the Lord himself spoke, and allowed that his servant's dwelling was in the midst of deceit and lies, and that he was on that account despised and hated: but he might be patient in his situation, when he considered, that, through the same deceit, the people were resolved not to know God, and despised him even more than his prophet. They trusted to lies for safety; they hated the holy perfections, truths, and precepts of God, because contrary to their own character and conduct: they "loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil;" they preferred any worthless idol and superstition to God and his worship; and their religion was wholly hypocrisy. V. 7. In this corrupt state of the whole nation, the only one on earth in which the name of God was known and worshipped, what did it behove him to do? It would have been very dishonourable to him to connive at their wickedness: yet he would not be without a church on earth, and his engagements, to Abraham and David, forbid him utterly to cast off the nation, before the coming of the Messiah. He was therefore determined to cast them into the furnace, to melt, prove, and refine the mass; which would be attended with the destruction of immense multitudes, consumed as floss. But it would refine a small number, from whom he would raise up a purer church for the honour of his name.—What can I do else for my people; but by all means try to save them from the common destruction? Louth. (Notes, 6:27-30. Is. 1:25-27. Zech. 13:8, 9. Mal. 3:1-4.)

11 And I will make Jerusalem heaps, and a den of dragons; and I will make the cities of Judah desolate without an inhabitant.

12 Who is the wise man, that may understand this? and who is he to whom the mouth of the Lord hath spoken, that he may declare it, for what the land perisheth, and is burned up like a wilderness, that none passeth through?

13 And the Lord saith, Because they have forsaken my law which I set before them, and have not obeyed my voice, neither walked therein;

'Consider the evil circumstances you are in, which call for mourning and lamentation; and since you yourselves are not sufficiently affected with the dangers that threaten you; send for those women, whose profession it is to make public lamentations at funerals and upon other sorrowful occasions, and let their mournful ditties excite ... true sorrow in you.' V. 19. (Note, 4:30, 31.) 'Our land hath spued us out, according to the expression of Moses, (Lev. 18:28.) and would no longer bear with our abominations.' Louth. (Note, Lev. 18:24-30.) Or, "They have cast down our habitations."

V. 20, 21. (Marg. Ref.) Throughout this chapter, the prophet speaks of the predicted judgments as actually arrived, and he addresses different descriptions of people, as if present at the calamitous scene, that he might affect their minds with the foresight of those terrible judgments, which so much affected his own. Thus death is here spoken of as a person, that entered by the windows to destroy those, who were shut up in the houses and palaces; as well as cutting off the children found playing in the streets, and the young men from their places of resort. (Notes, 6:10-12. Zech. 8:4, 5.)

V. 22. The bodies of the slain would lie as thick on the ground, as the heaps of dung do on the field, which the husbandman is manuring; or even as the handfuls of corn do after the reapers: the latter, however, are soon either as visiting and conversation; but with still more atrocious iniquity. In short, men are every where seeking to accomplish their selfish designs by concealing them; and to prey on one another by fair professions, and with smiling countenances: and, as nothing is so prolific as lies, they "proceed from evil to evil;" wander more and more from God and truth; and employ all their ingenuity, industry, and even intrepidity, in venturing upon daring schemes of deception. So that there is need for every one to "take heed of his neighbour," and to be cautious how he trusts even the nearest relation; lest he should be supplanted and circumvented. But whilst men thus lie in wait for their neighbours, Satan takes their souls in his snare, and "God sends them strong delusions;" the state of their hearts indisposes them for true religion: if they pretend to any, they are mere hypocrites; "not liking to retain God in their knowledge," they are left to some foolish scheme of superstition, enthusiasm, or skepticism; and so become perhaps the instruments of the devil, in propagating and strenuously contending for lies, instead of being "valiant for the truth upon the earth." But, however corrupt any part of the visible church may become, or however God may visit and avenge himself on guilty nations, who are called by his name, he will always have a people upon earth. And he will either utterly cast off professing churches, which become thus corrupt; or he will melt and try them; and, putting away numbers as dross, he will bring forth a few as "vessels of honour," fitted for his use.

V. 10-26. When the judgments of God are abroad in the earth, those who are indeed wise, and understand such matters, and have heard and believed his word, will perceive for what reason he causes these calamities. And surely it bechooves the Jews, who have been so long scattered among the nations, and consumed by a succession of calamities, to inquire, "wherefore the LORD hath thus fed them with wormwood, and given them water of gall to drink." Must it not be obvious, that it is because they have "forsaken his law, and not obeyed his voice: but followed their own imaginations" and stubbornness, and the traditions of their fathers, in contempt of the Messiah, "the Prince of peace, and the King of Israel?"—It avails little to multiply expressions of sorrow, or to excite each other to lamentation, when death enters our houses, or desolates our streets; except we obey the word of the Lord, and mourn with "that giddy sorrow, which worketh repentance unto salvation, not to be repented of." This, and this alone, can prepare the heart for true comfort, and convert the heaviest afflictions into the most precious mercies.—But, in this world of sin and sorrow, terminating speedily in death, and future judgment; how unreasonable is it for men to glory in learning, knowledge, sagacity, health, strength, authority, wealth, or any other appendage, which leaves them under the dominion of sin and the wrath of God! which cannot avert temporal or eternal misery! which may be torn from them in a moment, and of which an account must hereafter be given! which instead of rendering them happy, may probably increase their eternal condemnation! Happy is he, who knows God, by true faith in his word, and the experience of his mercy and grace in Jesus Christ; who beholds his glory, and is changed into his image; who is a follower of him in his "loving kindness, judgment, and righteousness;" and who delights in those things in which God delights! This is the true "circumcision of the heart, the praise of which is not of men but of God." Such men are the true Israel, "who worship God in the Spirit, glory in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh." Let us then prize this distinction, which is divine and eternal. Let us seek for it diligently, and then rejoice and glory in it above all other things: let us so value ourselves upon it, as to be above grovelling pursuits, and deem ourselves set apart for the glory of God our Saviour; and to him let us devote all our possessions and endowments, that he may be honoured in our use of them.—But the time is coming, when the uncircumcised in heart, and those who know no other than baptismal regenerat n, will, no withstanding their external forms and notions, along with the heathens and infidels, be "punished with an everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord."

NOTES.—CHAP. X. V. 1, 2. This is addressed, in general, to the house of Israel. The nation, when in their own land, had always been disposed to learn the idolatries and superstitions of their neighbours: the ten tribes were already dispersed in heathen countries, and the Jews were about to be carried captive to Babylon, the very centre and metropolis of idolatry. The Gentiles in general, and the Chaldeans above all others, were addicted to astrology and omens; they were dismayed by comets, eclipses, and other unusual appearances of the heavenly bodies; and their determinations in the most important matters were often formed from these "signs of the heavens," rather than from sound policy. This was the effect of ignorance concerning God, of idolatrous regard to his creatures, and of vain endeavours to pry into futurity; and therefore JEHOVAH's worshippers must not imitate their customs. Whatever might seem to be portended by the signs of the heavens, they would be safe while trusting in God and walking in the path of duty; and nothing could truly presage prosperity to them, in the way of disobedience. (Marg. Ref. b, c. Notes, Is. 47:12-15. Dan. 2:2.)

V. 3-5. The prophet exposes the folly and stupidity of idolaters, in the same manner as Isaiah had before done. (Notes, Is. 41:5-7,21-24. 44:9-20. 46:1-9.)—Upright, &c. (5) "They are made with due proportion like a pillar." The word Tamar is rendered pillar, ... Cant. 3:6. Joel 2:30. Lowth.

V. 6-8. The prophet here contrasts the glory of Israel's God with the impotency of senseless idols, in an act of solemn worship addressed to him; that by interweaving adorations with his instructions, the people might be led to concur in this holy service. None of the imaginary deities which some professed to worship under the form of their images, could be equalled to JEHOVAH: they were either inanimate creatures, or the departed spirits of eminent men, or ideal characters, or devils. (Notes, Deut. 32:17. 1 Cor. 8:4-6. 10:18-22.) Nor could any of the wise legislators, philosophers, or rulers of the nations vie with the Lord, "the King of nations." The word is the same before rendered "heathen." (2. Marg. Ref.) Who then would refuse to fear and worship him; whose infinite perfection, and absolute, universal, and everlasting sovereignty over all creatures, which are the works of his hands and wholly dependent on him; and whose power to save and to destroy, entitle him to this honour, and make it reasonable and advantageous to all rational creatures? Idolaters therefore must be altogether brutish and foolish; and the worship of a senseless block of wood, (however carved, or ornamented, or whatever it was supposed to represent,) must lead to the most unworthy apprehensions of God, to the most gross and pernicious mistakes, and to all vain and abominable practices. (10. Notes, 5:20-25. Ps. 115:3-8. Hab. 2:18-20. Rev. 15:1-4, v. 4.)

The stock, &c. (8) "The very word itself being a rebuker of vanities." ... מטט properly signifies rectifying, or correcting a false notion by just reproof: and by vanities are meant idols. ... This unprofitableness of the idol, the very dull and senseless matter, says the prophet, out of which it is formed, is capable of demonstrating. Blayney.

V. 9, 10. Some think that Uphaz is the same as Ophir: but this is quite uncertain. (Dan. 10:5.)—The contrast is very expressive and instructive between the most expensive and most richly ornamented dead images, and "the living and true God, the everlasting King, or King of eternity;" (marg.) "at whose wrath the earth doth tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation." They (the idols,) are "indebted to the art and labour of man, for all their costly ornaments, their splendid outward show. ... Upon what ground then could the thing formed pretend to a nature more excellent than its former!" Blayney.—Where, but in the Scriptures, do we meet with such sublime and rational thoughts concerning the great Creator and Lord of all? The very circumstance that the Bible (and the Bible alone) has established the doctrine of one God of infinite perfection, to the exclusion of all others, who have been or are called God, or have been or are worshipped; is a very convincing argument to a considerate mind, that it is the word of that One living and true God himself. (Marg. Ref. Note, 11.)

V. 11. This verse, in the original, is in the Chaldee, and not in the Hebrew language; and it seems to have been thus previously inserted, that the captive Jews might have an answer ready for the idolaters, in their own language, when they tempted them to join in their worship. The idols were no gods; they had not created the world, and they would shortly be destroyed from the earth. This is an express prediction of the total extirpation of idolatry, which has already received a most wonderful accomplishment; and will be perfectly fulfilled, when that ambitious spirit, whom all idolaters worship, shall be confined in the bottomless pit. (Note, Rev. 20:1-3.)—Lest they should think they had acquitted themselves well, if they abstained from what they should see the heathen do; he tells them, they must do yet more than this; they must make open profession against their gods; they must proclaim against their idolatry: . . . and therefore in the middle of his exhortation, he interlatheth these words in the Chaldee tongue. . . . Can every friar in a pulpit . . . warrant his words from being mistaken or perverted to heresy? And are the words . . . of God so obnoxious that they may not be read? Nay, if God himself may not speak in a vulgar tongue, I see far less reason why a friar should. . . . Ye have heard the state of the times, wherein this prophecy is commanded; now let us consider of the event. . . . We have heard . . . of the admired oracles of the Gentiles, of Apollo at Delphos, of Jupiter Ammon in Egypt: . . . but all of them are long since perished “from the earth, and from under these heavens.” We have heard of the names of many gods in former times of great renown in these islands of the Gentiles; Jupiter, Mars, Apollo, &c. . . . yet now are they perished. Where is now Bel the god of Babylon, Nisroch the god of Assyria, Baal and Asteroth the gods of the Zidonians, . . . Milcom of the Ammonites, Chemosh of Moab, and Tammuz of the Egyptians? Even these also are perished, with their very names. Mede’s Sermon on this Text. (Notes, Zeph. 2:11. Zech. 8:20-23. 13:2, 3.)—The fulfilment proves the words genuine and divine; though Blayney unreasonably supposes this important verse to be an interpolation.

V. 12, 13. (Note, 51:15-19.) Here again, the almighty and all-wise Creator and Upholder of the universe is contrasted with the senseless idols, in a manner exquisitely suited to shame the idolaters. The great Disposer of all events, “giveth rain from heaven and fruitful seasons;” and often accompanies the rain with tremendous thunder and lightning; and with hurricanes, which, while they produce terrible effects at the time, greatly tend to purify the atmosphere, and to render the air salubrious. Thus he orders the whole in

V. 16. (Notes, Ps. 89:6-12. Is. 40:18-26.) JEHOVAH himself was Jacob’s Portion; and he was not at all like the worthless idols, which were the portion of the heathen; for he is the Former, or Creator, of all things, and existed before all things, and from eternity. His infinite sufficiency is the riches of his chosen people; his wisdom chooses, and his power effects, their felicity; his truth engages to them, and his bounty bestows upon them, whatever can conduce to their good; and he is their great Protector; “the LORD of hosts,” or armies, “is his name.”—The nation of Israel typified this people of God; and as far as they lived up to their privileges, they possessed this happiness, and needed not to seek help from idols. In his disposal of the nations JEHOVAH had taken them as his inheritance: his worship was established among them, his revenue of honour, from fallen man, was chiefly collected from them, and his peculiar delight was in them; while other nations were left to the worship and service of Satan. (Notes, Ex. 19:5, 6. Deut. 32:9. Mal. 3:13-18. 1 Pet. 2:9, 10.)

The rod of his inheritance.] “He had made choice of Israel for the special object of his concern; and had marked him out for his own possession, as with a measuring rod.” Blayney.

V. 17, 18. Here the siege and destruction of Jerusalem are again predicted. Her inhabitants are called on to collect their treasures from the country, within the walls of the capital: yet this would not secure either themselves or their property; or rather to collect their moveables, as those who were about to change their abode: for they would at once and altogether be violently driven out of the land: (Nah. 1 Sam. 25:23-31, v. 29. Ez. 12:1-16.) and the Lord would make them feel the bitter effects of their sins, and the truth of his despised predictions, in their deep distress.

V. 19-22. The prophet here sympathizes with his country, and bewails its calamities; personating Judah or Jerusalem.—The wound which had been inflicted was indeed very grievous, and greatly to be deplored: but it was unavoidable, and must be patiently endured, being the righteous appointment of God. “Thus he sheweth the people how to behave themselves.”—The city and temple were plundered and destroyed, like the removal of a tent: the children of his people were slain, or carried captive; so that none remained to rebuild their ruins. For the pastors (both rulers and teachers) were become brutish in their conduct, neglecting every duty to God and man; (Note, Ps. 92:6, 7.) and thus they had occasioned the flock to be scattered, and the cities of Judah to be turned into a desert, where dragons or serpents abide.—The clause, "they shall not prosper," is rendered in the old translation, "they have none understanding;" as they would not seek the Lord, they were judicially infatuated. (Notes, 4:5-7, 5:30, 31, 23:9-12. Is. 56:9-12. Ez. 22:25-28, 34:2-6.)—"The noise of the bruit," (22) (an obsolete word signifying a report,) means an alarming rumour, circulated in a loud and earnest manner, that the Chaldeans had entered the northern part of the land, and were marching directly to Judea. (Marg. Ref. h.)

V. 23-25. By thus addressing God, the prophet taught the people in what light to view their calamities, and how to pray respecting them.—He speaketh this, because that Nebuchadnezzar purposed to have made war against the Moabites and Ammonites; but hearing of Zedekiah's rebellion, he turned his power against Jerusalem. (Note, Ez. 21:19-22.)—In this enterprise he had been guided and prospered by God himself, who employed him to punish his rebellious people; "howbeit he meant not so."—The hand of the Lord must therefore be acknowledged, and his justice submitted to, in these afflictive dispensations.—In like manner, he counsels and devices of the people would not accomplish their own purposes, but the decrees of God; nor would they ever be led back into the right way, by their own natural willingness, wisdom, or strength: and therefore the case must be referred to the Lord, with prayer that he would guide and set them right. (Notes, Ps. 37:23, 24. Prov. 19:21, 20:24.)—The prophet next deprecates from his people that anger of God, which would utterly destroy them; (Marg. and Marg. Ref. l, m,) and prays that their corrections might be so moderated, by his fatherly wisdom and love, that they might work together for good: (Notes, 30:10, 11, 46:27, 28. Hab. 3:2.) and that his vindictive fury might be averted from Israel, and poured out upon the idolatrous nations, especially such as had devoured and desolated Jacob his people. (Gen. 10:32. Notes, 1:15. Ps. 79:6, 7.)—The last clause is literally, "They have eaten Jacob, yea, they have eaten him and consumed him, &c."—Bring me to nothing. (24) "Diminish me." Marg. "Crush me to atoms." Blayney.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-16. Man's apostasy from God has made way for his being deluded and enslaved by Satan to such a degree, as to be capable of the greatest absurdities under the notion of religion! and these soon become the customs of whole nations, who join together in worshipping a lifeless block, which cannot possibly do them either good or harm! Nothing, but revelation, has prevented this degrading folly and impiety from becoming universal; this appears, not only from the very general prevalence of idolatry: but from the strange propensity, which the worshippers of God have ever shown to learn the ways of the heathen, and to turn aside to pagan idolatries and superstitions. Even in those Christian countries, where images and other vain pageantries no longer disgrace the worship; the regard paid by multitudes to the signs of the heavens, to charms, to astrological predictions in almanacs, and elsewhere; to lucky days, lucky numbers, good or bad omens, and things of a like nature; and all that fear of some unknown invisible power, which, in one way or other, is supposed to act independently of God, strangely prevails; and is evidently copied from the vain customs of the heathen, but is far more criminal in professed Christians than in them. But those who do not fear God, are always liable to be dismayed without cause: while such as reverence his majesty, dread his anger, seek his favour, worship his name, and walk in his ways, need not fear either the powers on earth, or the powers of hell. For there is "none like unto JEHOVAH, who is great in might, the King of nations," and "the Lord of all." To him all worship and honour appertain; and all, who are not foolish and brutish, will fear and serve him: for he is the true, living, and eternal God; and his wrath not only makes the earth to tremble, and over-whelps the nations, but "he is able to destroy body and soul in hell." Let sinners then forsake the company of his enemies, and join that of his reconciled people. He has a right to our devoted service as our great Creator; by his wisdom contrived the glorious fabric of the universe, his power completed the grand design; in his knowledge and discretion he has established it hitherto. His command continues the course of the seasons, and the variations of the weather; the tremendous voice of his thunder, and the lightnings which attend his fertilizing rain, and the tempestuous winds which he "bringeth out of his treasures," show him to be the Author of all our mercies, and warn us not to abuse them, nor to forget the Giver. But though we all have, for our rebellion and ingratitude, deserved his indignation; yet he is ready to forgive and save all, who repent and "believe in the name of his Son Jesus Christ;" and thus sinners become a part of his valued inheritance, and he becomes their unchangeable Friend and all-sufficient Portion. These blessed truths faith learns from the word of God; but all other sources of instruction lead to doctrines of vanity; and all idols and impotent idolaters, of every kind, will perish in the time of God's visitation.

V. 17-25. We are continually warned to beware of resting in mere profession, and external forms and advantages. No place is so sacred, or so fortified, as to secure the workers of iniquity; and those who do not believe that God will execute his awful threatenings, will "find it so," when their wound will be far more grievous than they can now conceive. A gracious resignation indeed will support the believer under every grief, which the Lord may allot him; but what can render the load of divine and eternal vengeance tolerable to those, who fall under it in sullen despair? Alas! that the pastors of God's church should very often become so brutish, as to be given up to the pursuit of worldly interests and pleasures, to the neglect of him and his service! Such men cannot prosper, and their misconduct not only scatters their flocks, but brings down divine judgments on guilty nations.—But "the way of man is not in himself;" if the Lord has directed our steps into the ways of peace and righteousness; let us continually entreat him to enable us still to walk in them, and to "hold up our goings that we slip not;" and let us lift up our prayer for others, that they may be guided and directed in the same path.—If even severe corrections lead sinners to a conviction of these salutary truths, they will have abundant cause for gratitude: they will then humble themselves before God, and seek his guidance and assistance; they will submit to his correcting rod, and only deprecate the destroying sword of his avenging justice; and they will no longer remain under the condemnation of those nations, families, or individuals, "who call not upon the name of the Lord." But whilst he visits the offences of his people with sharp corrections, and destroys hypocrites; his hot displeasure will be poured out on those who have not known and worshipped him, and especially on the persecutors of his chosen people.

NOTES.—CHAP. XI. V. 2-8. The directions to the prophet are here given in the plural number, "Hear ye, &c." to Jeremiah as one of many, who had been charged with the same message: and they refer to the national covenant made with Israel at mount Sinai; and renewed just before the people took possession of the promised land. (Notes, Ez. 19:5-9, 24:1-11. Deut. 5:22-29, 27:8-26, 28:1-15, 29.) This was the charter of all Israel's privileges, as long as they were obedient, according to the terms of it. But idolatry and apostasy from God, when general; and when committed or connived at by public authority, forfeited the covenant. The prophet was therefore sent to remind the people of the curses denounced in the law against the rebellious; and to show, that the continuance of the benefits covenanted to them, when they were delivered from Egyptian bondage, depended on their obedience. (Note, 7:21-23.) Whilst the Lord these words in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, saying, 'Hear ye the words of this covenant, and do them.

7 For ^a I earnestly protested unto your fathers in the day that I brought them up out of the land of Egypt, even unto this day, rising early and protesting, saying, Obey my voice.

8 Yet they ^b obeyed not, nor inclined their ear, but walked every one in the "imagination of their evil heart: "therefore I will bring upon them all the words of this covenant which I commanded them to do; but they did them not.

9 And the Lord said unto me, ^a A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah, and among the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

10 They are turned back to ^a the iniquities of their forefathers, which refused to hear my words; and they went after other gods to serve them: the house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken my covenant which I made with their fathers.

11 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, ^a I will bring evil upon them which they shall not be able to ^b 'escape; and though ^c they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them.

12 Then shall the cities of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem ^a go, and cry unto the gods unto whom they offer incense: but they shall

13 For ^a according to the number of thy cities were thy gods, O Judah; and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up altars to ^a that ^b 'shameful thing, even altars to burn incense unto Baal.

14 Therefore ^a pray not thou for this people, neither lift up a cry or prayer for them: ^b for I will not hear them in the time that they cry unto me for their trouble.

15 ^a What hath ^b my beloved ^c to do in my house, ^d seeing she hath wrought lewdness with many; and ^e the holy flesh is passed from thee? ^f when thou ^g doest evil, then thou rejoicest.

16 The Lord called thy name, ^a A green olive-tree, fair, and of goodly fruit: with the noise of a great tumult he hath kindled fire upon it, and the branches of it are broken.

17 For the Lord of hosts, ^a that planted thee, hath pronounced evil against thee, for the evil of the house of Israel and of the house of Judah, which they have done against themselves to provoke me to anger in offering incense unto Baal.

[Practical Observations.]

(Note, Hag. 2:10-14.) for God abhorred their oblations, seeing they rejoiced in iniquity.

When thou doest evil, &c.] Or, "When thou art wicked, shalt thou rejoice?" The LXX and vulgar Latin give a more easy sense of this verse; "Why hath my beloved committed lewdness in my house? Can vows, or the holy flesh take away thine iniquities from thee?" Louth. They probably read וַיִּשְׁמְרֵם instead of וַיִּשְׁמְרֵם.

V. 16. (Notes, Rom. 11:16-24.) The Lord had planted Israel in Canaan, as a good olive-tree in a rich soil; he had made the nation very prosperous, and afforded them every advantage for fruitfulness. (Notes, 2:20, 21. 15. 5:1-7.) Once they were fruitful; and he called the nation "a green olive-tree, fair, and of goodly fruit." But they were now so degenerated, that he was determined to consume them, as with fire, by means of the tumultuous and furious Chaldean invaders. (Notes, Ez. 15: Matt. 3:7-10.)

V. 17. (Marg. Ref.) Against themselves.] The evils which both Israel and Judah had done, in sinning against God, proved eventually to be committed "against themselves," as the self-murderer destroys himself, soul and body, by breaking God's commandment. (Notes, 7:19. Prov. 8:36.)

V. 18-23. Whilst the prophet was earnestly seeking the good of his people, a conspiracy was formed against his life. His brethren the priests, and the other inhabitants of his own city Anathoth, were the ringleaders in this combination. They could not endure his faithful warnings and reproofs: they hated "the man and his communications;" and were determined either to silence or to slay him; to "destroy the tree and its fruit," ("the tree in its nutriment," Blayney), that he and his predictions might be forgotten together. But, before they had brought their matters to bear; the Lord discovered their devices to his prophet, and probably directed him how to frustrate them. Upon this he spake, as one in amazement: he had done nothing to merit this treatment from them; and had never suspected them, any more than the lamb, or ox, suspects danger when led to the slaughter. (Note, Prov. 7:6-23, v. 22.) He then appeals for his innocence to God, who knows what passes in the inmost recesses of the heart; and refers his cause to him; and then, in the name of the Lord, denounces vengeance on his persecutors, root and branch; so that no remnant should be left of them in the approaching season of visitation. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 12:5, 6. 15:10-21. 18:18-23. 20:10-18.) "The words rendered, "Let me see thy vengeance on them," are literally, "I shall see thy vengeance on them." (Notes, Ps. 54:7. 59:10. 92:11.) "I foresee it and predict it: so that they will ruin themselves in seeking my ruin."—This is one out of many instances, in which, I apprehend, an undue regard to the Septuagint has induced our venerable translators needlessly to introduce the sacred writers, as uttering imprecations, rather than predictions, against their persecutors. It cannot be denied that these predictions sometimes must be ended
